The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BORCHERS. I do not know what the motion is. I have been listening, but I could not hear a word that the gentleman said.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. BORCHERS. What is the motion? I could not understand it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say to the gentleman that the House was in good order during the four times that the motion was stated. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 20. Those in favor will, when their names are called, say "aye," those opposed "no"; and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. An affirmative vote on this is against purchasing automobiles, and a negative vote is in favor of purchasing automobiles, is it not?

Mr. FOSTER. I ask for the regular order. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. GARNER. Let us have order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The roll call will not be proceeded with until the House is in order. The Sergeant at Arms will please ask the gentlemen in the aisles to take their seats. We have just had the experience of an incorrectly recorded vote, which should not occur again, and the Chair will undertake to prevent its occurrence on this roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 131, nays 125, answered "present" 2, not voting 175, as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Mr. SISSON (in the affirmative) with Mr. KAHN (in the negative).

Until further notice:

Mr. CLINE with Mr. KREIDER.

Mr. MOON with Mr. NORTON.

Mr. WEAVER with Mr. MERRITT.

Mr. CARR with Mr. BARCHFELD.

Mr. FINLEY with Mr. BARTHOLDT.

Mr. HILL with Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama with Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia.

Mr. BELL of Georgia with Mr. HAYES.

Mr. KONOP with Mr. GRIEST.

Mr. BORLAND with Mr. MOSS of West Virginia.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD with Mr. PLUMLEY.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska with Mr. WOODS.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "yea."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; and I did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the name of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. FREAR, and he answered "Yea."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know whether the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. SISSON, is recorded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. KAHN. I desire to withdraw my vote of "nay" and answer "present."

The name of Mr. KAHN was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "yea."

The name of Mr. HARRIS was called, and he answered "Yea."

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "nay."

The name of Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland was called, and he answered "Nay."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Upon this vote the yeas are 127 and the nays are 127, present 3. The motion is rejected.

Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think I am entitled to recognition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and concur in the same.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to offer a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] rise?

Mr. FOWLER. To offer a privileged motion. I ask for a recapitulation of the vote.

Mr. MANN. But it is too late after the vote is announced.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think it is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman had asked for a recapitulation before other business had intervened, he would have been in time, but a motion has been made in the meantime.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not understand that any business has been transacted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Other business has been transacted to the extent that the motion has been made.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet trying to get recognition for the purpose of asking for a recapitulation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state in response to that that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] is standing immediately behind the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER]. The gentleman from South Carolina was standing there, and upon his failing to address the Chair, the Chair stated that "the gentleman from South Carolina was recognized," and during all of that time the Chair was looking directly over the face and head of the gentleman from Illinois and failed to see him rise, and not only did not hear the gentleman from Illinois but did not see him rise to address the Chair.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, if a Member is endeavoring to get recognition to offer a preferential motion and there is a failure to secure such recognition, does the House lose the right of that preferential motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman has a preferential motion, it may be made.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I challenge the correctness of the result of the vote.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. That comes too late after the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, the correct vote of this House is the highest privilege that ought to be recognized. I made a tally of this vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is compelled to accept the vote as recorded by the tally clerk and not as recorded or as taken down by any Member of the House.

Mr. FOWLER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I challenge the correctness of the vote and ask for a recapitulation.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. In a case where a recapitulation is asked for, even if late, immediately following a known and confessed error in a previous roll, does not the Speaker think that for the sake of order and good conduct of the proceedings of the House the recapitulation should be permitted? I know nothing about the vote, whether it is in error or not, but a previous vote was in error on this same proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is now an established fact that there was an error in the previous vote. An endeavor to ascertain that fact was made in due time. It is now undertaken to ascertain whether a similar error has been made in this vote. While the Chair is inclined to the opinion that the motion does not come in time, under a literal construction of the rules, the Chair, nevertheless, is in some doubt, at least, and is disposed to give the benefit of the doubt to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER]. A recapitulation can do no harm and may do some good. [Applause.]

The Chair directs the Clerk to recapitulate the vote.

The Clerk recapitulated the vote.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no," but I did not hear my name called on the recapitulation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recorded in the negative.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I want to know whether my name was recorded twice? As I heard the recapitulation, my name is recorded as voting both yea and nay.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that the gentleman is recorded in the affirmative only.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I note in the recapitulation that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] is recorded as voting in the negative. I do not believe the gentleman from Maryland voted.

Mr. MANN. I heard him vote.

Mr. GARNER. I understand the gentleman; but the Speaker did not ask the gentleman if he was in the Hall listening when his name was called.

Mr. MANN. And neither did the Chair ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HARRIS], and one of these gentlemen voted one way and one the other.

Mr. GARNER. I think the Speaker should have done that.

Mr. MANN. It is too late to raise that question now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas that in a number of instances he did not and could not hear what the different Members said when they rose to inquire about their respective votes, because they did not speak sufficiently loud, and the Chair found himself in confusion and found the gentlemen he was interrogating also in confusion because they themselves made their statements so low that the Chair did not hear; and the Chair on several occasions has found himself asking Members whether they were present and listening when their names were called, when they had already said in a tone of voice not audible to the Chair that they had already voted.

Now, if the Chair failed to ask any gentleman how he voted, it occurred in that way.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Chair enforce the rule as to Members around the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Members will realize the position in which the House finds itself when the correctness of the vote is challenged. There ought to be a disposition on the part of the House to maintain order while the recapitulation is going on and the result is being determined.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The vote having been recapitulated and no change having occurred——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the clerks must have time to tally the vote.

Mr. MANN. The vote having been recapitulated and no change having been made in the vote as recapitulated, the recapitulation having been finished some time ago, what are we waiting for?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For the Clerk to determine whether any error has been made.

Mr. MANN. We are waiting to see whether the clerks may correct an error in the previous count.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HULL. I rise to inquire how I am recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The vote has been taken and recapitulated.

Mr. HULL. I know; but I voted in the affirmative and was called out of the House while the recapitulation was going on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee is recorded as having voted in the negative.

Mr. HULL. I voted in the affirmative.

Mr. GARNER. Then the gentleman is entitled to have his vote corrected.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee say that when he voted he voted in the affirmative?

Mr. HULL. Unquestionably.

Mr. MANN. As a matter of fact, I understand the gentleman answered the other way, but if he thought he was voting "aye" I have no objection to its being so recorded. I am willing to take the gentleman's word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before announcing the result the Chair wishes to inquire how the gentleman from Tennessee is recorded. The Chair understands he is recorded in the negative. The result, with the gentleman recorded in the negative, is as follows——

Mr. GARNER. But, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee says he voted "aye," and he is entitled to have it recorded "aye."

Mr. FARR. I heard the gentleman from Tennessee vote, and he answered "no."

Mr. GARNER. But the gentleman from Tennessee says that he voted "aye," and he ought to know.

Mr. FARR. He may have thought he was voting "aye," but I will take my oath I heard him answer "no."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Undoubtedly the gentleman from Tennessee is entitled to be recorded as he voted.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, as I stated, I voted in the affirmative.

Mr. MANN. We are perfectly willing to accept the gentleman's word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair directs the Clerk to change the vote of the gentleman from Tennessee, as it is recorded, to "aye." With that change the vote stands as follows: Yeas 131, noes 125, present 2.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER. The vote was first announced as 127 to 127. But one vote has been announced as incorrect on the floor, and that was the vote of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL]. Now, the vote with that one change is announced as 130 to 126. My inquiry is, how was the first mistake made?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no more information on that point than has the gentleman from Wisconsin. The Chair presumes the Clerk added up the figures incorrectly the first time, and correctly the second time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be fair to the clerks at the desk to say that, according to my observation, extending over quite a period, it is a very common thing for the announcement at the end of a roll call made by the Speaker to be changed in the RECORD the next morning. It is a usual thing where the vote is very close to have a recapitulation, because such errors commonly occur. The clerk who acts as tally clerk and takes down the answers of the Members as they are made occupies a difficult position, and unavoidably and necessarily he is not able, in the hurry and confusion, to keep an absolutely accurate account so that he can tell at the end of a roll call precisely the number each way. While I have never known the result to be changed by correction, if gentlemen will listen to the announcements by the Speaker day by day of the roll calls and look at the RECORD the next morning they will find there is often a correction, and this is without any reflection on the capacity of the clerks at the desk. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the next amendment be reported, Senate amendment No. 28.

Page 17, line 16, insert "stenographer, $1,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 28.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I ask that the next amendment, Senate amendment numbered 29, be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 18, strike out the figures "$6,600" and insert the figures "$7,600."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment 29.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I now ask that the Clerk report Senate amendment numbered 30.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, strike out lines 5 to 12, inclusive, reading as follows:
"For actual traveling expenses incurred by Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners, including actual traveling expenses of immediate and dependent members of their families, incurred in going to and returning once from each session of Congress by the nearest route usually traveled, the same to be paid on certificates duly approved and in the manner heretofore prescribed for the payment of mileage, $87,500."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 30.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is that all that the gentleman wants to say on this amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; we debated it thoroughly yesterday.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, yesterday we had a long discussion upon this proposition as it related to the Senate item on mileage, and the House voted to recede and concur with an amendment for 5-cent mileage.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is correct.

Mr. MURDOCK. That, however, was wholly on the question of mileage of Senators. This refers to House mileage alone.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We will do precisely with House mileage what we do with Senate mileage. As the question has already been fully debated and we had a yea-and-nay vote on it, I do not think it is necessary to debate it further.

Mr. MURDOCK. I would like to ask this and I would like to have the attention of the House: If we vote with the gentleman on the motion which he has just made, then is not the House voting for the original House amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Oh, no.

Mr. MURDOCK. It seems to me so.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The conferees will understand that they were instructed by a yea-and-nay vote on yesterday to amendment numbered 1.

Mr. MURDOCK. However, the record, Mr. Speaker, will show that the House merely is standing by the original amendment. There is no question about it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman kindly yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to ask the gentleman from South Carolina to give me five minutes on this question.

Mr. GARNER. Before that, may I ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman may.

Mr. GARNER. Why would it not be better? It will take but a moment to put in an amendment here similar to the one we placed on the Senate provision which provides that the mileage hereafter shall be 5 cents.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have one written here on my table, but it is misplaced, and I did not want to take up the time rewriting it. I will send it up to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. What is it the gentleman wants?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I withdraw the motion I made to further insist, and move to recede from the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment numbered 30, and agree with an amendment which I now send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mileage of Representatives and Delegates and expenses of Resident Commissioners, $43,750; and hereafter Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners shall be paid mileage at the rate of 5 cents per mile each way from their homes to Washington City and return by the ordinary and usual routes of travel once at each session of Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. And on that I move the previous question.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, on that I reserve a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California reserves a point of order on the amendment, and the gentleman from South Carolina moves to recede from Senate amendment numbered 30, and concur with an amendment. Now, the gentleman from South Carolina upon that moved the previous question.

Mr. MANN. Will not the gentleman yield to the gentleman from South Dakota five minutes?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; I am not going to have any debate.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from California made the point of order?

Mr. RAKER. I reserved the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California reserved the point of order. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. RAKER. The point of order is that it is a change of existing law, and, second, that it is not germane, and every other class of legal objection that could be made to such legislation. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. MANN. I ask the gentleman to yield——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I insist upon my motion for the previous question.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion. I move that the House recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House recede and concur.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. And upon that I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves the previous question on his own motion and on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, both.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. The noes make the most noise; the noes seem to have it——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 83.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MANN. No; I asked for recognition.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina demands the yeas and nays, and the gentleman from Kansas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-six Members are present, not a quorum, and the Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 165, nays 91, answered "present" 1, not voting 176, as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. DERSHEM with Mr. PAIGE of Massachusetts.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina with Mr. LANGHAM.

Mr. POU with Mr. AVIS.

Mr. STRINGER with Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota.

Mr. WEAVER with Mr. SLOAN.

Mr. BELL of Georgia with Mr. BARTHOLDT.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin with Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. DRISCOLL with Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, and the Doorkeeper will open the doors.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to recede from House disagreement to Senate amendment No. 30 and concur in the same.

Mr. MANN. I ask a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks a division of the question. The question is now on receding from House disagreement to Senate amendment No. 30.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 65.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the Speaker to state what is the motion before the House.

The SPEAKER. The whole situation is this: That the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] moved to recede from the House disagreement to Senate amendment No. 30 and concur in the same with an amendment, whereupon the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made a preferential motion to recede and concur.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In the Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER. In Senate amendment No. 30. Then the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] demanded a division of his motion. This vote will be taken on the part of the motion to recede from House disagreement to Senate amendment No. 30.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then the status of the matter is that those who desire to vote for the House proposition to pay actual mileage as it was originally passed in the House bill should vote "nay"?

The SPEAKER. Yes; that is right.

Mr. MANN. Let us see. If the House refuses to agree to the motion, and thereby refuses to recede from its disagreement, does not the House thereby insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment? If it refuses to recede, that is the end of it. We can not go any further. That is insistence on disagreement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is insistence on the House proposition, and the original House proposition was that actual mileage should be paid?

The SPEAKER. A negative vote on the proposition to recede is equivalent to further insisting.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. If we should vote down this motion we still will have opportunity to vote on the original motion made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON]?

Mr. MANN. The House will have refused to recede, and that is the end of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is the reason I asked.

The SPEAKER. That puts an end to the whole business. If they refuse to recede, that is equivalent to an insistence. It has been so held time out of mind.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That would be an insistence on the House proposition to pay the actual mileage?

The SPEAKER. Yes; whatever the House proposition is. It has been up here so often that the Chair is somewhat confused about it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the motion about to be voted on is carried, then we have the proposition to vote on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina and the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, the 5-cent or the 10-cent mileage, as the case may be?

The SPEAKER. If the House refuses to recede, it is equivalent to a disagreement. We will not have to vote on that then.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the motion to recede, which is now to be voted on, prevails, what comes next?

The SPEAKER. The other half of the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, which is to concur.

Mr. MANN. I advise the Speaker not to answer the question.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, and the vote is to be taken on the proposition that the House shall recede from its disagreement to amendment No. 30. If it refuses to recede, it is in disagreement. The Chair has stated the thing so often that he has almost forgotten the point.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order. I do not think a filibuster ought to be in order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the calling of the roll. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 60, nays 184, answered "present" 2, not voting 187, as follows:

So the motion of Mr. MANN to recede from the House disagreement to Senate amendment No. 30 was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. DUPRÉ (to recede) with Mr. TOWNSEND (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas with Mr. PROUTY.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska with Mr. WOODS.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland with Mr. PATTON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. LLOYD with Mr. MONDELL.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia with Mr. KREIDER.

Mr. CLINE with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. BOOHER with Mr. PAIGE of Massachusetts.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I am paired with the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. DUPRÉ. I wish to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. TOWNSEND, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The House declines to recede from its disagreement.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The refusal of the House to recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment would send that amendment to conference, would it?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I ask that the next amendment be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks on the subject of mileage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. FALCONER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of mileage. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, a most remarkable line of parliamentary procedure has been adopted by the House of Representatives in the consideration of this mileage question.

Mr. Speaker, when this bill was first reported to the House it carried the mileage provision for actual traveling expenses incurred by Representatives and traveling expenses of immediate and dependent members of their families going to and returning from each session of Congress.

When the mileage paragraph was under consideration in the Committee of the Whole, an amendment was offered, striking out the above actual expense for Member and family and inserting in lieu 20 cents per mile, or, in other words, restoring the old mileage. A viva voce vote was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. A division was asked for, and the amendment again carried by a good majority; tellers were asked for, and Members marched up the aisle to be counted. Again a good majority voted for the amendment, and it was carried.

On April 17, when this mileage paragraph was before the House, and a record vote could be obtained, a record vote was called for and the yeas and nays taken. This record vote, found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 6842, shows 95 votes for 20-cent mileage and 242 votes for actual traveling expenses for Members and families.

The bill went to the Senate carrying the provision of the original bill, as reported to the House—actual traveling expenses for Representatives and members of their families.

On page 6841 of the RECORD, in the second column, is found a unanimous request by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee that the Senate and House mileage items be considered in one vote. There was no objection; so by this parliamentary move the Senate was involved with the House in the House mileage. So ended the first chapter of this mileage proposition.

Mr. Speaker, the second chapter took place in the Senate, and the House bill was amended and the 20-cent mileage restored, and in due process of parliamentary procedure the bill went to conference.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, there was written in the RECORD the third chapter of this mileage matter, when the House by much debate and several record votes voted 5 cents per mile for Senators' mileage, postponing the consideration of House Members' mileage till to-day.

By a series of parliamentary gymnastics the House just now voted not to recede from the House disagreement to the Senate amendment on House mileage, and now, Mr. Speaker, we have a record vote of the same men, economists, if you please, last evening voting 5 cents per mile for Senators' mileage allowance and to-day voting actual traveling expenses for Representatives and their families.

Chapter 4, Mr. Speaker, finds the bill back in conference.

Mr. Speaker, was there ever a more complete demonstration of political trimming by parliamentary chicanery? What is the purpose and what is the effect on the public?

Mr. Speaker, "mileage" and "graft" have for some time been held up by the press of the country as synonymous terms. Is there a man here who believes the present mileage is graft? If so, why did he not object to the unanimous consent to consider Senate and House mileage in one vote by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee when the bill was before the House?

I am informed, Mr. Speaker, that it has been the rule for long years standing that each branch of this legislative body shows to the other the courtesy of letting each House carry out the details of its organization, numbering and naming its own employees and the amount of compensation paid to each. The Senate and House each heretofore has decided its own mileage. But, Mr. Speaker, we find these patriotic Congressmen—Congressmen who would protect (?) the taxpayer—saying yesterday: "Mr. Senator, you have been participating in a 'graft'; from now on you will get only 5 cents per mile for your traveling expenses," while to-day we find these same economizing (?) Congressmen voting to themselves actual traveling expenses for themselves and their families.

Mr. Speaker, on the record vote of April 17, page 6842, I am recorded voting for 20 cents per mile, as against traveling expenses for myself, my wife, and four young people. In that vote, sir, I did not vote to favor myself one dollar. It took fully 20 cents a mile to bring my family across the continent. At that I do not ask that this expense fall on the Government.

Mr. Speaker, there has been no proposition on which I have voted, or had a chance to vote, where 20-cent mileage or a less amount for House Members has been involved. Why do not the conferees eliminate this parliamentary tangle with the Senate and put the House on record on House mileage?

The Senate will not interfere if House Members vote 5 or 10 cents a mile for House Members. Out of courtesy established in years of practice the will of the House will be respected.

Mr. Speaker, the result of this whole matter, taking as it has many hours of debate, has been that some Members of this House have been advertised the country over as guardians of the public funds, while actually sparring behind parliamentary methods for 20-cent mileage.

This is not an unjust statement. If so, why did the majority, without exception, in Committee of the Whole vote for 20-cent mileage, when there was no chance to get the record of Members? Why did not some economic Member object to unanimous consent to consider Senate and House mileage together? Why will the RECORD to-day show such inconsistencies in the vote? There is only one answer. In my State, Mr. Speaker, legislative mileage is 10 cents. Individual witnesses and jurors in and before the court receive 10-cent mileage. If 20-cent mileage is graft, eliminate entangling alliances of a parliamentary character, step out in the open, and vote it down. Give each Member of the House an opportunity to record his vote on the House mileage for something definite and in the interest of real economy, instead of recording a vote for political purposes and home consumption. We will reduce the mileage.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of mileage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of mileage. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, in view of the fact that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] would not even allow five minutes for actual discussion, I shall object to all such requests.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, and serves notice that he will object to all such requests. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 33: Page 30, after line 18, insert: "Legislative reference: To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ competent persons to prepare such indexes, digests, and compilations of law as may be required for Congress and other official use pursuant to the act approved June 30, 1906, $25,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment numbered 33.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, as a preferential motion, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to this amendment and concur in the same.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the preferential motion.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. LENROOT. Five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry, indeed, that the conferees have not seen fit to agree to this amendment. It is an amendment that ought to be adopted. It is a provision of law that we ought to have had a long time ago.

Mr. Speaker, in every calling of life a man can not do very good work unless he has the tools with which to do it, and tools are provided for every calling in life except to the lawmakers in the Congress of the United States. It has been the theory and the policy that Members of Congress can legislate without the facilities that they ought to have for legislating. All that this amendment does is to create in the Library of Congress a body of experts whose duty it will be to compile and index the various laws of the United States, of the States, and of foreign countries for the use of Members of Congress.

As illustrative of the condition that exists, I am a member of the Committee on the Public Lands. We have been working all winter long. We have had hundreds of bills before that committee, and during this entire winter I have attempted a number of times to secure a compilation of the public-land laws, so that the committee in considering these bills might know, without spending hours and hours every time a question comes up, what the laws are upon the subject already enacted by Congress; but in each case we have been compelled to go through the Statutes at Large and to search the appropriation bills for legislation, where it is often hidden, and the consequence is a great deal of time has been wasted by that committee because there was no compilation of the land laws.

What is true of the Public Lands Committee is true of nearly every other committee of this House. The Committee on the Judiciary at this session, in the consideration of the antitrust bill, found it necessary to secure a compilation of all the antitrust laws of the various States of the Union and of foreign countries. They published that in a separate volume, and it was of immense benefit to every Member of Congress who was studying that question.

I might go on with almost every committee of this House dealing with important, live legislation. They need this expert service. There should be a corps of experts to compile this information for the use of Members of Congress.

It is a very small amount of money, comparatively speaking. We have this great Congressional Library here. We have magnificent reading rooms. How often do you see a Member of Congress over there doing any work? Not that we do not use the Library. We do. But we waste an immense amount of time, because there is no organized force there to assist Members of Congress in finding what they want; and when they do find it, it is so scattered that it takes a great deal more time than it ought to take for a Member of Congress to be informed on the particular question involved.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is not this whole question covered, even more thoroughly than in this amendment, by a bill prepared by the House Library Committee and introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]?

Mr. LENROOT. I think not. This has nothing to do with bill drafting or advising committees of the House, or advising conference committees, which I believe is very largely the scope of the bill before the Library Committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND. There are two bills, one of which does cover this to some extent.

Mr. LENROOT. However that may be—and I want to be very frank with the House—I do not believe this bill goes as far as it ought to go; but it is the very least that Congress should begin with in the consideration of this important question. Every State in the Union, whether it is Democratic or Republican, that claims to be making progress at all to-day, has legislative reference libraries. The Congress of the United States alone has none, and I am sorry, indeed, that the members of the conference committee have been unwilling to do this little that is proposed in this amendment. I sincerely hope that this amendment will be concurred in.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THACHER].

Mr. THACHER. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has very fully set forth the need for this piece of legislation, which I trust will be adopted. May I state, as a member of the Committee on the Library, that some 10 years ago the librarian made a request that the sum of $25,000 be appropriated for this work, and also for the translation of legislative codes and laws of other countries. I was told that recently one of the departments wished to get a copy of the constitution of Nicaragua. They found it difficult to get this and also difficult to get anyone to translate it. This appropriation will enable the Library to have the constitutions and laws of all the countries of the world, and also to have the laws of the different States, ready for the Members of the House and the Senate, for reference in preparing the important work before Congress, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has very well explained.

This is not new legislation, because there was an appropriation authorized in 1906. Without going into the subject fully at this time, I would say that it is a very important work.

The legislative bureau bill, which the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] inquired about, provides for some of this very work, and also for a bill-drafting bureau, and has a much wider scope than this amendment. This proposes assistance in giving information to the Members of the Congress. I trust that the amendment may be adopted.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield to me a minute or two?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will a little later. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I believe this is one of the provisions which ought to be agreed to. If it is agreed to it will be of vastly more service to Members of the House than it will be to Senators. The facts are that if a person wants information on a certain subject he can send over to the Library and get the books, and if he has time he can dig out that information. If a book is written in a foreign language, and if a person can not read that language, he can employ some one to translate it. The Senators have clerks to aid them in securing such information. We do not have that assistance which Senators have. The librarian has a pile of requests from Members of the House for information along certain lines. A Member of the House not only wants books, but he wants information. He wants to know what is in the various books on a certain subject. The librarian has been compelled to turn down these requests because he has no help to aid him in giving Members that information.

I believe this amendment does not go far enough. I regret that we have not legislation on which we might appropriate money so that the Members of Congress could obtain the information that is contained in the books in the Library, which they can not get at this time because they do not have the time required for the investigation of these various questions. I believe that the appropriation of $25,000 is the beginning of a program that will cost a good many thousand dollars, but I believe it will be money very well spent. It will give Members of Congress information upon subjects upon which they do not now have information. It will make the Congressional Library a real thing to a great many Members of Congress to whom at present it means practically nothing.

Mr. Speaker, this provision does not go far enough, but it goes as far as the Senate had authority under the law to make the appropriation, and I understand that the librarian will give it a broad interpretation, so that Members of the House can secure information upon subjects that are before Congress at various times or upon subjects upon which they are making investigations. It is a small appropriation. It is possible that the proposition will be found to be unworkable. If that is so, then there will be no necessity for enacting the legislation that is now pending in Congress for the creation of a similar bureau. It will help the committees of Congress that are now considering these bills for the creation of a legislative bureau. We will find by the workings of this bureau that will be established under this appropriation what is necessary in the way of legislation on this subject. It is a new thing, so far as the Congress is concerned, and I hope that the House will consent to the Senate amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the motion is to recede and concur in the Senate amendment. I shall vote for that motion, though I regret that a motion was not made to recede and concur with an amendment broadening the scope of the provision. What is proposed in the amendment will be helpful and useful. Indexes and digests of laws will be of very great value to us. But what we really need is to have in the Congressional Library a number of experts who can give us information promptly, give us facts and figures with regard to matters before the House for consideration. I know we have all of us had experience in going to the Library seeking information on various subjects. We have found the gentlemen over there anxious to aid as far as they could, but there is no one there whose duty it is to seek out and compile information for Members or who has the time in addition to other duties to do so. That is what we need. If we had more clerks, if we had a larger amount for clerk hire, if we were as fortunate in that respect as Senators are, we could each of us have an expert assistant, who could secure this information for us. But as we are limited in the amount of clerk hire, the time of our clerks being entirely occupied with the ordinary routine business of a Member, we have no one on whom we can call for information which we should have to inform us with regard to matters of legislation before the House. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I am very much in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin on Senate amendment No. 33, in regard to the legislative reference appropriation of $25,000 for the Library. Last night I read a very interesting hearing, the testimony of the Secretary of the Interior before the Public Lands Committee. During the course of the hearing the question came up as to foreign statutes on water-power sites. It developed that the only man present at that committee hearing who had those statutes was a young man, secretary to the conservation asssociation, Mr. Slattery. He was asked by the chairman of the committee to give them to the committee for inclusion in the report.

Unquestionably those statutes are in the Library of Congress. But they are not accessible readily to Members of Congress. The Library of Congress is, as its name implies, an institution which belongs to Congress. It was formerly housed in the Capitol. It has moved across the way and is now one of the show places of the Nation, probably the greatest. It has the finest collection of books this side the older countries of Europe. The matter that we want for reference purposes is available, but it is available to us only with difficulty. This appropriation of $25,000 would bring it together and make it accessible to Congress, and for the life of me I do not see why the chairman of the committee and the House conferees did not agree with the Senate on this proposition.

I want to say also that I believe the time is coming when we will have a complete legislative reference bureau in this Capital, and I expect the chairman in charge of this bill will support it when that proposal comes. I think this item is the beginning of that proposition, and it leads me to support it with enthusiasm.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, there is pending in the Senate of the United States a bill that creates a reference bureau in the Library of Congress. I understand that a similar proposition is pending before the Committee on the Library in the House of Representatives. Inasmuch as this is a matter of legislation now pending in Congress before the committees having jurisdiction of that subject, and having superior knowledge of that subject, your conferees did not feel justified in anticipating the work of the proper committees.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Is the gentleman aware that committees in previous Congresses have acted favorably on the proposition, reported a bill to the House, and that it stayed on the House Calendar and never was reached?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, Mr. Speaker; the Committee on Appropriations provides money for carrying on the activities of the Government provided for by law. Bills that have been favorably reported and not acted upon are not sufficient justification for members of the Appropriations Committee to act upon. We had a request that the conferees would hear a distinguished Senator from the State of Wisconsin. The conferees have not yet had the pleasure of hearing that Senator on this proposition.

Mr. LENROOT. For the reason that the Senator has been ill and unable to appear before the conferees.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. In view of the fact that we are requested to let certain gentlemen be heard, and in view of the further fact that this is legislation pending in both branches of Congress, the committee of conference felt justified in bringing the amendment back to the House. I hope we may now have a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to recede from the House disagreement to Senate amendment 33 and concur in the same.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina) there were—yeas 68, noes 27.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 140, nays 94, answered "present" 3, not voting 196, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE FOR SUNDAY, JUNE 28, 1914.

The Speaker appointed Mr. LINTHICUM to act as Speaker pro tempore on Sunday, June 28, 1914, at the memorial exercises in honor of the late Representative KONIG.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky rises to a question of personal privilege. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the Washington Times of yesterday contained an editorial, a part of which I will read, as it refers to me:

> Again, the chairman of the House District Committee has lately made it perfectly plain that the members of the new Board of Commissioners of the District have achieved the distinction of his hostility. We do not know just why Mr. JOHNSON has thus honored the commissioners; but the fact remains that he has done so, and in doing so has greatly improved their standing in the community and their hold on the confidence of the public. Mr. JOHNSON was especially vindictive in questioning the chairman of the board of commissioners during the recent public-ownership hearings. The performance of that occasion made apparent that these two would be of little use serving together on the proposed fiscal commission. Nobody could be of use trying to work with BEN JOHNSON. He is impossible, and that is all that need be said.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that this membership is entitled to know the truth concerning at least one sentence in this article. That sentence reads as follows:

> Mr. JOHNSON was especially vindictive in questioning the chairman of the board of commissioners during the recent public-ownership hearings.

In that connection, I wish to say that I have not the slightest doubt that every Member upon the floor of this House who read that article believes that I have been guilty of discourtesy to the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Recently Mr. Judson Welliver was before the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman, and upon that occasion he said that he was the editor of the Washington Times. The article which I have just read is an editorial in that paper. The fact is that when Commissioner Newman appeared before the District Committee upon the occasion referred to in this article I was in Kentucky, where I had gone to attend the funeral of the late Senator Bradley, and was not present at that meeting of the committee at all. It is further true, so I am informed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] and others, that Mr. Judson Welliver, the editor of the Washington Times, was himself present when Mr. Newman appeared before the committee. Therefore Mr. Welliver knew when he made this statement in his paper of yesterday that I was not present, and therefore had not been guilty of mistreating the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, there is purpose in all this misrepresentation. It has been the purpose of the Washington Times, and particularly of this editor, to malign and abuse me in order to discredit me not only with the public generally, but also with the membership of this House, in order to gain the end which he most desires, and that is to have me, by means fair or foul, displaced from the chairmanship of that committee. The statement has gone to the country at large that I, as chairman of that committee, having been selected to that important position by the membership of this House, without any manner of excuse, have been guilty of an indignity to the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia when he appeared before that committee on official business. Without knowing what he is going to say next, but knowing what he has said in the past, I feel it my duty to advise the membership of this House that I have not been guilty of the things with which he has been continually charging me. All his articles are more or less libelous. I hope I shall not be driven in the future to pay any more attention to any of them than I am paying now to this one; and I am doing this not for myself alone, but that the membership of this House and the public may know that the chairman of a committee is not doing the things that this assassin of character would have you believe he is doing. [Applause.]

When that article appeared in the Washington Times of yesterday I clipped it, and at the top of the column I wrote these words: "For your information." I signed my name to it and mailed it to Commissioner Newman. Only a few minutes ago I was talking to him over the telephone. He said that when he saw the article in the paper yesterday he was angered because such a thing concerning him and me had been printed. He has my unqualified esteem, and I believe I have his. He said to me over the telephone that when he read that article he called up the management of the newspaper and told them that there was no justification in truth for any such publication, and demanded that it be corrected. Mr. Newman further tells me—and the next issue of the paper verified it—that the editor of that paper cut out of that editorial that which I have just read, leaving the rest of the editorial in the later editions of the paper, not having the manliness to say that he had done me a wrong; but he let it go, with no correction of it except by the extraction from the later editions of his paper of this mendacious and villainous thing.

If he had been half a man, he would have said to the public, to whom he peddled this lie at a penny apiece, that he had done me an injury; but the cowardly cur would not do that. Why, even he was before our committee, and he was treated courteously, just as though he were a gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I do not care to take more of the time of the House, but I wish you to know the extent to which this whelp is lying concerning me. [Applause.]

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the next amendment be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 43: Assistant to the Secretary, to be appointed by the Secretary, $4,500.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 43.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RAKER. I rise to make a preferential motion—to move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 43, and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] offers a preferential motion to recede and concur. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. RAKER. Division!

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California demands a division.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays, to save time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Evidently a sufficient number, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ELDER. I would like to have the amendment again reported.

Mr. ADAIR. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 83, nays 135, answered "present" 2, not voting 212, as follows:

So the motion was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. OGLESBY (to recede and concur) with Mr. PROUTY (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. SPARKMAN with Mr. SLEMP.

Mr. LINTHICUM with Mr. Moss of West Virginia.

Mr. HULL with Mr. MILLER.

Mr. BROWN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "yea."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall and listening?

Mr. BROWN of New York. I was not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to vote "yea."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall and listening?

Mr. BRYAN. I just stepped out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

The Clerk will note as "present" Mr. BROWN of New York and Mr. BRYAN. The Clerk will call my name.

The name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri was called and he voted "nay."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The vote recurs on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 47: Page 40, line 2, strike out "$320,060" and insert "$329,960."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate. It is only a total.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 48: Page 40, line 22, insert the words: "Assistant to the Secretary, to be appointed by the Secretary, $4,500."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Just a moment. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 48. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] desire to be recognized?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, this is a provision to create a new office to be known as "Assistant to the Secretary," and to be appointed by the Secretary, at a salary of $4,500 a year. On the 1st day of May, 1912, the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr JOHNSON of South Carolina, made a report to this House on the legislative bill, in which he said:

It should be stated, in justice to the Treasury Department, that of the total decrease of 406 existing specific employments proposed by this bill in all of the executive departments, 164 of them are in the Treasury Department alone, and practically all of that reduction is made on its initiative in submitting the estimates to Congress at the beginning of this session. It is interesting and important also in this connection to state that during the last Congress, in providing for the Treasury Department for the fiscal years 1911 and 1912, a total reduction was made of 342 salaried places with annual compensation amounting to $294,140; added to the number diminished in this bill, the total reduction in places in the Treasury Department for the three fiscal years, 1911, 1912, and 1913, amounts to 506 specific employments, with annual pay amounting to $501,480.

A magnificent tribute by a great Democrat to the great economy and efficiency of a Republican administration in the Treasury Department. [Applause on the Republican side.] Within one month his party in convention at Baltimore adopted a platform which contains another plank, which this House has cast aside and repudiated. That plank reads as follows:

We denounce the profligate waste of the money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses, which have kept taxes high and reduced the purchasing power of the people's toil. We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits democratic government and a reduction in the number of useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

I am glad you applaud that sentiment, because your first act under a Democratic administration is to bring back men of those positions that were made vacant by a Republican administration.

Mr. Speaker, what are the facts? In 1914, under the estimates made by Secretary MacVeagh, there were 588 places in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Those places, formerly many more of them, had been reduced, as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] stated in his report in 1912, to 588 places. In the estimate for this year, the first estimate of a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, instead of making a reduction, as was promised in the Democratic platform, there is an increase to 661 places in that office, or an increase of 73 places.

In another estimate, on page 25 of the report——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. GOOD. In just a minute. On page 25 of the report that accompanied this bill—a report prepared by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON]—we find that in the Treasury Department there was a total of employees estimated for the fiscal year 1914 of 3,183. That is the number that was estimated for by Secretary MacVeagh. The first act of Mr. McAdoo, in making an estimate for an appropriation for his department, is to ask for 3,392 places, an increase of 219.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I have read a Democratic promise from the Democratic platform. This increase in appropriation is Democratic performance. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman is aware of the fact that the income-tax amendment has necessitated an increase in the number of employees?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, not at all. We have another item in this bill, where the Secretary is asking for $1,500,000 for the collection of the income tax.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is for the enforcement of the law throughout the country.

Mr. GOOD. I do not yield further to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the matter of increase in the number of salaried positions were the only question involved I would not complain, for I realize that a Democratic administration is more expensive than a Republican administration, but when we stand before the terrible condition that has existed for the first year in the great office of the Treasury of the United States, we must recognize the utter incompetency of the present officials there to transact the business of the United States. Under Secretary MacVeagh we not only had a reduction in the number of salaried positions, but had an officer of the law who was able to administer the law. Our present Secretary, however, found conditions so "bad" that he had to have an examination made of his office, and I only want to point to one thing to show how he found the conditions in the office of the Treasurer. He found account No. 17045, which is the redemption agency of the United States Treasurer—national-bank redemption agency—in an examination made from February 13 to August 13 he found that in that account there were total credits on the ledger of $409,166,559.94 and the total debits were $386,092,636.09. No balance had been entered in the account since it was started; in over eight months not a single balance had been entered. The difference between the two sides of the ledger was a credit of more than $23,000,000, while the balance to the credit account on that day, according to the cashbook, was $28,000,000, or a difference of $5,000,000. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is recognized for one minute.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the speech made by the President of the United States to the editors of Virginia on yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing in the RECORD the speech made by the President to the Virginia editors yesterday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the pending amendment is to provide an assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be appointed by the Secretary, at a salary of $4,500. There are now three Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, who are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

The House has just had before it an amendment very similar, in the State Department, providing for an assistant to the Secretary of State, to be appointed by that Secretary, at a salary of $4,500. That Department has also three Assistant Secretaries. The only departments of the Government which have three Assistant Secretaries are the Department of State and the Department of the Treasury. The Postmaster General, it is true, has four Assistant Postmasters General.

Now, all the other departments are able to get along with one or two Assistant Secretaries, and without providing for an assistant to the Secretary. In the State Department, which has less business than any other department of the Government, except the new Department of Labor, the Secretary desired to have the right himself to name an assistant to the Secretary.

The Secretary of State was very prominent over at Baltimore a couple of years ago. It is said that he wrote the Democratic platform, although he has since taken the liberty of stating that some of its planks were not carefully considered and that attention ought not to be paid to them. I do not know just how he regards this plank in the platform which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has just read to the House, but I think it would not hurt the Democratic side of the House to have it read again in view of the fact that about half of the Democratic side of the House has just voted in direct conflict with that plank in the platform, because if there ever was a useless office, an extravagant office, it was the one proposed—for an assistant to the Secretary of State, to which it was proposed to appoint a stenographer to aid our distinguished Secretary of State in keeping track of his engagements on the Chautauqua circuit. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MANN. I do.

Mr. GARNER. Has the gentleman heard any gentleman of the House, either on this side or that side, say that either the Secretary of State or the Secretary of the Treasury has ever asked that these offices be created?

Mr. MANN. Well, I have heard it said——

Mr. GARNER. Well, to whom were these requests made? I have not heard of them.

Mr. MANN. I am surprised that in the course of the lobbying done in behalf of those offices so distinguished a Member of the House as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] has not yet been interviewed. They overlooked one chance possibly, though I doubt whether an interview with him would have done any good. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. Now, the gentleman from Illinois would have it understood from his statement that this was a request very numerously made. So far as I can ascertain from the hearings had before the Committee on Appropriations of the House and from the hearings had before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, neither reveals the fact that either of these gentlemen, the Secretary of State or the Secretary of the Treasury, has asked that these offices be created.

Mr. PAYNE. It must have been done in an "insidious" way. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. MANN. Well, instead of coming out in the open and giving the reasons for the creation of these useless offices, they have endeavored to obtain them through secret machinations.

Mr. GARNER. Now, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MANN. Not unless I get more time.

Mr. GARNER. We will get more time for the gentleman, I think.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MANN. I will take the chances and yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman has said this has been done through secret machinations. The gentleman ought to be honest with the House and tell us just how that has been done.

Mr. MANN. Oh——

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman will permit, so far as the record of the Senate goes and so far as the record of the House goes there is not a scintilla of evidence showing that either the Secretary of State or the Secretary of the Treasury wants these offices created.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt my distinguished friend from Texas, in his campaign in Texas, will say that, against the protest of the Secretary of State and in spite of the opposition of the Secretary of the Treasury, the distinguished Senate of the United States inserted amendments to force upon them $4,500 jobs, the occupants to be named by them; and there may be people in Texas so gullible that they will believe it.

Now, what does the Democratic platform say?—

REPUBLICAN EXTRAVAGANCE.

We denounce the profligate waste of money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses, which have kept taxes high and reduced the purchasing power of the people's toil. We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits a democratic government and a reduction in the number of useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people.

And the gentleman, having written that in the Democratic platform, immediately proceeds to ask for one of these useless offices to be of special benefit to him. I hope that we can defeat the proposition. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat inclined to favor the creation of this new office. Recent experience with the office of the Secretary of the Treasury has led me to believe that they need more assistance down there. I am not responsible for Democratic promises of economy. I never expected them to be kept or fulfilled. I have never subscribed to any foolish promises not to increase the employees of the Government, and therefore, when I really believe that we need additional assistants in Government offices, I am free to vote for them.

The experience to which I refer is this: It will be recalled that some time ago in a deficiency bill the House placed a limitation upon the per diem expenditures of public officials traveling on public business. Soon after that limitation was made many complaints came to the members of the Committee on Appropriations, to the effect that the limit was too low, that the amount provided was wholly inadequate, particularly for members of the Cabinet and other high officials. It was stated that these gentlemen, in order to maintain the dignity of their positions, patronized first-class hotels, and that the daily expenditure was necessarily greater than the amount Congress allowed. The committee properly took these matters into consideration and we sought information upon which we could act, with a view to modifying that provision, and if it seemed necessary to increase the amount. With this object in view, I, as a member of the committee, sought information relative to the cost of recent travels of Government officials that might be used as a basis on which to estimate the necessity of an increase of the limit of expenditure.

The organization committee under the new currency law had at that time just concluded its travels about the country, and I addressed a letter to the Auditor of the State Department, seeking information which might be of value to the committee, which letter was as follows:

APRIL 15, 1914.

Hon. W. E. ANDREWS,
Auditor Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. ANDREWS: There has been some considerable discussion of the provision contained in the recent urgent deficiency act limiting the subsistence per diem allowance of public officials, and it is claimed, among other things, that the limitation is so low as to work hardship in some cases. I am seeking all the information I can secure on this point, and with that object in view would be glad to be furnished with the expense accounts of the members of the organization committee of the national reserve banks on their recent trip throughout the country seeking information with regard to the location of reserve banks and reserve districts.

Thanking you in advance for this information, I remain,

Very truly, yours,

FRANK W. MONDELL.

Two days later I received a reply from the auditor as follows:

APRIL 17, 1914.

Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MONDELL: I have just received your letter of the 15th instant, requesting information concerning certain expenditures for per diem allowances in lieu of subsistence of persons traveling on department business.

Under the following regulation of the department your communication will be referred immediately to the Honorable Secretary of the Treasury:

"1. Hereafter, except as otherwise provided by law, when Congress or any committee of the Senate or House of Representatives, or any officer of the Government of the United States, or any State or municipality, or any person, shall request information of any kind or character of the department, or copies of its records or files, the request shall be referred to the Secretary or Assistant Secretary in charge for instructions, and the reply for signature." (Department Circular No. 15 of 1898.)

Yours, very truly, W. E. ANDREWS, Auditor.

That, it will be noted, was the middle of April. Since that time, like the administration, I have occupied a position of watchful waiting. Up to this time I have received no answer to my communication, and I am entirely ignorant as to the amount those gentlemen spent. My hope is that by providing this new office near the Secretary, in close and confidential communication with the Secretary, with full knowledge of the expenditures of the Secretary's office, some time in the distant future I may secure an answer to my communication and thus have information on which to base a judgment as to the need of larger allowances by officials of exalted station. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is not the real reason why the gentleman has not heard from the Secretary of the Treasury because they are afraid to make public what these extravagant expenses were?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, perish the thought, under an immaculate Democratic administration. I am amazed that the gentleman should make the suggestion. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] read from a report that I made on the legislative bill in 1912, in which I took occasion to congratulate a Republican official upon meritorious and efficient service to the people. I am sorry that my good and amiable friend from Iowa took advantage of this occasion to make a partisan speech. He should have taken advantage of it in order to commend the present Democratic Secretary of the Treasury as I commended the Republican Secretary in 1912.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman speaks of an increase in the force. Why not be perfectly candid with the House? Twenty-nine of the people who are appropriated for in this bill in excess of the number we appropriated for for the current year are charwomen and laborers to take care of the new Bureau of Engraving and Printing. The other increases, amounting to only 10 clerks, are distributed through that great department.

What happened under Secretary McAdoo? We passed a tariff bill that has enormously increased the burdens of the Secretary of the Treasury. We passed a currency bill which placed great and responsible duties upon him. When he comes before the Congress in the estimates and asks for a man to assist him, our friends across the aisle undertake to make political capital out of it. Let me remind you that Secretary McAdoo when he came into office changed the policy that had been pursued by your party. For 30 years you had placed the surplus money in the Treasury of the United States at the disposal of banks without interest. When Mr. McAdoo became Secretary he said to the banks, "If you take the deposits of the public money, you must pay 2 per cent into the Treasury of the people"; and by that simple change in the interest of the people he made for the Treasury of the United States last year a million and a half or two million dollars. [Applause.] If you had pursued that policy when you were in power, you would have turned into the Treasury of the United States $60,000,000. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of the Treasury has great responsibilities, and he has conducted himself so fittingly and so well in that great office as to demand and receive the approval of the country.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman state when under a Republican administration in less than two months we sent abroad $75,000,000 in gold?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What in the world has the amount of gold sent to Europe to buy cheap bonds got to do with the Secretary of the Treasury? Mr. Speaker, I have been reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a long time, and I have been a Member of this House a good while. For 20 or 30 years before I came here I was at a loss to understand Republican logic, and I must say that all my years of service in this House have not enabled me to understand the logic of men on the other side of the aisle. They can make politics out of anything, and they draw conclusions where conclusions are not justified.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am going on about the Secretary's office. He has great and responsible duties to perform and he is performing them well. I am authorized to say for him that he is willing to work long hours in order to discharge these duties, and that if there is the slightest objection to giving him the necessary help he will continue to work overhours. Mr. Speaker, I insist on my motion.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield me one minute?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield the gentleman from Iowa one minute.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has made a statement in regard to being perfectly fair and candid with the House. I am afraid that the Committee on Appropriations that reported out this bill has not been entirely candid with the House. If it had, he would have told the House of the condition existing in one department under the Secretary of the Treasury that would have made you throw up your hands in holy horror. What are the facts? The facts are that the Treasurer of the United States found himself utterly incapable of performing the duties of his office. The work was running behind day after day, and he was unable to secure balances in the various accounts. He had a detail of almost 60 clerks in addition to the regular clerks appropriated for, and in six months was not able to strike his balances. What did he do? He went to the Civil Service Commission, that has been maligned so often, and had Mr. Herbert Brown and Mr. Herbert Wood detailed to his office to show him how to conduct the affairs of his office. They went into that office, and in 60 days they have been able to discharge 50 clerks, to send 10 more to the reading room with nothing to do, and have been enabled to bring the work current. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take any more time, but the gentleman has gone so far afield that I think the membership of the House ought to know the facts. The Secretary of the Treasury under the last Republican President, in February, 1913, just before going out of office, issued an Executive order that completely changed the methods of handling the public moneys.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. GLASS. And may I supplement what my colleague says by the statement that although he had been Secretary of the Treasury for four years he gave as an excuse for delaying that order until the closing days of the Taft administration that he did not know the law was on the statute books. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, that order was issued in the closing days of the Taft administration. The work that had been formerly done in the subtreasuries of the country was transferred to the Treasurer's office in the city of Washington, and before that work had been systematized Mr. McAdoo took charge of the Treasury Department, and it was necessary, in order to systematize the work, that this extra force should be detailed to the Treasurer's office. And the force has been systematized and the work has been brought down to date. It is true, as the gentleman states, that these men have been sent back whence they came, but whatever was done by anybody it was under the Secretary of the Treasury, and he is entitled to proper credit for it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. Is it not a fact that practically all of the new machinery, tabulating machinery, that was brought in by the Secretary under the new administration was entirely discarded?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The Secretary of the new administration brought in no machinery, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Let me tell the Members about this thing, and not about something else.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina declines to yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The new Secretary of the Treasury did not make the organization. The organization was made by the outgoing Secretary, and the organization has been perfected and systematized and the useless men sent back to other places under the present Secretary of the Treasury, with the assistance of Mr. Brown and his force. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman takes his seat, will he yield to me for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In connection with the propositions pending here to create new positions in the Department of State and the Department of the Treasury—and I voted against the creation of the new position in the Department of State and shall vote against the creation of the new position in the Department of the Treasury—I want to ask the gentleman if he recalls that about the beginning of the administration of President Taft there was a proposition brought in and urgently insisted upon by gentlemen on the other side to create a new office in the Department of State, which was to pay $10,000 a year—a kind of overlord proposition—which we finally succeeded in defeating?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I remember that.

Mr. MANN. But not in the beginning of the administration of Mr. Taft.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. A little later on.

Mr. MANN. A little before the administration came in, which I helped to defeat.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to further insist on the disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Did not the gentleman from California interpose a motion?

The SPEAKER. No. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 170, nays 39, answered "present" 3, not voting 221, as follows:

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet at half past 10 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at half past 10 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state my purpose, and that is to move that the House adjourn now and let Members work an hour and a half in the morning instead of waiting two or three hours to-night——

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that it is my understanding that the women who are in favor of suffrage are to present a petition to the Speaker of the House to-morrow morning at half past 10.

Mr. BRYAN. In his office.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I am sure the Speaker will be glad to designate somebody to occupy the Chair for a few moments.

Mr. MURDOCK. Why not make it 15 minutes to 11?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am sure that the Speaker will be able to make proper arrangements.

Mr. MURDOCK. I will object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MURDOCK. I object.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to state to the gentleman there will not be any trouble in arranging the matter.

Mr. MURDOCK. I want the Speaker present there.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker can be present there by appointing somebody to preside here to-morrow.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is the Speaker going to do that?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Then I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 10.30 a. m. to-morrow.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know the necessity for it. Here it is nearly 7 o'clock in the evening, and we are asked to meet to-morrow morning at half past 10. We have loafed along here week after week, and now we are trying to rush matters, with the mercury nearly 100 in the shade.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is approaching the 1st of July, and there are several other conference reports, and if these bills are passed by both Houses before the 1st day of July it will prevent the necessity for passing resolutions extending last year's appropriations. So it is important to get as many through as we can before the night of next Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 10.30 a. m. to-morrow? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 13153. An act for the relief of Pete Jelovac; and

H. R. 12792. An act for the relief of Mrs. Thomas G. Priole widow of Thomas G. Prioleau.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Saturday, June 27, 1914, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16829) to provide for enlarging the site for the United States building at Plymouth, Mass., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 904), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DANFORTH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 17442) to amend section 103 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as amended by the acts of the Congress approved March 3, 1913, and June 6, 1914, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 905), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ROUSE: A bill (H. R. 17505) to refund to the American Surety Co., of New York, an amount, with interest, paid by it to the United States under protest and to avoid the levy of an execution under a judgment against it, which judgment was subsequently reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada: A bill (H. R. 17506) authorizing the expenditure of the sum of $25,000 as a part contribution toward the erection of a monument at Washington, D. C., in commemoration of the discovery of "The New Constitution of Freedom"; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. DENT: A bill (H. R. 17507) ratifying, confirming, and validating the construction and maintenance of a dam under an act authorizing the Pea River Power Co. to erect a dam in Coffee County, Ala., approved February 23, 1906; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SISSON: A bill (H. R. 17508) for the erection of a public building at Okolona, Miss.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BOWDLE: A bill (H. R. 17509) requiring the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War to discharge enlisted men against whom judgments or orders have been entered by the courts of the States or the District of Columbia requiring the payment of alimony or the support of children, and who are in disobedience of such judgment or order, provided war, actual or threatened, does not exist and Government property is not imperiled; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BEALL of Texas: A bill (H. R. 17510) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 17511) to authorize the Great Western Land Co., of Missouri, to construct a bridge across Black River; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN: A bill (H. R. 17512) granting an increase of pension to Louisa B. Tittle; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRUMBAUGH: A bill (H. R. 17513) granting a pension to Lon Fleming; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURNETT: A bill (H. R. 17514) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mary E. Patterson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DEITRICK: A bill (H. R. 17515) granting a pension to John H. Amrock; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17516) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Lister; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FERGUSSON: A bill (H. R. 17517) for the relief of Joseph B. Tanner; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. FOWLER: A bill (H. R. 17518) granting an increase of pension to Richard Southard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina: A bill (H. R. 17519) for the relief of Lula Swain, widow of Ira Swain; to the Committee on Claims.

SENATE.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we make mention of Thy name with reverence and godly fear. Thou hast dealt with us as Thou hast dealt with no other people. Thou hast given to us this great domain unsoiled by evil practices that have become the ethics of the people, unhindered by traditions that have become dominant with hoary age; but in the light of liberty and freedom Thou dost give to us to work out our destiny in this great land. We seek Thy guidance and blessing that in all we undertake we may have God's favor and that the completed work may redound to the honor and glory of Thy name. We ask these blessings for Jesus' sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 12045. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 12792. An act for the relief of Mrs. Thomas G. Prioleau, widow of Thomas G. Prioleau; and

H. R. 13153. An act for the relief of Pete Jelovac.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SMOOT. I present a resolution in the form of a petition from Elizabeth A. Hayward, Elizabeth M. Cohen, and others of Salt Lake City, Utah, praying Federal legislation for woman suffrage. I ask that the body of the resolution without the names be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL AMERICAN WOMAN SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION.

We, the citizens of Salt Lake City, Utah, have assembled to-day to voice our demands that women, as citizens of the United States, be accorded the full right of such citizenship. We congratulate the 4,000,000 women voters who have won their rights to the ballot in 10 States, and confidently expect to see five more States under the franchise banner after the November elections.

We hereby declare that suffrage for women has become a national as well as a local issue, and we urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to enact Federal legislation which will insure to women political equal rights with men.

We therefore ask the Congress of the United States to proceed without delay in the most feasible and practical manner to remove the barriers which prevent American women from the exercise of full franchise, and to make our country not a government in which half the people are denied the right of participation but in truth and reality a democracy.

The above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution passed at a mass meeting held at Salt Lake City, Utah, this 2d day of May, 1914.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire likewise to present a similar petition in behalf of the congressional committee of Chicago, Ill., National American Woman Suffrage Association, their official organization, requesting the Senate to aid the passage of such legislation as will permit a constitutional amendment for woman suffrage. I request that the petition be likewise printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL AMERICAN WOMAN SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION.

We, the citizens of Chicago, Ill., have assembled to-day to voice our demands that women, as citizens of the United States, be accorded the full right of such citizenship. The above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution passed at a mass meeting held at Chicago, Ill., this 2d day of May, 1914.

Mr. OLIVER. I present petitions similar to those presented by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] from various citizens of the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the adoption of a constitutional amendment relating to woman suffrage. I understand they are the same kind as those presented by other Senators, and as they will be printed in the RECORD I will refrain from making that request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will lie on the table.

Mr. CATRON. I have a petition similar to the one just presented by the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] from the Woman's Club of Albuquerque, N. Mex., signed by Mrs. Abbie L. Brewer, as presiding officer, and Mrs. Maud McFie Bloom, as secretary. I ask that the same disposition be made of it as was made of the petitions presented by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will lie on the table.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I present a petition signed by Mrs. Frances S. Whiteside, Dr. A. R. Holdenby, and other citizens of Atlanta, Ga., urging Federal legislation for woman suffrage. I will not ask that it be read into the RECORD, for I think a number of us, judging from the color of the paper, have the same petitions to present from our respective States. I send the petition to the desk to be properly noted and referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will lie on the table.

Mr. BRADY presented memorials of sundry citizens of Coeur d'Alene and Wallace, in the State of Idaho, remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. THORNTON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Ringgold, La., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TOWNSEND. In behalf of a great many petitioners in the State of Wisconsin, amounting to hundreds, I present petitions favoring Federal legislation for woman suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will lie on the table.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented petitions of sundry citizens of Cass County, St. Joseph County, Ann Arbor, Allen, Kalamazoo, and Flint, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Michigan, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have a petition in behalf of woman suffrage adopted at a mass meeting held at Topeka, Kans., on the 2d day of May. It is short, and I should like to have it incorporated in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL AMERICAN WOMAN SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION.

We, the citizens of Topeka, Kans., have assembled to-day to voice our demands that women of the United States be accorded the full right of such citizenship. We congratulate the 4,000,000 women voters who have won their right to the ballot in 10 States, and confidently expect to see five more States under the franchise banner after the November elections.

The above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution passed at a mass meeting held at the Commercial Club rooms, this 2d day of May, 1914.

M. L. DOERING, Presiding Officer.

Attested:

LORETTA STRICKLER, Secretary.

Under auspices of the Woman's Commercial Club, composed of the business and professional women of Topeka. Has 125 active members.

Per A. C. PISANI.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have a brief note here from Miss Gordon, president of the Woman Christian Temperance Union, which I ask to have read.

There being no objection, the Secretary read as follows:

FRIDAY MORNING.

DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: I have a telegram that on June 17, in Chicago, the General Federation of Women's Club (representing 1,000,000 members), in biennial convention, adopted a resolution declaring for "Federal and State-wide prohibition."

LEGISLATION OF THE CONGRESS.

Mr. OLIVER. I have a copy of extracts from an editorial which lately appeared in the Atlanta Constitution, a very influential paper published in the State of Georgia, commending the national administration for many of its acts and referring to some pending legislation, which I ask may be read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SOUTHERN IRON & EQUIPMENT CO.,
Atlanta, Ga., June 20, 1914.

DEAR SIR: Beg to call your attention to the following extracts from an editorial that recently appeared in the Atlanta Constitution:

"Since the Wilson administration assumed office three great masterpieces in legislation stand forth:

"1. Tariff reform.

"2. Currency reform.

"3. Undoing of the canal tolls blunder."

"Any one of these three achievements would have justified the party in going before the country and asking indorsement. Together they should be irresistible.

"And they will be irresistible if Congress, mindful of when the country has had enough, mindful of the condition of business throughout the country, will rest on its laurels, go home, and give business a chance.

"Since the first year of the Roosevelt administration business has been harried.

"To this day it is living in an atmosphere of uncertainty. Business thrives on uncertainty less than any other diet. It has stood admirably the two needed capital operations of the tariff and currency revisions, but it has not yet recovered from their effects. It is unfair to business to expose it at this time to further radical operations. The patient has lost blood; let him recuperate."

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 14404) for the relief of E. F. Anderson (Rept. No. 627); and

A bill (H. R. 14405) for the relief of C. F. Jackson (Rept. No. 628).

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5197) granting public lands to the city and county of Denver, in the State of Colorado, for public-park purposes (Rept. No. 629); and

A bill (S. 5198) to reserve certain lands and to incorporate the same and make them a part of the Pike National Forest (Rept. No. 630).

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMITH of Georgia:

A bill (S. 5997) providing that the register of wills and recorder of deeds in the District of Columbia shall be under the supervision of the District Commissioners, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 5998) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the Wilson Post, No. 115, Grand Army of the Republic, Wilson, Kans., and the Wilson Camp, No. 21, Sons of Veterans, Wilson, Kans., two bronze cannon; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRADY:

A bill (S. 5999) granting a pension to Samuel C. Cochran (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 6000) for the relief of John Burrows; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BURLEIGH:

A bill (S. 6001) granting an increase of pension to James S. Crockett; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHERMAN:

A bill (S. 6002) granting a pension to Anton Teichman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Arizona:

A bill (S. 6003) granting an increase of pension to William H. Soule; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SIMMONS:

A bill (S. 6004) to convert the premises connected with Fort Johnston, in the town of Southport, N. C., into a public park; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. SAULSBURY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KERN submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to any trust company or other complainant taxes erroneously assessed or illegally collected under section 2 of the war-revenue act of June 18, 1898, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRYAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 for surveys of oyster beds on the coast of Florida, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $66,000 for the establishment of aids to navigation and improvement of existing aids to navigation in the St. Johns River, Fla., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NEWLANDS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,000 to reimburse the estate of George W. Dant for such losses and expenses incurred by him growing out of the Ford Theater disaster of June 9, 1893, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment providing that creditable Civil War service of any Government appointee shall be accounted as having been equivalent to incident of service within any legal requirement, but not change of pay, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yesterday evening I submitted the report of the committee of conference on the naval appropriation bill and the two Senators from Florida asked me to let it go over until this morning, as they wished to make some remarks on it. I should like to call it up now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report on the bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes. The report was read yesterday, and it need not be again read.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the conference report be agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Before the report is acted upon, I desire to submit a few observations with reference to amendment numbered 33, which was disagreed to by the House and the Senate conferees have receded from that amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Florida that I was in hopes we might go on with the calendar under Rule VIII until 1 o'clock. The motion of the Senator from South Carolina is not debatable. I will ask the Senator from Florida how long a time he wishes to occupy?

Mr. BRYAN. I do not know how the Senator from Utah gets the idea that the question on agreeing to a conference report is not debatable.

Mr. SMOOT. I get it from Rule XXVII, which provides that—

> The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and when received the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised, shall be immediately put, and shall be determined without debate.

Mr. BRYAN. The question of proceeding to the consideration of a conference report is not open to debate, but certainly the Senator from Utah does not contend that the question on agreeing to a conference report must be decided without debate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think there is no rule which limits debate on a conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. I said I was not going to take the Senator off the floor if he did not intend to occupy very much time, even if the rule did not permit debate. I thought the motion was to proceed to the consideration of the report.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am going to take but a few moments. I think it is important to get into the RECORD some facts in connection with this item. It will take but a short while. I do not, however, understand that the question on agreeing to the conference report is not debatable.

The item I refer to is amendment No. 33, with reference to the Key West Station. It will be found on page 26 of the bill. It provided for an appropriation of $100,000 toward the construction of a breakwater at Key West, Fla. The amendment was based upon the report of an inspection conducted at the naval station at Key West, dated August 9, 1913, by a special board.

I regret exceedingly that this amendment has not been agreed to and does not become a part of the bill as it will finally pass. I am not going to insist upon disagreeing to the conference report, but I do think, in justice to this station and in justice to those who have favored the amendment, there ought to be some matters mentioned which will give a clearer understanding than apparently obtained in some quarters with reference to the subject.

It seems to me that anyone has a very defective vision who is unable to see that Key West must become a secondary naval base. It is a short-sighted policy which would neglect that station. I think anyone must recognize that if we do have trouble upon the high seas it is likely to occur in the Caribbean, and that a base of supplies at Key West, with communication, is absolutely indispensable.

The inspection of the naval station at Key West, Fla., was conducted June 19, 1913, and the report of it says:

1. In obedience to the department's order No. 1495-96, dated May 30, 1913 (copy appended, marked "A"), appointing a board to conduct inspections of the naval stations, New Orleans, La., Key West, Fla., Pensacola, Fla., Port Royal, S. C., and Charleston, S. C., the board thus appointed reports as follows on the naval station, Key West, Fla.:

2. The board met at the naval station, Key West, Fla., at 9 a. m., June 19, 1913.

Present: Rear Admiral John R. Edwards, president; Capt. George R. Evans, member and recorder; Naval Constructor William G. DuBose, member; Civil Engineer Archibald L. Parsons, member.

This board was appointed by the present Secretary of the Navy.

6. Independent of the defense and development of any other strategic point either in the Caribbean area or on the Gulf coast, the board is of the opinion that Key West will always be a most important strategic port in connection with the supply of the fleet during times of naval activity in and about the Caribbean Sea. Should a fortified base established in Caribbean waters be invested by the enemy in time of war, and our forces subjected to disaster, the increased importance of Key West as a base of supplies on which to rely will be apparent.

The report further went on to state:

As an emergency supply station, therefore, Key West might develop into one of exceeding importance, and therefore for war contingencies the station should be fitted with a reasonable reserve storage of oil and coal and reserve storehouses, as well as with excellent facilities for turning out castings and forgings of moderate size. Its military usefulness for a limited period may be, therefore, vast in extent, and it is but promoting national defense and along the line of preparedness to develop the station. With the building of the Florida East Coast Railway the possibilities of Key West as a supply station have vastly increased over conditions existing in 1898, and therefore an expenditure of a considerable amount would be well justified in preparing the station for emergency conditions that may not be remote. Considering the time required to develop the supply features of this station, particularly as regards the development of the site for the storage of coal and oil, there are cogent reasons for the consideration of the matter at the earliest practicable day.

Further on in this report, at page 187, the board says:

95. The entire water front of the naval station, including the naval piers already constructed, the Lighthouse Establishment pier, and the Army wharf at Fort Taylor are entirely unprotected from heavy seas from a southerly direction. In fact, these berths are dangerous during heavy weather, except when the wind is blowing from the north to the southeast. During 1909 and 1910 there were two hurricanes when the velocity of the wind reached for a brief time 80 to 100 miles an hour from directions producing the most dangerous conditions to vessels moored or berthed in this locality.

97. The board believes that provision for a breakwater along the lines recommended by the Bureau of Yards and Docks in its letter No. 8587 of November 27, 1912, will meet the needs of the naval service and will provide a safe anchorage under all conditions of wind or sea for small vessels, not only for the Navy but for the Army, Lighthouse, Customs, Marine-Hospital, and Revenue-Cutter Services.

This report confirms what had been the report preceding it, and what had been the views of the previous Secretary of the Navy. In its summary the board says:

117. The board is of the opinion that the problem of development of Key West should comprise two salient features:

(a) Its utilization as a repair and supply station for torpedo craft and submarines.

(b) Its utilization as a station for the maintenance of a reserve supply of coal and fuel oil.

As we are building about six destroyers every year and nearly that number of submarines, the efficient maintenance of both types of vessels demands that adequate and suitable berthing arrangements be provided for them. Despite the considerable number of naval stations that we possess, the only station at which special berthing facilities are being provided for such vessels is Charleston, S. C. The strategic position of Key West fully warrants the heavy expenditure recommended for a breakwater and piers, together with the shops and equipment essential for the repair and maintenance of the increasing number of torpedo craft and submarines that we are progressively acquiring.

120. Regarding (b): In view of the fact that Key West occupies a position close to the important strategic area comprising the Caribbean Sea and the Gulf of Mexico, the board is of the opinion that there should be an assured reserve supply of coal, fuel oil, and ammunition at this point. As has been pointed out in this report, this can be most advantageously accomplished at Key West by the development of Fleming Key.

121. The fact that Key West is on the direct lane between all seaport oil-pipe terminals of the Mexican, Texas, Oklahoma, and Louisiana oil fields and the seaports of the Atlantic and northern Europe ought to make it possible for that section to obtain a more assured supply of fuel oil at a more reasonable cost than could be furnished any other naval station that we possess on the Atlantic coast that is in close proximity to the sea.

Then the board concludes:

122. The board is of the opinion that the strategic position occupied by Key West requires that the question of its development be given early and serious consideration by the department. In this connection the board invites attention to the following extract from a letter addressed to the Secretary of War by the Secretary of the Navy, dated March 16, 1912, viz:

"The strategic position of Key West makes it the logical base for the torpedo flotilla that would control the northern entrance to the Gulf; and it might easily become a most important base for large ships in the case of operations extending from northward toward the Panama Canal."

This report is signed by John R. Edwards, George R. Evans, William G. DuBose, Archibald L. Parsons.

The recommendations contained in this report and the recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy, dated March 16, 1912, are completely ignored by the action taken with regard to this amendment.

Some question has been raised as to the estimate for this appropriation. I have a letter, which I will ask to have printed in the RECORD, dated April 14, 1914, to the effect that the department, in its estimates to Congress for the fiscal year 1914, included an item of $100,000 toward the breakwater at the Key West Naval Station. So that objection is not well founded. There was an estimate made in 1914 for this very identical appropriation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission to do so will be granted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS,
Washington, D. C., April 14, 1914.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: 1. Referring to your letter of April 13, 1914, the bureau is inclosing herewith one copy of its report, without appendices, No. 8587, of November 27, 1912, relative to the development of Key West; one copy of plan No. 60577, accompanying this report; and one copy of a congressional document in which will be found, on page 173, the report of the inspection board for shore stations on the Naval Station, Key West, under date of August 9, 1913.

2. The department, in its estimates to Congress for the fiscal year 1914, included an item of $100,000 toward the breakwater at the Key West Naval Station. This item was not included in the appropriation act. Estimates for improvements to Key West were not submitted by the department for the fiscal year 1915.

Sincerely, yours,

H. R. STANFORD.

Mr. FLETCHER. This amendment provides for the appropriation of $100,000 toward this breakwater recommended by these various boards and by the Secretary of the Navy, but absolutely ignored in the action upon this bill. There can be, it seems to me, no possible excuse for ignoring the natural conditions there obtaining, the absolute necessity of making this station a secondary naval base for supplies and communications at that point, which, as all these reports indicate, will become increasingly needful.

I regret exceedingly, Mr. President, that the matter has been treated as it has been by the action of the conferees on this bill. The improvement must come; it is needed now; it has been urged for years, and it ought to have been taken care of, because there is no possible argument to the contrary. The objection that the estimate was not made for it is not well taken, nor is any other objection to it well taken.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will yield to me, I am curious to know why he refers to it as a "secondary naval base." Why not call it a "primary naval base"?

Mr. FLETCHER. As I understand, the primary naval base is being developed at Guantanamo.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why not make Florida the primary base?

Mr. FLETCHER. It deserves to be made that, and for that matter I do not know why the primary base was developed at Guantanamo; but Guantanamo was supposed to be the naval base in the Caribbean Sea. For that reason I have mentioned Key West as the secondary base. I myself am in favor of making the primary base on our coast, but perhaps that can not be done at this time. At any rate, this improvement ought to be made; whether Key West is the primary base or the secondary base, this breakwater is essential, and it must be made. It must be taken care of, and I think beyond question it will be taken care of, but why should we neglect these claims for this improvement and why should the recommendations of the department and of these boards be ignored in this way? That is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, it has been rumored that it is impossible to get fresh drinking water in Guantanamo. Is that true?

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not really advised as to that, I will say to the Senator; but I have heard such a statement. I really do not know, however, as to its correctness.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, there is but little that I can add to the statement made by my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] upon this item, which has gone out in conference. The House bill did not carry the item; it was added by the Senate committee and agreed to by the Senate.

In 1910 Secretary Meyer became enamored of Guantanamo as a naval base. I may say, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], that the development of Guantanamo has not met with the approval, as I understand, of the present Secretary of the Navy, although perhaps he has not come to a definite conclusion about it. The objections to Guantanamo are, first, that it is upon foreign soil; second, that it is no better than stations already established upon our own soil; and, third, that in the event of a war in the Caribbean Sea or an attack upon the Gulf of Mexico, it is admitted, even by Secretary Meyer, that in order for a foreign fleet to reach the Gulf of Mexico it must pass either through the Florida Straits or the Yucatan Channel, both commanded by Key West and the naval station there. The objection to making Key West a navy yard for the building and repair of ships as against the idea of retaining it as a naval station is due to the fact that it is difficult to fortify it.

In Secretary Meyer's report in 1910, Mr. President, he recommended the closing down of every navy yard south of Norfolk. He undertook to wipe out of existence all navy yards and stations, except Key West alone, covering a seacoast on the Atlantic of a thousand miles and more and of sixteen hundred miles on the Gulf of Mexico, and to substitute for them a naval base at Guantanamo. But even Secretary Meyer never recommended and never conceived the idea that it would be possible for the Navy Department ever to get along without maintaining and upbuilding and completing the plans for a first-class naval station at Key West. In his scheme of things he would have six navy yards within a total distance of 900 miles on the north Atlantic coast. The remainder of the coast would be without a navy yard and the Gulf of Mexico, and consequently the great Mississippi Valley, would be unprotected, and not only that, but the advantage of these ports that had for 86 years appealed to Secretaries of the Navy for use in time of war was brushed aside by Secretary Meyer. His idea was to have eventually only three navy yards, but he was unwilling, or thought it inadvisable, perhaps, to suggest which of the three, from Norfolk to Portsmouth, should be abandoned.

So he did not go to the extent of carrying out his plan in the beginning, thereby having the advantage, whether intended or not, to make it to the interest of the six north Atlantic navy yards to approve the scheme, and thereby have their united support; and after he had all but six abolished, he thought he could stand the opposition of the other sections of the country and the opposition of the three navy yards on the north Atlantic coast which he desired to abolish.

Mr. President, this is not a question of maintaining a navy yard for the building of ships. Perhaps it is true that we do not need for that purpose more than one Government navy yard, but that question is not involved in this amendment. What is involved in this amendment is this: Especially at this time and for the future our fleets will be called upon to go as often as anywhere else into the Caribbean Sea, into the neighborhood of the Panama Canal. To have a port of call in that vicinity to which to send torpedo vessels or battleships for supplies is very desirable, and Key West is the only convenient port. By establishing a naval base at Key West vessels in the region of the Panama Canal will save on a round trip about 3,000 miles.

There is no objection urged by anybody who has ever investigated this question. On the contrary, Secretary Meyer in 1910, in his report to the President recommending the abolishment of these navy yards, with reference to Key West had this to say:

> The Gulf of Mexico has two entrances, Florida Straits, commanded by Key West, and the Yucatan passage at the west end of Cuba, which is some 30 miles wide. These two entrances may easily be guarded by our own cruisers to prevent forays or attacks on the Gulf coast by smaller scattered cruisers. It is inconceivable that an enemy's battleships will ever penetrate the Gulf of Mexico unless our fleet in the Caribbean has been defeated.

It was inconceivable to him upon condition, however, that a navy yard and station were maintained at Key West. Of course it was not inconceivable that they could go to any part of the Gulf of Mexico if there was nothing there to stop them. He says again:

> It would seem evident that of the naval stations on the Gulf coast, Key West alone should be retained. The geographical situation of Key West as a base of supply to the fleet in the Caribbean leads one to this view. It is also a convenient point for the supply and quick repair of small gunboats and torpedo craft operating in the Caribbean Sea. * * * It should be pointed out here that in time of war there are two distinct lines of communication around Cuba from Guantanamo to Key West and the cities of the Gulf coast.

Then, with that idea in mind, Secretary Meyer sent to Key West as his representative to examine the harbor Admiral Stanford, who, in 1912, made his recommendation to the Secretary, and thereafter Secretary Meyer, in his recommendations to the Committee on Naval Affairs for the fiscal year 1914, requested of the House the identical amendment which the Senate put on this bill.

Mr. President, it is said by the House conferees that the objection to this item is that it has not been estimated for; that the Secretary of the Navy has not asked for it. The Secretary did ask for it last year; and to those who have made inquiry the reason why it was not granted last year is apparent. The War Department has its boats at Key West; the Treasury Department has its revenue cutters there; and various other departments of the Government have their craft there. When the War Department saw that the Secretary of the Navy was about to get an appropriation for the construction of a breakwater, it made a claim that whatever improvement was made there ought to take into consideration the War Department; and therefore the Secretary requested of his district engineer a report as to the necessities of commerce and as to whether the commerce of that port would justify an appropriation for the War Department. Why, Mr. President, it was a foregone conclusion that the district engineer would report to the Secretary that it was not needed as affecting commerce, because the harbor there is pretty deep already. They have three harbors ranging from 22 to 34 feet, and the outer harbor, where the battleships congregate, where they met before the War with Spain; where they assembled and stopped on their way to Vera Cruz; and where they call now, as Admiral Stanford reported, has an area of 6 miles adjacent to the city of Key West with a depth of water of 34 feet. There is plenty of water there to meet any requirements of commerce.

The objections urged by the House conferees, as I understand them, were, first, that the present Secretary did not recommend this, overlooking the fact that the board of inspectors appointed by him did unanimously recommend it in language as strong as it can be made and which was read to the Senate by my colleague. The other objection urged by the chairman of the House conferees was that a battleship could not come up to the dock; that this 34-foot area did not extend up to the naval station.

I submit that that is no objection. When battleships go into deep-water ports now the only reason they ever go to a dock is for the convenience of the crew in going ashore and returning. I think the House conferees will ascertain, if they will inquire at the Navy Department, that this objection is frivolous. Battleships do not go to a berth to take on supplies or fuel or coal, and for a very good reason. Their coal bunkers are small, and if they could get to a dock loading could be done upon one side only. If, instead, they remain out in the stream, as these ships do when they go to Key West to take on coal or oil, lighters come alongside, so that they can load from both sides at once. Yet that is the only objection that can be urged by the House at this time, when ships are calling there every day, in view of the troubles with Mexico—that the battleships could not come inside this breakwater that it is intended to make. That is the only objection.

I have made this statement to the Senate because it is inevitable, if the good of the Navy and the convenience and necessities of the ships are to be considered, that this station shall be maintained and improved. It is only a question of time.

I appreciate the action of the conferees upon the part of the Senate, who refused to yield to this amendment and sent it back to the House twice. I desire to express my appreciation of their action. I have the confidence to believe that if the House had been acquainted with the circumstances, and also if there had been enough of the Members of the House there to have made an expression of the will of the House, this item would have remained in the bill. The weather is hot, however, and there were only about 100 Members over there to vote on the important questions involved in this conference, and we have to do the best we can.

Before I take my seat I desire also to express my appreciation of the interest taken in this item by the Representatives from other States, especially Representative MOORE, of Pennsylvania, and Representative TRIBBLE, of Georgia.

Mr. FLETCHER. In connection with this matter I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter of December 7, 1912, from the Secretary of the Navy to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce; a letter from Mr. Curtis, Acting Secretary of the Treasury Department, to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, dated January 9, 1913; and a letter from the Chief of Engineers, Gen. Bixby, to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, dated December 26, 1912.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 7, 1912.

SIR: 1. This department desires to have certain improvements made in the harbor of Key West, in order to provide a suitable naval station for the use of torpedo craft, submarines, and small cruisers and to serve as a base of supplies and communications. This scheme of development affects not only the Navy but other executive departments having reservations at Key West.

2. The various executive departments having reservations at Key West adjacent to each other are:

Navy: Naval station proper.

Treasury: Customhouse and post-office building, located within the limits of the naval station at its north end.

United States marine hospital, on a reservation just outside the southern boundary of the naval station.

Station ship of Revenue-Cutter Service; no office on shore.

Commerce and Labor: Lighthouse Establishment pier, with the naval station at its north end, between Piers A and B and opposite customhouse.

Agriculture: Weather Bureau on a reservation adjoining the reservation of the United States Marine-Hospital Service.

War: Fort Taylor Reservation, south of the naval station and extending from the reservation of the Marine-Hospital Service to and including Fort Taylor.

3. The most important improvement and one which will be of advantage to the various executive departments of the Government is the construction of a breakwater to form a semi-inclosed basin dredged to a depth of 20 feet to 22 feet, mean low water, as a protection for light-draft vessels in times of heavy weather and hurricanes.

4. The water front at the naval station, including the naval piers already constructed, the Lighthouse Establishment pier, and the Army wharf at Fort Taylor, is entirely unprotected from heavy seas from a southerly direction. In fact, these berths are dangerous during heavy weather except when the wind is blowing from the north to the southeast. During 1909 and 1910 there were two hurricanes in which the velocity of the wind reached 80–100 miles an hour from directions producing the most dangerous conditions to vessels moored or berthed in this locality.

5. Man-of-war anchorage at the upper end of the channel at Key West and 1 to 2 miles from the station, although exposed to some extent to seas from a southerly direction, is the only harbor of refuge at Key West and is used for this purpose by commercial vessels in bad weather. This anchorage carries a depth of 20 to 28 feet, mean low water. Its distance from the station, its limited area, and the needs of commercial shipping render it impracticable to reserve any portion of it for naval purposes.

6. Further development of the naval station and adjacent water front will be of little value unless at least a semi-inclosed basin is provided not only as a protection against heavy seas and hurricane winds, but to make it possible to retain the dredged depths at piers and along the water front. Under existing conditions storms from a southerly direction carry sand around Fort Taylor, rapidly filling in such areas as have already been dredged.

7. The basin proposed will provide a perfectly safe anchorage under all possible conditions of winds or sea for small vessels not only of the Navy but of the Army, Lighthouse, Customs, Marine-Hospital and Revenue-Cutter Services. Without a breakwater and the inclosed basin the water front occupied by the several executive departments can not be developed to provide a safe anchorage or berthing space for torpedo craft or light-draft vessels.

8. The dredging of the basin will provide considerable new land in front of the reservations of the Weather Bureau, the Marine-Hospital Service and the Army. A part of this made ground will be required by the Navy to give access to the proposed piers and the berthing space along the quay wall. If desired the Marine-Hospital Service can have access to a berth in front of its reservation.

9. The proposed items of improvement include the following:

Breakwater. The breakwater as desired will extend from Fort Taylor at right angles to the present pier headline and along the pier headline toward the north end of the station, a total distance of about 2,900 feet, inclosing a basin of approximately 55 acres, with entrance opposite the present marine railway. The length of this basin will be approximately 2,200 feet and the width 1,200 feet to 900 feet. The breakwater will be so constructed as to provide access from the station to vessels moored along its face and to furnish the Army with wharf facilities on that portion leading out from Fort Taylor.

Dredging. It is proposed to dredge the basin formed by the breakwater to a depth of 20 feet to 22 feet mean low water. The present depths vary from 6 feet along the line of the proposed bulkhead and quay wall to 20 feet at the breakwater. Part of the material can be used for filling in behind the bulkhead and quay walls on the Army reservation and possibly on areas within the city limits.

Bulkhead and Quay Walls. It is proposed to construct 2,200 linear feet, more or less, of bulkhead or quay walls from the end of the present quay wall at the naval station to Fort Taylor. These walls will be required for berthing space for vessels and to retain the filling over the low areas. An additional bulkhead approximately 1,000 feet long on the opposite side of Fort Taylor will also be required to retain the fill.

10. A blue print showing the proposed harbor improvements accompanies this letter, which is respectfully submitted for the careful consideration of your committee, with the recommendation that the necessary legislation be enacted to accomplish these improvements.

11. With these harbor improvements assured the department contemplates the systematic development of the navy yard at Key West for the purposes outlined in "1" of this letter.

Respectfully,

G. VON L. MEYER,
Secretary of the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN,
Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 9, 1913.

The CHAIRMAN,
Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to refer to the communication of the Secretary of the Navy, addressed to you under date of December 7, 1912, regarding the improvement of the harbor at Key West, Fla.

The scheme of improvement, which includes a breakwater, as outlined in said communication will be of material benefit to the Treasury Department, as it will provide a safeguard to the Government property on the water front during the prevalence of the tropical storms and hurricanes incident to the latitude of Key West. It will also afford a safe anchorage for vessels of the Revenue-Cutter Service and other vessels under the control of this department.

For these reasons I desire to add my recommendations to those of the Secretary of the Navy.

Respectfully,

J. F. CURTIS,
Acting Secretary.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, December 26, 1912.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: 1. I am returning to you herewith letter from the Secretary of the Navy, dated December 7, 1912, regarding certain improvements at Key West which he desires to have made, which you left with me last Monday, the 23d.

2. The main object of the proposed improvements appears to be as stated at the beginning of the Secretary's letter—"to provide a suitable naval station for the use of torpedo craft, submarines, and small cruisers and to serve as a base of supplies and communications."

3. Incidentally some other executive department having reservations at Key West might be somewhat benefited, but it is very doubtful if general commerce would be benefited to any appreciable degree. The location of the basin is such that it might be useful for a harbor of refuge for light-draft commercial vessels, but this use might be impracticable if the basin should be utilized by the Navy to the extent which their plans seem to indicate.

4. The cost of the proposed work will run into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, if not into the millions.

5. On account of the character of the work, it appears to me that it is a work which should properly be taken care of in the naval appropriation bill; but if you desire to consider it in the river and harbor bill, I suggest that a preliminary examination be called for, and I am inclosing herewith a draft of an item which will bring out the desired information.

Very respectfully,

W. H. BIXBY,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BURTON. There are one or two questions I should like to ask about the report. Where has the report been published—in what copy of the RECORD?

Mr. TILLMAN. It was in the RECORD some time last week. I do not remember the day.

Mr. BURTON. It is not in any of the recent editions.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, it was printed. The report was disagreed to in the House, and the report that came back here the second time was substantially the same as the first report, except on three items on which there was a disagreement. The three items in disagreement were the sale of the two battleships, the breakwater at Key West, Fla., and the dry dock at Norfolk, Va.

Mr. BURTON. May I ask what was done in reference to the item of the dry dock at Norfolk?

Mr. SWANSON. There were two votes on it in the House, and the House insisted on its disagreement to the item, and consequently it was eliminated.

Mr. BURTON. What was done with the second item, amendment No. 46, providing for the grade of acting chaplain, and so forth?

Mr. SWANSON. That was agreed to in conference, and has already been adopted.

Mr. BURTON. That is a part of the bill?

Mr. SWANSON. That is a part of the bill, having been previously agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. That has already been agreed upon, then?

Mr. SWANSON. That has already been agreed upon by both Houses.

Mr. BURTON. That was before the disagreement which was limited to but three items?

Mr. SWANSON. That was agreed to in the first conference, and that conference report was rejected by the House. It was also agreed to in the second conference, and has ceased to be a subject of disagreement between the two Houses.

Mr. BURTON. I was unfortunately absent at that time. I ask the same question in regard to the armor-plant amendment No. 67.

Mr. SWANSON. That was agreed to and included in the conference report which has been adopted, with the appropriation reduced from $500,000 to $200,000, which is all that will be needed at the present time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I was about to present and to ask for the adoption of the conference report on the Diplomatic and Consular bill, but I will not do so until the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] comes in, as he is interested in one of the items.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of the river and harbor bill, House bill 13811.

Mr. BRISTOW. I must object to that. I think the calendar should be given attention.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move, then, that the Senate resume the consideration of House bill 13811, commonly known as the river and harbor bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. I make the point of order that such a motion is not in order before the hour of 1 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order must be sustained.

Mr. SIMMONS. I confess I do not see the ground for the ruling.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. The Chair is examining the rule.

Mr. SIMMONS. The morning business, as I understand, had been closed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule reads:

> Until the morning business shall have been concluded, and so announced from the Chair, or until the hour of 1 o'clock has arrived, no motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject upon the calendar shall be entertained by the presiding officer, unless by unanimous consent; and if such consent be given the motion shall not be subject to amendment, and shall be decided without debate upon the merits of the subject proposed to be taken up.

Mr. SIMMONS. That seems to be in the alternative.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It becomes, therefore, a question for determination as to what the word "or" means—whether it means "or" or "nor."

Mr. SMOOT. I think it has been universally held by the Chair that no motion can be made to take up a bill until 1 o'clock. A bill may be taken up by unanimous consent before 1 o'clock, and after 1 o'clock a motion may be made.

Mr. SIMMONS. That may be the Senator's notion of the practice, but I do not understand that to be the rule.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the rule is very plain.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand the rule to be in the alternative.

Mr. SMOOT. The rule is very plain. It does not say "and"; it says "or."

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; "or." That puts it in the alternative. The Chair has announced that the morning business has been concluded, and under the rule I think it is competent to move to proceed to the consideration of any bill. The rule says:

> Until the morning business shall have been concluded, and so announced from the chair, or until the hour of 1 o'clock—

That is to say, in either contingency—either after the morning business has been concluded, and so announced by the Chair, or after the hour of 1 o'clock—the motion would be in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, if the contention of the Senator from North Carolina is correct, after 1 o'clock we could move to take up any bill on the calendar and displace morning business, if morning business were not concluded.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that is exactly what we can do.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think that would be unfortunate.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to Rule XVI. I suppose everybody has arrived at a definite conclusion as to what the word "or" means in Rule XVI. It is used in exactly the same way as the word "or" is used in Rule VII, paragraph 3. Rule XVI says:

> And no amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation or act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session—

Now, again:

> Or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate.

The word "or" as used in Rule XVI is used in the same sense as in Rule VII. The way to take up a bill before 1 o'clock is by unanimous consent, and one objection prevents it. I admit that, under the rule, after 1 o'clock a motion may be made to take up a bill, and then it is in the power of the Senate to decide by vote if the bill is to be considered.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator's contention would be absolutely correct, provided "or" were given the same significance as "and"; but it is clear to my mind that the word "or" here is to be given its ordinary significance, and its ordinary significance is that this motion may be made in two conditions of things. First, it may be made, provided the morning business has been completed and the Chair has so announced, before 1 o'clock; or, second, it may be made after 1 o'clock, in either one case or the other. If the Chair has announced the morning business closed, this motion then may be made before 1 o'clock, or it may be made as a matter of course after 1 o'clock.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the wording is perfectly clear, because it says "Until the morning business shall have been concluded and so announced from the Chair." That is one proposition; and the Chair has announced this morning that the morning business was closed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not done that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Chair has not done that. I was going to make that point.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Chair had done so.

Mr. SIMMONS. I certainly understood the Chair had so announced.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has done no such thing. We were on the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, when, as a matter of privilege, the conference report was taken up.

Mr. SIMMONS. I certainly understood the Chair had announced that morning business had been closed, and that immediately thereafter the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] called up the conference report on the naval bill.

Mr. OLIVER. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will not be found in the RECORD.

Mr. OLIVER. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the introduction of bills and joint resolutions. [A pause.] If there be no further bills or joint resolutions to be introduced, concurrent and other resolutions are in order. [A pause.] Morning business is closed.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13811, commonly known as the rivers and harbors bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, under paragraph 3 of Rule VII, I insist that the Senator has no right to make that motion, and that the only thing in order at this time, unless by unanimous consent, is to take up the calendar under Rule VIII for consideration until 1 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is just three minutes of 1 o'clock.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I do not want to take up the calendar now, because there are just a few minutes left, but I do this that the RECORD may be clear as to the ruling on this motion. If the Senator from North Carolina will ask unanimous consent to take up the bill, I shall not object.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did ask unanimous consent, and there was an objection; and I desire to insist upon my motion, because upon an examination of the rule I believe I am clearly within the rule.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I should like to have the Chair decide the matter.

Mr. SIMMONS. As a lawyer I can not see that it is possible to give the rule any other construction than that I may make the motion before 1 o'clock if the morning business shall have been concluded, and the Chair has so announced it, or I may make it after 1 o'clock, although the morning business might not have been closed by 1 o'clock.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question that the Senator can make it after 1 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair believes rulings have been made on both sides of this question, and the Chair thinks the present occupant has ruled on both sides of this question and has decided it both ways. The Chair is not going to decide the question again.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SIMMONS. I make the point of no quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is going to leave the settlement of this question to the Senate, and the Chair will then obey the decision of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Hitchcock	Oliver	Simmons
Borah	Hughes	Overman	Smith, Ariz.
Brady	James	Page	Smith, Ga.
Bristow	Jones	Perkins	Smith, Md.
Bryan	Kern	Pittman	Smoot
Burleigh	Lane	Poindexter	Swanson
Burton	Lea, Tenn.	Pomerene	Thompson
Camden	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Thornton
Catron	Lewis	Reed	Townsend
Chamberlain	Lippitt	Robinson	Vardaman
Chilton	Martine, N. J.	Root	Warren
Crawford	Myers	Saulsbury	Weeks
Cummins	Nelson	Shafroth	West
Dillingham	Newlands	Sheppard	White
Fletcher	Norris	Shields
Gore	O'Gorman	Shively

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] is necessarily absent. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. MYERS. I announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. WALSH]. He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. This announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SIMMONS (at 1 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13811, commonly known as the rivers and harbors bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13811) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask that the Senate may dispense with the formal reading of the bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. I object to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at the top of page 25, and the reading was concluded.

[Mr. SIMMONS addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 15613.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in Committee of the Whole, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee. All in favor of the amendment will say "aye." [A pause.] Those opposed "no." [A pause.] The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to. The bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BURTON. Do I understand that the amendment was agreed upon at this time before it was heard?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question was put and there were no "noes."

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Kenyon	Page	Smith, Ga.
Brady	Kern	Perkins	Smith, Md.
Burton	Lane	Poindexter	Smith, Mich.
Camden	Lea, Tenn.	Pomerene	Smoot
Catron	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Stone
Chamberlain	Lewis	Robinson	Thompson
Crawford	Lippitt	Root	Tillman
Cummins	McCumber	Saulsbury	Townsend
Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Vardaman
Fletcher	Newlands	Sheppard	Warren
Hitchcock	Norris	Sherman	Weeks
Hollis	O'Gorman	Shively	West
James	Oliver	Simmons	White
Jones	Overman	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

Mr. HOLLIS. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] and to state that he is paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I understand that the committee amendment has been adopted. Is that correct?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa is correct.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is correct?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then is the amendment or the bill now open to amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is not open to further amendment in Committee of the Whole unless the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was not present just at the moment—at 2 o'clock. I understood that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] was in the midst of a discussion of one part of the bill, and I did not anticipate that action would be taken upon the amendment instantly.

As the Senator from Nevada knows, I introduced five amendments to the bill, and they were referred by the Senate to the Judiciary Committee, and the Judiciary Committee now has them under consideration. I assumed that there would be no vote on the amendment of the committee until the Judiciary Committee made its report. I do not know that the Senator from Nevada agreed that that should be so, but nevertheless it ought to be so. Therefore I move that the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted be reconsidered.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will inquire how the Senator from Iowa voted on the question?

Mr. CUMMINS. There was no vote taken as I am informed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was a vote taken.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not vote at all. I was not present in the Chamber at that time.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I will state that I was present when the bill was called up. I expected that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] would claim the floor to address the Senate, but he did not, and no one did claim the floor, and the Vice President then, without any suggestion from me or anyone else, proceeded in the usual order with the bill. The result is that the committee amendment has been substituted for the House text. Of course the next step would be to proceed in the Senate, and there further amendments can be offered.

I certainly have no disposition to oppose the motion of the Senator from Iowa, provided there is anyone who wishes to address the Senate upon the bill or to propose any amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Therefore, if there is such a desire—and I understand the Senator from Iowa would prefer to present his amendments in Committee of the Whole instead of in the Senate——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have certain amendments that I desire to offer to the bill, and I thought that there was common consent that there should be no vote taken upon the committee amendment until the Judiciary Committee reported upon those amendments, they having been referred to that committee by the Senate. I understand, of course, that I can offer them when the bill reaches the Senate; but that is contrary to my understanding of the general agreement.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Of course, I will not regard the proceeding as being closed in Committee of the Whole, and as one who voted, or is supposed to have voted, I move for a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada moves to reconsider the vote whereby the committee amendment was adopted.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If I may be allowed a word, I wish to repeat what I stated in my opening argument, that it is very desirable that this legislation should be passed immediately, because the other trust legislation will probably have reference to it, and it is all-important that in passing upon supplementary legislation the Senate should know whether this bill has been adopted or not. So I am inclined to press the consideration of the bill, and I hope that all who desire to address the Senate upon it will prepare themselves within a reasonable time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I was, as the Senator from Iowa stated, in the midst of some remarks upon this bill when its consideration was resumed to-day and the vote was submitted to the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to express a very earnest hope that the Senator from Nevada will not undertake to press the bill to an immediate vote. We are working on the amendments in the Judiciary Committee which were referred to that committee, and I think it would simply transfer the entire discussion to the Senate instead of permitting the discussion in the Committee of the Whole of the Senate. We are still working there, and if we perfect our work we can not stay here. We will be here this afternoon, but we have been in almost continuous session at work upon the measure before us in the Judiciary Committee. The bill of the Senator from Nevada becomes necessarily involved in the work that we are doing there, the amendments that we are considering there apply to this bill, and the further work that we do upon the Clayton bill depends upon the direction given to certain amendments that will be recommended to the substitute of the Senator from Nevada.

I do not believe we are wasting time; I believe we are gaining time by a careful investigation and study by the committee; and I do not think we ought to expect a vote on the substitute of the Senator from Nevada certainly for quite a number of days.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have not been urging a vote, but I must say that I can not assent to tie up the action of the Senate, when the bill has been reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, with the action of the Judiciary Committee. I realize that that committee has very important functions and is discharging them, and I would be very glad if collaboration could be secured between that committee and the Interstate Commerce Committee regarding pending trust legislation. But I am impressed with the importance of early action upon this bill, and, with a proper consideration for those who desire to speak and to present amendments, I shall feel it to be my duty not to complicate this bill with the action of any other committee.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BORAH. I am not seeking the floor except to make a statement, and I ask the Senator to defer for a moment.

I was in the midst of some remarks on this bill when the vote was taken, and I did not object for the simple reason that I do not propose to debate the bill a moment at a time when I will be standing in the way of a vote. So long as it is before the Senate and there is no probability of a vote being taken, I have some views I want to offer, but I am anxious myself to see the legislation proceeded with, and whenever the chairman thinks that he is ready to vote or can get a vote I will yield the floor. I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, can I bring before the Senate a question of privilege?

The VICE PRESIDENT. A question of privilege is always in order.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the Committee on Foreign Relations has at this time pending before it a treaty between the United States and the Republic of Colombia, and also a tentative treaty which is in course of negotiation between this Government and the Government of Nicaragua. The Secretary of State has given to the committee the general outline of the treaty under consideration between this Government and Nicaragua, with a view to counseling with the committee respecting it.

Mr. President, it is a general rule of the Senate that proceedings had in the executive sessions of committees are to be held and treated as confidential. I think that is a good rule as applied to committees generally, but especially should that rule be adhered to and strictly enforced in the Committee on Foreign Relations. That committee deals with the most delicate questions with which our Government is concerned. The work of that committee affects our most intimate relations with all the sovereign nations of the earth. It is a matter of regret that an impression prevails in many quarters that we conduct our diplomatic affairs with less dignity and with less regard for the delicate nature of international conferences and negotiations than other nations; that ours is too much a sort of shirtsleeve diplomacy. I am unwilling that any act of the Foreign Relations Committee should impart added color to this unfortunate impression.

Mr. President, during the consideration of the two matters I have adverted to as being now before the committee, some one connected with the committee in some capacity has been guilty of an act which, to say the least, is an act of gross impropriety. Garbled and inaccurate statements have appeared in the press as to what has been said and done in the executive sessions of the committee with respect to these two treaties. A few days since, on the invitation of the Foreign Relations Committee, two gentlemen now in Washington representing the Government of Nicaragua, one the minister from that Republic and the other a former minister of finance and now the confidential financial agent of Nicaragua, accredited to Washington to work in conjunction with the resident minister in promoting interests of great importance to his country, came before the committee to express themselves respecting conditions in Nicaragua and as to the proposed treaty between their Government and this. They said at the outset that they would speak with freedom because they understood that what occurred before the committee in executive session would be treated in the highest degree as confidential. They had a right to expect that no publicity would be given to anything they might say to the committee. But we find that some one who must have some connection with the committee has been guilty of the inexcusable offense of giving out to the public things that occurred when those gentlemen were before the committee. I regard this as a most disgraceful performance. No one connected with that committee in any capacity can give out the confidential business of the committee in the way this was done without branding himself with betrayal and dishonor. Who did it? It is impossible to believe that these representatives of Nicaragua after leaving the committee went out and told any newspaper reporter what occurred or what they said. It is also inconceivable that the Secretary of State, who was present during the hearings to which I have alluded, could be guilty of violating the confidence of the committee or be willing on his own account to publicly discuss a tentative international agreement. Moreover, the very character and tone of the newspaper publications forbid the slightest suspicion that the Secretary or the Nicaraguan representatives are responsible for what was published. Manifestly the blame is on some other head.

Mr. President, I was this morning directed by the committee to make the statement which I will now read:

That all newspaper reports of what has occurred in the Committee on Foreign Relations in regard to the Nicaraguan and Colombian treaties are unauthorized and inaccurate, and are, moreover, unworthy of belief, because whoever gave out the alleged information attempted to betray the confidence of the committee and of the Government, and deliberately violated his word of honor.

And now, Mr. President, by the authority and under the direction of the committee, I propose the following resolution, which I ask may be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri submits a resolution, which the Secretary will read.

The resolution (S. Res. 407) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered to investigate and ascertain from whom information of any business transacted before said committee in executive session relating to international affairs is given out, and to prosecute said investigation said committee is hereby authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers, to issue subpœnas, to administer oaths, and to employ stenographers to take testimony, at not exceeding $1 per printed page, the expenses of said investigation to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate on warrants signed by the chairman of said committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator if in the investigation the committee is making the evidence is printed? Has the committee been having it printed?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Have the copies as they are printed daily been sent to Members of the Senate?

Mr. STONE. The prints that have been made are confidential prints, made from day to day, for the use of the committee while the hearings are in progress. They have not been distributed to Members of the Senate at large.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the chairman's judgment of the propriety of supplying Members of the Senate as well as members of the Foreign Relations Committee with this evidence.

Mr. STONE. When the committee is through with the hearings and has disposed of the business, the question as to having the hearings printed for the general use of the Senate will, I presume, be considered by the committee. But as these hearings are confidential and relate to international questions of a more or less delicate nature, the committee is pursuing the usual course of having the hearings printed from day to day, so that the members of the committee may this morning have before them what was heard and reported on yesterday. I hardly think it would be advisable to go further than that at this time. The business is still in the hands of the committee, and there is no more reason for giving out the daily hearings which are taken down and printed for the convenience of the committee than there would be for giving out verbally mere oral hearings not taken down or printed.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator—confining my question now entirely to one proposition that I understand is before the committee, the Nicaraguan treaty—is there any reason why the Members of the Senate should not get the evidence as it is being taken on that question?

Mr. STONE. I have answered that question.

Mr. NORRIS. I supposed the Senator's answer had a broader significance, and that he was referring to questions generally. I am confining my question now to the one particular case.

Mr. STONE. The only hearings that are being had at this time relate to the two treaties referred to, and especially to the proposed or tentative treaty with Nicaragua.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not know and I could not deduce from what the Senator said that there were any other hearings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the request of the Senator from Missouri for unanimous consent that the resolution may at this time be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. NORRIS subsequently said: When the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] was discussing the question relative to matters pending before the Foreign Relations Committee I was about to submit, in connection with the resolution which he offered, a resolution which I drew up while he was on the floor. It seems to me—although I may, of course, be wrong—that there is no reason why the testimony given before the Committee on Foreign Relations should not be accessible to every Member of the Senate; and, for that matter, I do not see any reason why it should not be public; but, at least, Members of the Senate ought to be allowed to read the testimony that I suppose is being taken for the purpose of giving them light, so that they may be able to vote intelligently upon the treaty when it gets before the Senate; and unless we can see the evidence and read it, it certainly can not have any effect on us.

It seems to me from attempts that I have made and that several other Senators have made, without success, to secure copies of the testimony that there is quite a division among members of the committee as to whether even the Members of the Senate, to say nothing of the public, should be given this evidence as it is printed. I therefore ask unanimous consent to introduce out of order and to have referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations the resolution which I send to the Secretary's desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska presents a resolution, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 408), as follows:

Resolved, That daily copies of the evidence taken by the Committee on Foreign Relations on the subject of the treaty with the Government of Nicaragua be sent to Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution to the extent of referring it to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I did not so understand. I understood the request was to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for its consideration to the extent of referring it to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Is there objection?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the resolution will lie over for a day.

Mr. NORRIS. I will ask the Senator from Texas if he objects to the resolution being referred to the committee?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all. I thought the request was for its present consideration.

Mr. NORRIS. That is not the request. I thought the Senator from Texas did not understand the matter.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the Senator desires the resolution referred to the committee, I withdraw my objection. The reason I objected to its consideration was that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], who has been discussing the matter, was not present.

Mr. NORRIS. The request I made was to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Then I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas withdraws his objection. In the absence of objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me to submit a conference report?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. I send to the desk the report of the committee of conference on the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A conference report may be presented at any time. The Senator from North Carolina asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report which he has just presented. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15762) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 9, 10, 12, 19, 22, and 25.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 8, 11, 13, 14, 17, 18, 20, 24, 26, 27, and 28, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"INTERNATIONAL BOUNDARY COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

"To enable the commission to continue its work under the treaties of 1884, 1889, and 1905, $15,000: Provided, That $10,000 thereof is made immediately available to resume and continue the work relating to the distribution of water, under the direction of the Secretary of State, and as authorized by and in pursuance to the protocol of May 6, 1896, between the United States and Mexico.

"The commissioner appointed by the Secretary of State under article 21 of the treaty of 1848, and reaffirmed under article 7 of the treaty of 1853, and article 5 of the treaty of 1884, and article 8 of the treaty of 1889, to carry on this work, is hereby authorized and directed to pay the salaries, compensation, wages, and allowances heretofore authorized or approved by the Secretary of State, and any and all persons employed by or under the direction of the commissioner appointed by the Secretary of State to study the questions in connection with the distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande, from the date to which such salaries, compensation, wages, and allowances were last paid up to and including the 30th day of June, 1914, or until said employees shall be separated from the service; and the appropriation made by the diplomatic and consular appropriation act, approved February 28, 1913, 'To enable the commission to continue its work under the treaties of 1884, 1889, and 1905,' is hereby reappropriated and made available for the payments herein authorized and directed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"INTERNATIONAL PRISON COMMISSION.

"For subscription of the United States as an adhering member of the International Prison Commission, and the expenses of a commission, including preparation of reports, $2,550."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 16 of the bill, in lines 20, 21, and 22, strike out the following: "and the expenses of the United States delegate in attending the meetings of the commission"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For the expenses of the arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain, in accordance with the special agreement concluded for that purpose August 18, 1910, and the schedules of claims thereunder, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, as follows:

"Salaries and expenses of the tribunal: For the payment by the United States of one-half of the following expenses: For three arbitrators for three months, at $1,200 each per month, $10,800; stenographer for arbitrators for three months, at $100 per month, $300; messenger for three months, at $60 per month, $180; traveling expenses of arbitrators, $2,000; reporting proceedings, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and for printing, stationery, and supplies, $500; in all, $9,390.

"For rent of office for joint secretaries, $360.

"Salaries, United States agency: Agent, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $7,500 per annum; counsel, $5,000 per annum; 2 counsels, at $2,520 per annum each; 2 law clerks, at $1,800 per annum each; joint secretary, who shall also act as disbursing clerk, $3,000 per annum; 2 stenographers, at $1,200 per annum each; and messenger, $720 per annum; in all, $27,260.

"Expenses, United States agency: Necessary and contingent expenses, $12,700."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended as follows: On page 20 of the bill, in line 22, after the word "expenses," insert the following: "in Washington City"; and on the same page, in line 25, strike out "$50,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$40,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended as follows: On page 21 of the bill, in line 10, strike out "$150,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

LEE S. OVERMAN,
LUKE LEA,
W. L. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
H. D. FLOOD,
CYRUS CLINE,
HENRY ALLEN COOPER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question. I was unable to gather from the reading of the conference report what had become of the Senate amendment providing for the purchase of a legation in Shanghai.

Mr. OVERMAN. That was stricken out. The House refused to agree to it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am very glad of that under the circumstances.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say that we had some information, which came to us after the Senate had agreed to the amendment, which we thought needed investigation, and we readily agreed to strike out the amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it needs investigation.

Mr. OVERMAN. We agreed to strike out the amendment relative to Shanghai, and also to strike out the one relative to the embassy at Berne, Switzerland, but the House insisted on the provisions relative to the embassies at Mexico City and Japan, and the Senate receded.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to inquire of the Senator from North Carolina what disposition was made of the appropriation for the reception of the members of the Interparliamentary Union?

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senate receded, with an amendment. We agreed to appropriate $40,000 instead of $50,000 for that purpose, and required that that expenditure should be confined to the meeting in Washington City. It appeared to us that it was not right to pay the expenses of the delegates all over this country. We provided a sufficient amount to entertain them here in Washington, but we did not think the Government ought to be put to the expense of carrying these people all over the country, say, to the Panama Exposition. That was the idea. The total appropriation for the entertainment of the delegates, confined to Washington City, is $40,000, and that is what is appropriated.

Mr. BURTON. There was a reduction from $50,000 to $40,000?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what was done. It was stated that the reason $50,000 was desired was because they wanted to pay the expenses of the delegates across the continent.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I notice some reference in the conference report to an appropriation for the distribution of water between the Republic of Mexico and the United States with relation to the waters of the Rio Grande. My colleague [Mr. THOMAS] is not in the city to-day; I know that he is very much interested in the matter, and he is not here to examine it. I therefore should like to have the conference report go over until Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can only be done now by unanimous consent. The Senate has directed the consideration of the report at this time.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado that this amendment does not affect the water in any way except that it requires the commission to make a report.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me ask the Senator, then, what is the status, and how does the question arise in this bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. It has arisen in every Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill since 1896. We entered into a treaty with Mexico by which a joint commission was to be appointed to fix the boundary line by reason of the fact that the Rio Grande is continually changing. Then, by means of a protocol that was entered into between this Government and Mexico, they provided for a measurement of the waters of the Rio Grande, so that it might be determined what amount of water our country should use and what amount of water Mexico should use in a future treaty to be made. It is not exactly a new appropriation, but it is a divisional appropriation. A report is to be made as to the amount of water to be used by the respective countries.

I will say that some companies are inducing immigrants to go there on the representation that they are going to have their lands irrigated when it is impossible to irrigate them. We want the settlers who propose to go there to know that they can not get water to irrigate their land, which it is claimed by these land companies may be irrigated. We want to print the reports that have been made and to pay the expenses of some of the parties; for instance, the engineers who have been employed, but who have not been paid. That is what this appropriation is for.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator from North Carolina that the Rio Grande rises in the State of Colorado, and that we have various irrigation enterprises that have been started and some that are desiring to start on the Rio Grande River, in the State of Colorado. It has been the source of a great deal of discomfort to our people that waters that we believed we are entitled to are to be appropriated and used upon the land of the Republic of Mexico. If there is anything of that kind involved in this report, I unquestionably want it to go over; but if the Senator from North Carolina will say that there is nothing but the requirement that a report shall be made, I do not know that I shall ask that it go over.

Mr. OVERMAN. These commissioners have no power whatever; all they are to do is to examine and ascertain to what part of the water Mexico is entitled and to what part of the water our country is entitled, and to report thereon. Mexico is claiming that she is entitled to half the water, and the United States claims that she is entitled to half of it; but there are a great many places down there, as the Senator knows, where sometimes there are great floods and again the water is very low. This is a matter to be determined. The men representing Mexico and those representing the United States are to get together and report on the flow of the river and ascertain what amount of water comes down the river every year.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does it provide that there shall be an attempt to divide the water, or to say how much the Republic of Mexico is to be entitled to and how much the United States is to be entitled to?

Mr. OVERMAN. No authority whatever is given to do that. This provision is in furtherance of a future treaty to be made. They will make their report, and a treaty will be entered into. Colorado can be heard on that question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that this has long been a yearly appropriation for the purpose of making an investigation. Those investigations we had hoped would be concluded years ago, but they have not yet been concluded. This is simply an appropriation to continue the investigation and to prepare the report required under the agreement.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is the provision contained in this conference report something that is new, that has been added by the conferees?

Mr. OVERMAN. No.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The provision was in the House bill, was it?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; not at all.

Mr. SHAFROTH It was made by the Senate?

Mr. OVERMAN. It was made by the Senate. There has been a conflict between what is known as the International Water Boundary Commission and the Water Commission. In fact, the work has always been done by the Water Commission without authority, I think, and the auditor refused to audit accounts for expenses incurred by the International Water Boundary Commission for the Water Commission, and under that ruling we concluded that we would separate them. That is all we have done. The House appropriated $20,000 for the same work, and we divided the fund, providing that $10,000 should go to the International Boundary Commission and $10,000 to the Water Commission for doing the same work that has been going on since 1896.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that the provision reported is substantially as it passed the Senate, except that the amount has been reduced from $20,000 to $15,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an Interstate Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have agreed to yield to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who said that he desired to discuss this matter for a short time and then leave the Chamber. If the Senator desires to proceed now, inasmuch as he must leave, as he says, I will yield to him. I do not see him on the floor just now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from Arkansas is near at hand. In the meantime the Senator from Idaho can proceed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I was diverted yesterday from the thread of my remarks by interrogatories from the floor. I never object to questions from the floor, although they sometimes have the effect of breaking the continuity of one's argument, or what he deems to be the continuity of his argument.

Mr. ROBINSON entered the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from Arkansas is now present.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me to make a statement concerning section 5 of this bill?

Mr. BORAH. I understand the Senator from Arkansas desires to discuss that section and then leave the Chamber; and I have agreed to yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am very grateful to the Senator from Idaho for the courtesy which he has extended to me.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Fletcher	Newlands	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Hitchcock	Norris	Smoot
Brady	Hollis	O'Gorman	Stone
Bryan	Hughes	Page	Swanson
Burton	Jones	Perkins	Thornton
Catron	Kenyon	Pomerene	Warren
Chamberlain	Kern	Robinson	West
Chilton	Lane	Shafroth	White
Clark, Ark.	Lea, Tenn.	Sheppard
Crawford	Lee, Md.	Shields
Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Shively

Mr. KENYON. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is detained from the Chamber by illness. I will ask that this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. BRISTOW, Mr. CAMDEN, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. RANSDELL, Mr. SAULSBURY, and Mr. SIMMONS answered to their names when called.

Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. JAMES, and Mr. THOMPSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. ROBINSON. I again express my thanks to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] for his courtesy to me.

Mr. President, one of the most important provisions in this bill is section 5, declaring "unfair competition" to be unlawful and directing the commission by general regulations to prevent it.

On Thursday, June 25, while the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] was discussing this measure, I expressed the opinion that the term "unfair competition" has a somewhat fixed meaning in law, and that while most of the earlier cases related to the infringement of trade-marks, the term may now be said to fairly embrace every unjust, dishonest, and inequitable practice by which one seeks to unfairly destroy or injure the business of a competitor. At that time I cited the cases Sterling Remedy Co. v. Eureka Chemical Manufacturing Co. (80 Fed., 105); Dennison Manufacturing Co. v. Thomas Manufacturing Co. (94 Fed., 651); T. D. Dunn Manufacturing Co. v. Trix Manufacturing Co. (63 N. Y. Sup., 333; 50 App. Div., 75).

Originally "unfair competition" consisted chiefly of the expressed or implied representation that the goods or business of one man are the goods or business of another. Now, however, it is given a much broader meaning, and is not limited to mere infringements of trade-marks, or to the use of marks, words, or symbols not subject to exclusive appropriation by anyone, yet designed to deceive the public and to obtain business by means of such deception.

In discussing the growth of the law of "unfair competition" the Encyclopedia of Law, volume 28, page 328, says:

> The law of unfair competition, including trade-marks and trade names, is of comparatively recent origin. The early cases fully recognized this doctrine, but as unfair competition by means of the imitation or infringement of trade-marks covered by far the most numerous class of cases presented, the courts fell into the practice of deciding all cases upon the doctrines of trade-mark law, and to a greater or less extent lost sight of the broader principles of unfair competition. * * * This law of trade-marks became specialized, and the law of unfair competition remained in abeyance, or, if recognized at all, was not recognized to its full extent or under that name, relief when afforded being "upon principles analogous to trade-marks." * * * The law of trade-marks, however, has been too thoroughly specialized and crystallized by statutes and decisions to become wholly merged in the law of unfair competition.

Nims on Unfair Business Competition, page 1, is as follows:

> In the digests one usually finds unfair-competition cases under the general head of trade-marks. This is misleading, for the law of trade-marks does not include unfair competition, but, rather, the law that governs trade-marks and infringements of them is but a part of the law regulating unfair and dishonest competition and trade.
> This misconception of the true meaning and scope of the doctrine of unfair competition may cause some to take issue with the writer on the correctness of including in a book bearing the title of Unfair Competition some of the classes of cases here included. It is believed, however, that the bar will be called upon more and more frequently to protect traders whose business is threatened with injury or destruction from many sorts of dishonest or unfair competition besides those arising out of trade-marks and trade names. Referring to the development of unfair-competition law, W. K. Townsend says: "Not yet fully adopted by all the courts, still to be developed in its application to particular circumstances and conditions, this broad principle of business integrity and common justice is the product and the triumph of the development of the law of trade-marks in the last half century and the bulwark which makes possible and protects the world-wide business reputations common and growing more common in this new country."
> Unfair competition is not confined to acts directed against the owners of trade-marks or trade names, but exists wherever unfair means are used in trade rivalry. Equity looks not at what business the parties before the court are engaged in, but at the honesty or dishonesty of their acts. It is unfair to pass off one's goods as those of another person; it is unfair to imitate a rival's trade name or label; but he who seeks to win trade by fair means or foul is not limited to these methods. He may copy and imitate the actual goods made or sold by a competitor; he may libel or slander these goods, make fraudulent use of a family name, of trade secrets, of corporate names, of signs, of threats of action; he may construct buildings which are reproductions of peculiar buildings of a rival, thus producing confusion in the minds of purchasers, which enables him to purloin his rival's trade, and in a hundred other unfair ways secure another's trade. All acts done in business competition are either fair or fraudulent, equitable or inequitable, whether they relate to marks or not; and it is believed that the question of trade-marks will soon be lost sight of in discussing unfair competition, in the problem of securing, through the principles of equity, full protection to every merchant against unfair business methods.

The most recent case affecting "unfair competition" is the case of United States against American Thread Co. and numerous other defendants in the district court of New Jersey, in which a decree was rendered June 2, 1914. In that case 14 different practices pursued by the defendants against competitors were enjoined as constituting "unfair competition," as follows:

(a) From soliciting, making, ratifying, or confirming by agreement or understanding of any kind or nature with any other corporation, copartnership, or person any lists of wholesale or retail dealers or jobbers in the United States with whom trade in sewing thread shall not be carried on.

(b) From fixing, establishing, ratifying, or confirming by agreement or understanding of any kind or nature with any competitor in business, whether an individual or a corporation, trade discounts, trade rebates, terms or conditions of sale or credit, in connection with or relating to the sale or shipment of sewing threads in the United States.

(c) From purchasing or acquiring the factories, plants, or brands of any competitor in the markets of the United States, or from acquiring any interest in the business of any such competitor either through stock ownership or otherwise.

(d) From exacting or accepting from any vendee or purchaser of any sewing thread sold by any of said defendants in the United States any agreement restraining such vendee or purchaser from selling said thread below any fixed or minimum price; and from refusing to trade with, discriminating against, or threatening to refuse to trade with or to discriminate against any person because of the prices at which he sells sewing thread, unless such person is offering for sale or selling sewing threads at less than their cost to such person.

(e) From giving or offering to give to any wholesale or retail dealers, jobbers, or consumers of sewing thread in the United States any bonus, rebate, or other inducement dependent upon the aggregate of future purchases to be made by such dealers, jobbers, or consumers within any period.

(f) From cooperating with or assisting any dealers in the United States to combine or pool their orders or purchases of sewing thread in order to obtain the benefit of any discount or other concession allowed on the quantity purchased or agreed to be purchased.

(g) From using in the United States what are known in the trade and referred to in the petition herein as "fighting brands," hereby defined to be brands which are devised or revived and used for the purpose of being offered principally to customers of competitors at cut prices; that is to say, at prices lower or on terms more favorable than the price or terms asked by the seller for substantially the same thread under different brands or trade names.

(h) From employing in the United States what are referred to in the petition herein as "flying squadrons," hereby defined to be special forces of salesmen who do not, as their principal business, handle the brands commonly offered for sale by the manufacturer or selling agency, or solicit orders from the trade generally, but handle principally "fighting brands," or solicit principally from customers of competitors with a view of securing their trade.

(i) From soliciting or exacting from wholesale or retail dealers or jobbers or from customers of competitors in the United States any agreement not to handle or to cease handling the brands of competitors; or from refusing to deal with or discriminating against or threatening to refuse to deal with or to discriminate against those who handle the goods of competitors, or from canvassing the retail trade of any dealer or jobber and thereupon offering the orders thus obtained to such dealer or jobber upon condition that he shall cease to buy thread from a competitor of the defendants or of any of them.

(j) From attacking the credit or business reputation of or the quality of thread dealt in by any competitor in the United States by means of any report known to be false or which there is no reasonable ground to believe.

(k) From warning, harrassing, or intimidating by threatening to prosecute for trade-mark infringement or by other acts, letters, or advertisements, any other person or corporation in relation to the sale, shipment, or trade in sewing threads in the United States, except such action as may rightfully be taken, or such letters or advertisements as may rightfully be written or published by any person or corporation in protecting his or its property, trade marks, rights, or business.

(l) From offering or giving secret rebates or other secret inducements to any customer of a competitor in the United States.

(m) From selling or offering to sell in the United States sewing thread of any kind below the cost of production, or at prices which, after allowing for cost of transportation and differences in prices or terms on account of differences in grade, quality, or quantity sold, are lower than the prices charged in other parts of the United States, with the intent thereby of obtaining a monopoly or destroying or injuring the trade or business of another in sewing thread or of preventing another from engaging in such trade or business; but nothing in this paragraph contained shall prevent the defendant corporations from offering for sale or selling sewing thread in any part of the United States at prices or on terms as low as any of their bona fide competitors are then and there offering, nor from offering or making different prices, terms, or conditions to different classes of customers.

(n) From offering in the United States a bonus or gift in the form of free goods of any kind as an inducement to any class of customers to purchase defendants' threads, except that the defendants, or any of them, may, in good faith, give or offer to give or distribute samples in reasonable quantities in order to introduce their threads and establish new trade, and except that they may offer and give free samples to actual purchasers for bona fide distribution among consumers: Provided, however, That such samples to purchasers shall not exceed 5 per cent of their purchases at any one time.

In the case which I have cited the court enjoined as unfair competition those 14 different forms of trade practices.

I am indebted to Mr. George Rublee for decrees upon the same point, which I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD without reading. These are the cases of United States against American Coal Products Co., entered March 4, 1913, in which case a large number of trade practices were enjoined as unfair competition; also the case of United States against General Electric Co., entered October 12, 1911. That, I believe, was an Ohio case. And, finally, the case of United States against American Thread Co., a part of which I have just read.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNFAIR METHODS OF COMPETITION.

UNITED STATES V. AMERICAN COAL PRODUCTS CO.—DECREE ENTERED MARCH 4, 1913.

(b) That all contracts between said Barrett Manufacturing Co. and any producer of coal tar or oil tar whereby the producers of coal tar agree to burn any part of said production or agree not to enter into competition with said Barrett Manufacturing Co. or its subsidiaries or with said products company are decreed to be null and void, and said Barrett Manufacturing Co. and said products company are forever enjoined from operating under or enforcing the same, unless said contracts shall be modified and re-formed by eliminating those provisions or similar provisions to the same effect; and said Barrett Manufacturing Co. and its subsidiaries and said products company are forever enjoined and prohibited from entering into contracts containing those provisions or similar provisions to the same effect.

(c) That all contracts between said Barrett Manufacturing Co. or said products company on one hand and any dealers in or producers of coal tar and oil tar on the other hand providing for the sale of said coal tar or oil tar, and wherein it is provided that the contract shall be terminated upon notice, shall be re-formed and changed to provide for certain termination of said contract at a fixed date not to exceed 10 years from the date thereof.

(d) That said defendants, and each and all of them, are forever enjoined and prohibited from selling coal tar or oil tar to one or more competitors of said Barrett Manufacturing Co., competing with said company in any line, for a less price f. o b. the same point of shipment than said Barrett Co. sells the same products to any other competitor in the same line.

(e) That said defendant companies and defendant individuals of said companies, and each of them, are forever enjoined and prohibited from burning for fuel or exporting any coal tar or oil tar or briquetting pitch owned by them, when such burning or exporting is done at a net loss, taking into consideration all resulting by-products, without first advertising for 30 days for bids for such coal tar, oil tar, or pitch, and without thereby being able to sell same to competitors at higher prices; except that nothing in this clause shall prevent the defendant companies from using coal tar or oil tar as fuel when it is economical to do so or when obliged to burn liquid fuel on account of public ordinances. By the use of the word "economical" herein is meant that when the fuel value of oil tar or coal tar is greater to said Barrett Manufacturing Co. than the fuel value of coal or other usable fuels, then coal tar or oil tar may be burned for fuel.

(f) That said defendants, and each of them, are forever enjoined and prohibited from entering into any contract, scheme, or arrangement with any competitor in the purchase of coal tar or in the manufacture or sale of coal-tar roofing materials whereby any producer of coal tar shall be restricted with respect to the person or persons to whom such producer shall sell such product, or respecting the territory wherein or the price at which such product shall be sold.

(g) That said defendants and each of them are forever enjoined and prohibited from making or enforcing any contract whereby a purchaser of one line of material, such as tarred felt, shall be compelled to purchase from defendants or any allied interest any proportion of other material.

(i) That the use of the name of any one-time independent company or of any company acquired by the said Barrett Manufacturing Co. or the said products company that manufactures and markets pitch, tarred felts, or other coal-tar roofing materials, or uses the same in construction work, is forever enjoined and prohibited on the part of defendant companies or defendant individuals herein, except as departments of said Barrett Manufacturing Co., as, for example, Warren Chemical & Manufacturing Co., department of Barrett Manufacturing Co., and the Eastern Granite Roofing Co., department of Barrett Manufacturing Co., and except for the use of any registered trade-mark which is to be permitted; and such ownership by departments in the manner stated herein shall be made public by printing the same on letterheads, billheads, and in advertising.

(m) That said defendants herein, and each of them, are forever enjoined and prohibited from offering for sale and from selling coal tar and oil tar and roofing material at a less price to customers of competitors of said defendants than said defendants sell such products to their own customers when and where such offers and sales described in this paragraph are made by said defendants with a purpose so to injure the business of such competitor of said Barrett Manufacturing Co. and said products company as to drive such competitor out of such business in any particular section of the United States.

UNITED STATES V. GENERAL ELECTRIC CO. DECREE ENTERED OCTOBER 12, 1911 (OHIO).

It is further adjudged, ordered, and decreed that all factories, plants, and manufacturing and selling departments operated or owned by said General Electric Co. for the manufacture and sale of incandescent lamps shall be made known to the general public and trade as the property and business of the said General Electric Co., provided that the General Electric Co. is not prohibited by this decree from preserving and using the trade names of incandescent lamps lawfully manufactured or sold by it, including the trade names now employed by the companies mentioned in this clause second if it acquires such trade names and the business of manufacturing lamps to which the same are applied; but such names shall be publicly known as the property of the General Electric Co.

Third That the General Electric Co. and each and all of the lamp-manufacturing defendants as defined in clause fourth, their officers, agents, and servants, be, and they hereby are, restrained, enjoined, and forbidden from making or carrying out, directly or indirectly, any contracts with any manufacturer or manufacturers of lamp-making machinery or with any manufacturer or manufacturers of bulbs and tubing for incandescent lamps whereby such manufacturers, or any of them, shall be bound not to sell the goods manufactured by them, respectively, to others than the said defendants, or any of them, or hindered from so doing or obligated to sell to the said defendants, or any of them, at other and different prices and terms of payment than those to which they severally may sell to other purchasers.

Fifth. That the General Electric Co. and the other above-mentioned lamp-manufacturing defendants are enjoined from maintaining, by agreement, differentials between lamps which do not in fact differ in quality or efficiency, and said defendants are enjoined from allowing discounts based on aggregate purchases from different manufacturers.

Sixth. That the General Electric Co. and the other above-named lamp-manufacturing defendants, and each of them, their officers, agents, and servants, are perpetually enjoined and restrained from making or enforcing any contracts, arrangements, agreements, or requirements with dealers, jobbers, and consumers who buy from the said defendants either tantalum filament, tungsten filament, metallized carbon filament, or ordinary carbon-filament lamps, or any of them, by which such dealers, jobbers, and consumers are compelled to purchase all their ordinary carbon filament lamps from said defendants as a condition to obtaining such other types of lamps, or any of them, or by which dealers, jobbers, and consumers are compelled to purchase any one or more of the above-mentioned types of lamps from the said defendants as a condition to the purchase or supply of any other or all of said types of lamps, and the said General Electric Co. and the lamp-manufacturing defendants aforesaid are perpetually enjoined and restrained from discriminating against any dealer, jobber, or consumer desiring to purchase tantalum, tungsten, or metallized carbon-filament lamps because of the fact that such dealer, jobber, or consumer purchases ordinary carbon-filament lamps from others and are perpetually enjoined and restrained from discriminating against any dealer, jobber, or consumer desiring to purchase any one or more of the above-mentioned types of lamps because of the fact that such dealer, jobber, or consumer purchases any other of said lamps from other manufacturers or dealers.

Seventh. That the General Electric Co. and the others of the said lamp-manufacturing defendants are perpetually enjoined and restrained when making discounts based on the quantity of lamps purchased by any dealer, jobber, or consumer from making such discounts on the basis of the total quantity of tungsten, tantalum, metallized carbon and ordinary carbon-filament lamps sold, or the total quantity of ordinary carbon filament lamps and any one or more of such other types of lamps sold, and the General Electric Co. and the others of the said lamp-manufacturing defendants are further perpetually enjoined and restrained from making any discounts based on the total quantity of any two or more types of lamps sold, when the result is to combine or aggregate the discount on both an unpatented lamp and a lamp patented or claimed to be patented, and that said defendants and each and all of them are perpetually enjoined from utilizing any patents which they may have or claim to have or which they may hereafter acquire or claim to have acquired as a means of controlling the manufacture or sale of any type or types of lamps not protected by lawful patents.

Eighth. That the General Electric Co. and the other defendants are each enjoined and restrained from offering or making more favorable prices or terms of sale for incandescent electric lamps to the customers of any rival manufacturer or manufacturers than it at the same time offers or makes to its established trade, where the purpose is to drive out of business such rival manufacturer or manufacturers or otherwise unlawfully to restrain the trade and commerce of the United States in incandescent electric lamps, provided that no defendant is enjoined or restrained from making any prices for incandescent electric lamps to meet or to compete with prices previously made by any other defendant or by any rival manufacturer, and provided further that nothing in this decree shall be taken in any respect to enjoin or restrain fair, free, and open competition.

UNITED STATES V. AMERICAN THREAD CO. DECREE ENTERED JUNE 2, 1914 (N. J.).

Sixth. That the defendant corporations, together with their directors, officers, managers, agents, and employees, including the individual defendants while they are associated in business with or employed by said corporations, or any of them, and all persons authorized to act and acting for or in behalf of said corporations, or any of them, be, and they hereby are, jointly and severally enjoined as follows, viz:

(a) From soliciting, making, ratifying, or confirming, by agreement or understanding of any kind or nature, with any other corporation, copartnership, or person any lists of wholesale or retail dealers or jobbers in the United States with whom trade in sewing thread shall not be carried on.

(e) From giving or offering to give to any wholesale or retail dealers, jobbers, or consumers of sewing thread in the United States any bonus, rebate, or other inducement dependent upon the aggregate of future purchases to be made by such dealers, jobbers, or consumers within any period.

(f) From cooperating with or assisting any dealers in the United States to combine or pool their orders or purchases of sewing thread in order to obtain the benefit of any discount or other concession allowed on the quantity purchased or agreed to be purchased.

(g) From using in the United States what are known in the trade and referred to in the petition herein as "fighting brands," hereby defined to be brands which are devised or revived and used for the purpose of being offered principally to customers of competitors at cut prices; that is to say, at prices lower or on terms more favorable than the price or terms asked by the seller for substantially the same thread under different brands or trade names.

(h) From employing in the United States what are referred to in the petition herein as "flying squadrons," hereby defined to be special forces of salesmen who do not, as their principal business, handle the brands commonly offered for sale by the manufacturer or selling agency, or solicit orders from the trade generally, but handle principally "fighting brands" or solicit principally from customers of competitors with a view of securing their trade.

(i) From soliciting or exacting from wholesale or retail dealers or jobbers or from customers of competitors in the United States any agreement not to handle or to cease handling the brands of competitors; or from refusing to deal with, or discriminating against, or threatening to refuse to deal with or to discriminate against those who handle the goods of competitors; or from canvassing the retail trade of any dealer or jobber and thereupon offering the orders thus obtained to such dealer or jobber upon condition that he shall cease to buy thread from a competitor of the defendants or of any of them.

(j) From attacking the credit or business reputation of or the quality of thread dealt in by any competitor in the United States by means of any report known to be false or which there is no reasonable ground to believe.

(k) From warning, harrassing, or intimidating, by threatening to prosecute for trade-mark infringement or by other acts, letters or advertisements, any other person or corporation in relation to the sale, shipment, or trade in sewing threads in the United States, except such action as may rightfully be taken, or such letters or advertisements as may rightfully be written or published by any person or corporation in protecting his or its property, trade-marks, rights, or business.

(l) From offering or giving secret rebates or other secret inducements to any customer of a competitor in the United States.

(m) From selling or offering to sell in the United States sewing thread of any kind below the cost of production, or at prices which, after allowing for cost of transportation and differences in prices or terms on account of differences in grade, quality, or quantity sold, are lower than the prices charged in other parts of the United States, with the intent of thereby obtaining a monopoly, or destroying or injuring the trade or business of another in sewing thread, or of preventing another from engaging in such trade or business; but nothing in this paragraph contained shall prevent the defendant corporations from offering for sale or selling sewing thread in any part of the United States at prices or on terms as low as any of their bona fide competitors are then and there offering, nor from offering or making different prices, terms, or conditions to different classes of customers.

(n) From offering in the United States a bonus or gift in the form of free goods of any kind as an inducement to any class of customers to purchase defendants' thread, except that the defendants or any of them may in good faith give or offer to give or distribute samples in reasonable quantities in order to introduce their threads and establish new trade, and except that they may offer and give free samples to actual purchasers for bona fide distribution among consumers: Provided, however, That such samples to purchasers shall not exceed 5 per cent of their purchases at any one time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there are many States which have already passed laws which are entitled "acts to prohibit unfair discrimination" and "to prevent unfair competition." I cite the case of the law of Minnesota, enacted in 1907, chapter 269.

In the case of the Standard Oil Co. v. United States (221 U. S.) the Supreme Court used this language:

Without attempting to follow the elaborate averments on these subjects spread over 57 pages of the printed record, it suffices to say that such averments may properly be grouped under the following heads: * * * unfair practices against competing pipe lines; * * * unfair methods of competition, such as local price-cutting at the points where necessary to suppress competition.

In the case of State v. Fairmont Creamery Co. (153 Iowa, 702) the court, by Evans, justice, said, at page 709:

One of the great legislative problems of the day is to protect fair competition in the business world without unduly interfering with the freedom of contract. We may properly presume that the problem is greater in some lines of business than it is in others. In the purchase of commodities the methods of business adopted are quite as various as the different commodities. Methods are adopted which are peculiar and limited to dealings in a certain commodity. Evil practices, therefore, may arise in the business methods pertaining to one commodity which do not obtain at all in relation to other commodities. Practices may obtain which contravene no statute and which, nevertheless, would be deemed as morally dishonest and detrimental to the public interest. * * * The temporary maintenance of artificial prices for the sole purpose of destroying a weaker competitor and creating a monopoly is one of the modern evil inventions.

A mere reading of the court's statements in these various cases of unfair practices enjoined suggests and emphasizes the necessity for legislation upon the subject broad enough to embrace the many unjust methods by which independent dealers are driven out of business by their more powerful competitors.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If it will not disturb the Senator, I should like to ask him a question. I understand that he is now showing that various courts have at different times restrained companies from resorting to these unfair practices. If that is the case, will the Senator state why it is necessary for Congress to legislate in the matter if remedies already exist for defending a company against those unfair practices?

Mr. ROBINSON. Many of the cases hold that unfair competition, as such, is not unlawful. It may be enjoined or prohibited to prevent the loss of a property right; but this bill proposes, in addition to that, to make it unlawful, and to provide what we regard as an effective means of preventing such practices.

Mr. William S. Stevens, of Columbia University, in an article called to my attention by Congressman STEVENS, of New Hampshire, who introduced this provision in the House, discusses the subject of "unfair competition" from an economic point of view, and classifies according to their elementary characteristics 11 forms of "unfair competition," as follows. I read now from his article on page 283 of the Political Science Quarterly for June, 1914:

1. Local price cutting.
2. Operation of bogus "independent" concerns.
3. Maintenance of "fighting ships" and "fighting brands."
4. Lease, sale, purchase, or use of certain articles as a condition of the lease, sale, purchase, or use of other required articles.
5. Exclusive sales and purchase arrangements.
6. Rebates and preferential contracts.
7. Acquisition of exclusive or dominant control of machinery or goods used in the manufacturing process.
8. Manipulation.
9. Black lists, boycotts, white lists, etc.
10. Espionage and use of detectives.
11. Coercion, threats, and intimidation.

The terms used fairly define without detailed discussion the various practices thus classified, and undoubtedly embrace nearly all of the methods of "unfair competition" now in use. But with the abandonment or suppression of these, new devices will be found by some dealers by means of which to oppress their competitors. While we could expressly in this bill place a specific inhibition against the 11 forms of "unfair competition" as classified by Mr. Stevens, still it seems best to make the statute broad enough to cover all forms which may hereafter be adopted or devised, as well as those now pursued and regarded as most objectionable.

The indefinite continuance of this session of Congress is justified principally upon the ground that, having pledged to the country remedial antitrust legislation, it is best to conclude the subject now rather than to prolong indefinitely the agitation; that it is best to relieve the business world of the anxiety which arises from the present state of uncertainty and which will continue until the subject is finally disposed of. If there be force in this position it must also be true that it is our duty to make the legislation broad enough to prevent the necessity of again having to consider the same subject within a short time. Not only has the term "unfair competition" a meaning fairly well fixed in law and in economics, but it is also easily understood by the average business man. Nearly all normal business men can distinguish between "fair competition" and "unfair competition." Efficiency is generally regarded as the fundamental principle of the former—efficiency in producing and in selling, while oppression or advantage obtained by deception or some questionable means is the distinguishing characteristic of "unfair competition."

The words "unfair competition" have a clearer meaning than many other terms which have found secure recognition in our laws, as, for example, "reasonable rates," as used in the law relating to the regulation of commerce; "uniform standards for the purity, quality, and fitness for consumption of teas" in the tariff laws; and "unreasonable obstruction to the free navigation of waters" used in the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899; and "conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce" as used in the antitrust act of July 2, 1890.

THE ACT IS NOT OBJECTIONABLE ON THE GROUND THAT IT SEEKS TO DELEGATE LEGISLATIVE OR JUDICIAL POWER.

It will be observed that the bill declares "unfair competition" to be unlawful, just as existing law provides that it is unlawful for carriers to charge unreasonable rates or to discriminate between shippers. The terms "unreasonable rates" and "discrimination between shippers," like the words "unfair competition," are general, and any act is prohibited which would come within them. The Interstate Commerce Commission has been given authority to make reasonable rates and to administer the law against discrimination. (I. C. C. v. Illinois Central Railroad, 215 U. S., 452; I. C. C. v. C., R. I. & P. R. R., 218 U. S., 88.) The issues are almost exact parallels. Congress has heretofore by law forbidden carriers to charge unreasonable rates or to discriminate between shippers. It has given the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to fix reasonable rates and to prevent discriminations. This measure accordingly declares "unfair competition" unlawful, and directs the trade commission under general regulations to prevent it.

Congress acted within its constitutional powers when it left to the commission the duty of fixing the uniform standards for drawbars, having provided by law that after a certain date only cars with drawbars of uniform height should be used in interstate commerce. (St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co. v. Taylor, 210 U. S., 281–287.) Buttfield v. Stranahan (192 U. S., 470) sustained an act forbidding the importation of tea which is inferior in purity, quality, and fitness for consumption, and authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury, upon conditions, to fix uniform standards of purity, quality, and fitness of teas imported into the United States. Mr. Justice White, in delivering the opinion of the court, at page 496, said:

> The claim that the statute commits to the arbitrary discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury the determination of what teas may be imported and therefore invests that official with legislative power is without merit. * * * Congress legislated on the subject as far as was reasonably practical, and from the necessities of the case was compelled to leave to the executive officials the duty of bringing about the result pointed out by the statute.

In Union Bridge Co. v. The United States (24 U. S., 364) the Supreme Court sustained a provision of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, that—> whenever the Secretary of War shall have reason to believe that any bridge over any navigable waterway of the United States is an unreasonable obstruction * * * it shall be his duty, after hearing, to order alterations so as to render navigation unobstructed. * * *

The willful failure to obey his order is made a criminal misdemeanor. This statute was assailed on the ground that it delegated legislative power. Mr. Justice Harlan, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

> In no substantial, just sense does it confer upon that officer as the head of an executive department powers strictly legislative or judicial in their nature, and which must be exclusively exercised by Congress or by the courts. * * * Congress, in execution of a declared policy, committed to the Secretary of War the duty of ascertaining all the facts assigned in any particular inquiry whether any bridges over the waterways of the United States were unreasonable obstructions to free navigation. * * * By the statute Congress declared, in effect, that navigation should be free from unreasonable obstructions arising from bridges of insufficient height, width of span, or other defects. It stopped, however, with this declaration of the general rule, and imposed upon the Secretary of War the duty of ascertaining what particular cases came within the rule prescribed by Congress, as well as the duty of enforcing the rule in such cases. In performing that duty the Secretary of War will only execute the clearly expressed will of Congress and will not in any true sense execute legislative or judicial power.

The doctrine of the above case is strongly supported in Monongahela Bridge Co. v. The United States (216 U. S., 177). The case of Interstate Commerce Commission v. Goodrich Transit Co. (224 U. S.,) involves the question as to whether section 20 of the act to regulate commerce is void because it unlawfully delegated legislative power. That section conferred upon the commission discretion to prescribe the period of time within which common carriers should establish a uniform system of accounts and the manner in which such accounts should be kept. It was contended that this gave the commission discretion to legislate. Mr. Justice Day, at page 214, said:

> The Congress may not delegate its purely legislative power to a commission, but having laid down general rules of action under which the commission shall proceed it may require of that commission the application of such rules and the investigation of facts with a view to making orders in a particular manner within the rules laid down by Congress. This rule has been frequently stated and illustrated in recent cases in this court and needs no amplification here. * * * In other words, Congress has laid down general rules for the guidance of the commission, leaving to it merely the carrying out of the details in the exercise of powers so conferred. This, we think, is not a delegation of legislative authority.

United States v. Grimaud (220 U. S., 506) reversed the judgment of the court below, sustaining the demurrer to an indictment for grazing sheep on a forest reservation without having obtained the permission required by the regulations adopted by the Secretary of Agriculture, and held that the act authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make such rules and regulations and to establish such service as will insure the objects of such reservations, namely, to regulate their occupancy and establish and preserve forests thereof from destruction—> and providing that any violation of the act itself or of such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture should make shall be punishable as a misdemeanor was not objectionable on the ground that it did not sufficiently define what acts should constitute an offense against the United States nor on the ground that it was unconstitutional because it delegated to the Secretary of Agriculture authority to determine what acts should be criminal.

Mr. Justice Lamar, in rendering the opinion of the court, said, among other things:

> From the beginning of the Government various acts have been passed conferring upon executive officers power to make rules and regulations, not for the governing of their departments, but for administering the laws which already govern. None of these statutes could confer legislative power, but when Congress had legislated and indicated its will it could give to those who would come under such general provisions power to fill up the details or by the establishment of administrative rules and regulations, a violation of which could be punished by fine or imprisonment fixed by Congress or by penalties fixed by Congress or measured by the injury done.
> Thus it is unlawful to charge unreasonable rates or to discriminate between shippers, and the Interstate Commerce Commission is given authority to make reasonable rates and to administer the law against discriminations; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Illinois Central Railroad (215 U. S., 452); Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway (218 U. S., 88). Congress provided that after a given date only cars with drawbars of uniform height should be used in interstate commerce, and then constitutionally left to the commission the duty of fixing a uniform standard; St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway v. Taylor (210 U. S., 281). In Union Bridge Co. v. United States (204 U. S., 364), in re Kollock (166 U. S., 526), and Buttfield v. Stranahan (192 U. S., 470) it appeared from the statutes involved that Congress had there prescribed, or by necessary implication made it unlawful, even criminal, to obstruct navigable waters, to sell unbranded oleomargarine, and to import unwholesome tea. With this unlawfulness as predicated the executive officers were authorized to make rules and regulations appropriate to the several matters covered by the various acts. A violation of these rules would then make the offense punishable by acts of Congress. But in making these regulations the officers did not legislate. They did not go outside of the circle of the act itself in requiring what should be done, or unlawful, if done, but confining themselves within the sphere covered by the statute, they could adopt regulations of the nature they had been authorized to make in order to administer the law and carry the statute into effect.

Mr. President, the authority given in this bill to the trade commission is analogous to the authority already conferred by law on the Interstate Commerce Commission as to the establishment of reasonable rates and the prevention of discrimination between shippers. In the cases that I have cited that authority has been upheld as not constituting a delegation of legislative power or authority.

It has been suggested that during the course of this debate—and I was unfortunate enough not to be present—that one clause in section 5 is a violation of some constitutional provision because it requires the court to issue an injunction to enforce the order of the commission. An examination of the proposed statute will disclose that that position is not well taken. The provision simply says that the court is authorized to issue an injunction to enforce the order of the commission, which is nothing more nor less than saying that the court shall have jurisdiction to issue it, and does not imply the power of the court to determine whether or not the injunction shall issue is taken away by this statute. It simply confers upon the court jurisdiction by injunction to enforce the order of the commission.

Mr. President, I thank the Senate.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WHITE in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Hitchcock	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.
Brady	Hollis	Overman	Smith, Md.
Bryan	Hughes	Page	Smith, Mich.
Burton	Jones	Poindexter	Smoot
Camden	Kenyon	Ransdell	Swanson
Catron	Kern	Robinson	Thompson
Chamberlain	Lane	Saulsbury	Thornton
Chilton	Lea, Tenn.	Shafroth	Townsend
Clarke, Ark.	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	West
Culberson	Martine, N. J.	Shields	White
Cummins	Nelson	Shively
Dillingham	Newlands	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] will proceed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, when I rose upon yesterday I had no thought other than merely to call attention to what I conceived to be the vagueness of section 5. I had not had the time to prepare any discussion of the bill as a whole worthy of the subject and had no intention of doing other than briefly to discuss section 5. Interruptions, however, have led to a wider field and also to a more disconnected argument. I desire to recur again to the case from which I was reading upon yesterday, the State versus the International Harvester Co. I read further from the testimony in that case.

Q. Well, the truth of the matter is that a very large proportion, if not the larger proportion, of the sales were made below the list price?—A. I could not say about the larger proportion.

Q. But a large proportion was?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Glessner, of the Warder-Bushnell & Glessner Co., said:

Q. You were all competitors of each other?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there no understanding or agreement between you prior to 1902?—A. No, sir.

Q. There was actual competition between you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The fact is, the competition was pretty fierce?—A. Yes, sir; we tried to make it so.

Q. The competition in the harvester business had been more pronounced in their early part?—A. No, sir; it grew in bitterness and extent right along.

Q. You think it increased —A. Yes, sir.

Q. You think there was more competition in the harvester business in 1902 than any time before —A. It depends on what you call competition; it was a bitter fight between everybody to get business and to get the better of your competitor.

Mr. Funk, the general manager of the International Harvester Co., said:

Q. Then you did cut prices on your machines when you were with the Champion people, to get business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there a uniform price to the dealers at that time—before the International Harvester Co. of New Jersey was organized?—A. No, sir.

Q. You sold the machines for what you could get?—A. We had a list price, but it was varied from in certain conditions.

Mr. Yancy, former general agent for the Deering Co., said:

Q. Did you at any time prior to 1902 reduce the price to the dealer because of competition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what extent would you reduce the price in instances of that character?—A. Well, my previous answer covers that case. During the war of the competition we were pretty hard run for business, and if it looked as if we were going to carry machines over, and to protect ourselves we had to cut the prices.

Q. How much?—A. Ordinarily $5, sometimes ten; in extreme cases maybe a little bit more than that.

Q. In fact, you frequently cut the prices in any way to sell?—A. Not frequently.

Q. So that the old instructions—or was not that the rules prior to 1902?—A. It could not be said to be the rule.

Q. It was rather frequently done, was it not, Mr. Yancy?—A. It varied in different sections; sometimes the demand was greater, and the necessity did not exist in some years as in others.

Q. Did you find that the necessity came up because other companies were also doing that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The McCormicks were doing that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Plano?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Milwaukee, the Osborne, and the Champion—they were all doing that?—A. Yes, sir; more or less.

Mr. President, the evidence in this case discloses that there was what was regarded by the business world and what would be regarded by men ordinarily engaged in that kind of business as unfair, oppressive—in the language of the Senator from Nevada, brutal competition. But that competition, oppressive and unfair as they chose to call it, is proven to have been of unquestionable benefit to the agriculturists and farmers of the country. They got the benefit of the lower price; when the severe competition ended the price was ultimately raised. It was shown that while there was war between the manufacturers it reached in its effect to the salesmen, and from the salesmen to the consumers or final purchasers.

I do not know, Mr. President, what this commission would do with that kind of a proposition should it come before it and it was obliged to determine whether or not that competition was fair or unfair. It is evident in the mind of each one of those competitors that it was unfair competition, and yet it was such competition as was resulting, in my judgment, in general benefit to those who should be benefited under the law of competition—that is, the consumers or users of these agricultural implements.

If there is no standard by which to judge of what is unfair competition and to determine what it shall be, would or would not this commission have ended that competition between those people, resting entirely in the minds, the discretion, the ipse dixit of the commission? Not only that, Mr. President, but resting very largely in the proposition as to how people view these things.

There is not any more elastic proposition than the word "unfair" between competitors or in the business world. I will venture to say you never saw two grocery stores upon the opposite sides of a street doing business where there was anything like a close business that they did not feel one toward the other that it was unfair, and either was prepared to prove it at any time.

Shall we then send out a roving commission into the business world to determine what shall be unfair competition without any guide from us or without any power to review their action? Shall the Congress of the United States release them to their wide and uncircumscribed jurisdiction, and shall we, having done that, also say that no tribunal shall review their discretion as they exercise it?

Mr. BORAH. Now, take another phase of this proposition.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WHITE in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator whether it would do away with his objection to this particular section if the power to review were given to the court with all the facts?

Mr. BORAH. That presents another question which I wanted to discuss later in this matter; but so far as the immediate question which I am now presenting is concerned, it would. That presents another phase of this matter which I am going to discuss a little later, and which I will call to the attention of the Senate and the Senator. But I was going to say there is another phase of it. These men who undertook to do away with what they conceived to be ruinous competition did so by the only practical method that I know of or that they knew of, I presume. They could not relieve the independents in the field competing with one another and control the competition. That was simply impossible. I venture to say that it will be impossible for this commission to do it without injunction after injunction in regard to the different enterprises and lines of business in the country. So they simply purchased, bought up, combined, coordinated these independents and destroyed the competition, although they said it was simply for the purpose of qualifying or lessening the competition, and that was their defense in the court. When they went into court under the trust law they disclosed to the court that they were in a fierce and brutal competition, which must in the end result in the destruction of some of the independents, and by the combination they were able to save all the independents and give them what their property was reasonably worth. Eliminate this rule or principle; at least modify it and lessen it. They did it, and doing that they ran up against the trust law and were ousted from the State of Missouri because they did it.

Now, what would a business man do under those circumstances? On one side is Charybdis and on the other side is Scylla. On one side demanding and insisting upon competition, and the courts will not hear to the question that it is fierce; on the other side, the rule that it shall not be unfair.

Mr. President, I am only pleading in this matter for a rule which can be followed successfully and intelligently and permit business to go ahead and thrive.

I have not undertaken to argue the question whether or not this is constitutional because of uncertainty and whether it is a delegation of power that we can not make. As I said before, I am assuming that we may do it, and, having power to do it, are we prepared to put the business world into that kind of a strait-jacket?

Now, Mr. President, the Sherman antitrust law says if you do not compete, if you take any steps to destroy competition, you are a criminal. This law says, "If you compete too fiercely or unfairly, you are a violator of the law."

What did they do in this case? I read from page 388:

All of the contracting companies parted with all their assets of every description and good will, leaving them only the shares of stock which were of no use or value. The next step was the organization of the International Harvester Co. under the laws of New Jersey, with a capital stock of $120,000,000, which was distributed as follows: J. P. Morgan & Co. having paid for the property and stock of the Milwaukee Co. $3,148,196.66, and their services and expenses in the organization being estimated at $3,451,803.34, they were awarded stock to the amount of $6,600,000; the tangible properties of the McCormick, the Deering, the Warder Bushnell, and Glessner, and the Plano having been appraised at $53,400,000, and guaranteed bills receivable and accounts at $40,000,000, stock to the amount of $93,400,000 was distributed to them, and the remaining stock to the amount of $20,000,000 was issued to individuals who subscribed for it.

After the organization of the New Jersey corporation all the other companies that had been absorbed by it ceased to do business, and thereafter the business of manufacturing and selling harvester machines and other farm implements was conducted by the New Jersey corporation. But because some States would not admit into their borders a corporation of such capital stock and others imposed a license tax that the managers thought was unreasonable it was decided that the corporation would limit its operations to manufacturing the machines and implements, and would employ another concern which would not be objectionable to the laws of those States to sell its products. For this purpose the managers of the New Jersey corporation turned their attention to the respondent in this case, then called the Milwaukee Harvester Co., the property of which the New Jersey corporation had already acquired and the stock of which it also owned. The advantage of using this respondent also appeared by the fact that it was already licensed in the States where it was desired to go, etc.

That discloses how these people deeming this competition to be relentless and an unending war ended it and mollified and lessened the competition. They ended it by creating a monopoly and gathering to themselves the power to fix what price they thought it wise to fix.

Now, going back to page 410:

In the first place, J. P. Morgan & Co. procured an option on the present respondent, then the Milwaukee Co. This covered the whole concern, lock, stock, and barrel. Then Morgan & Co., as practical owners of respondent, were in a situation to arrange and combine with others in the harvesting-machine business. They did so arrange, but to give evidence of individual sales they had each party to the arrangement or combination sell by written contract to one Lane. This is step number one. Lane later conveyed to the International Harvester Co. This is step number two. The International Harvester Co. then proceeded to put its stock in the hands of voting trustees under a written agreement, forming a voting trust, which was to be in force for 10 years, but which might be terminated in five years. This is step three. Then followed the sales agent's contract with the respondent in this case. The stock held by these trustees was held in proportion to the amount put in by these several component corporations, save and except certain amounts fully discussed in the principal opinion. Was this an arrangement or combination with the view of lessening competition? It was not a bona fide sale, because the sellers had to create their own buyer. It was a device to combine all their property into one huge concern and for what purpose? In view of the facts and upon conscience can we say it was not done with a view to lessen free and full competition? We think not. The parties themselves say that it was done to stop the fierce competition between these large manufacturers. They further say that it did stop that competition, as is evident from the very arrangement itself. The statute does not say that the arrangement must stop competition to bring it within the ban of the law. If it was made with the view of lessening competition the arrangement and combination must be condemned. Can it be said that when you have taken 80 or 90 per cent of a given trade, formerly in the hands of six corporations in open and fierce competition, and placed it in the hands of three voting trustees with practically absolute power, you have not by the very act itself lessened free and full competition in general trade? We think not. The thing speaks for itself. The purpose is apparent. It would be years before the small concerns left, which did own 10 to 20 per cent of the business, could gain strength and capacity to have any real competition.

Mr. President, that brings to my mind a proposition that makes me fear this bill in its final effects and consequences. While I know that that is not the purpose of the authors of the bill—I know the very opposite to be the object and purpose of the authors of the bill—a time is coming when this will be used as a buffer against prosecutions under the Sherman antitrust law. The time will come when, if this grows and ramifies itself into the business affairs of this country and this commission is able to do all that is imposed upon it, these powerful combines and corporations desiring to get rid of competition will seek shelter under this act or order of the commission.

So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, as I said yesterday, I would vote for any law or any measure or any trade commission bill which I believed would make more effective the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law. I believe a further consideration of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States will warrant any lawyer in saying that if the administrative power is equipped to carry into effect the judgments and decrees of the court, if we have the political and moral courage to do it, we can exterminate monopoly in every conceivable form in which it exists in this country.

For 20 years we have been engaged in amplifying and revealing, as it were, the powers of this statute, until to-day I challenge the lawyers of the Senate to mention to me a form of industrial monopoly which is not subject to the principles announced by the Supreme Court of the United States. The statute as it was originally passed was deemed insufficient; and while a certain class of men in this country have been engaged in denouncing the courts, the courts have, in discharge of their tremendous responsibility, made this a workable, effective, and efficient statute. If we want to get rid of monopoly, if we want to restore competition, if we want to destroy that power which is a menace to this Republic, we have it in our power to-day to do it if we have the political courage to do it.

What I fear is that this bill can serve no other purpose than to dull the edge of our activities and our desire to destroy monopoly. We know that within the last few years there has been a distinct and aggressive movement in this country to legalize monopoly, to claim for it not only respectability, but to clothe it with the qualities of science and endow it with the attributes of philanthropy. It is argued that combinations built up through monopolistic practices and maintained by force of monopolistic principles are the result of business growth and progress and the ripened fruit of industrial evolution—that they have come to stay and, instead of being abused, should be regarded as among the blessings of our times. These people do not stop with the argument for a larger business unit which is a normal and necessary result of our industrial development, but they indorse and would leave undisturbed the unnatural, irregular, and illegal combinations which are the result, not of legitimate and natural growth and development, but monsters born of deceit, fraud, overreaching, overcapitalization, and criminal combinations. The Beef Trust, holding its complete supremacy over one of the indispensable foods; the Standard Oil combination with its colossal influence in both business and politics, far surpassing the influence of any single Commonwealth of the Nation; the International Harvester Trust holding its iron grip upon the implements through and by means of which the farmer tills the soil and harvests the crop—standing between the farmer and the market, taking such toll as it deems wise—these and their score of similar combinations fixing the toll upon everything which goes into the stomachs and upon the backs of the human family are justified and defended as necessary and wise and even beneficent institutions. This propaganda had its origin with those who, having created these combinations, secured these special privileges, organized their schemes, and felt it necessary, therefore, to legalize and make safe and permanent their holdings.

The people are told that they will be made safe and even happy and prosperous against the outrages which ordinarily accompany the movements of monopoly through and by means of a commission or bureau appointed and sitting at Washington, whose functions it shall be to regulate these monopolies. It is argued that combinations with monopolistic powers equipped and permitted to produce monopoly are inevitable, necessary, and that all they need is a little regulation. The argument, in effect, is that we are to tolerate and even encourage those monopolies, but we will have a board or commission which will mollify their extortions and not permit them to bury their fangs too deeply into the flesh of the producing and toiling millions—somewhat as they once might have muzzled the bloodhound that he might not tear too much the flesh of the fugitive on his way to the Canadian border. The heartless irony of this scheme is manifest. In different forms and under other guises and by other names it has been tried in the past. The result has always been and always will be in the end to establish two classes—a governing class, which is the property class, living in luxury and power, and another class, bound down by the iron bands of necessity and literally living upon the crumbs which fall from the rich man's table.

What chance would the average citizen, the common people, have in such a scheme? What would become of the freedom, the initiative, the self-reliance indispensable to citizenship in a Republic after the scheme had settled into its grooves, fastened itself upon us and hardened into a remorseless system, a redoubtable financial and political hierarchy? What effect would it have in the sweep of the years upon our institutions, our conceptions of equality, our theory of civic responsibility, our sense of social justice, our inherent abhorrence to classes? Nothing can be sound or wise or tolerable under a republican form of government which weakens or destroys self-reliant citizenship. Nothing can be endured which inures us to the idea of classes or closes the door of opportunity to those who chance to be born outside of the charmed circle of property and influence.

Mr. President, I want to call now, attention very briefly to some of the suggestions of counsel in the Standard Oil case, to show how we may unthinkingly or unconsciously following along the line which they have been undertaking to lead us for the past few years——

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, after listening more fully to the Senator from Idaho developing his argument this morning, I am satisfied that I have misrepresented his position in expressions which I gave vent to yesterday in inquiries addressed to the Senator as well as in my own observations. The Senator's position, as I now understand it, is not that the pending bill is unconstitutional; it is not that it is illegal, but that in its present phraseology and in the method in which it may be executed it is inexpedient, impracticable, and likely to be oppressive?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I think I may answer that in the affirmative, with the additional statement that it is calculated to be oppressive; and I would also add that it is calculated in the end to shelter combinations in this country rather than to destroy them. I should like to see it confined to such terms or provisions as would be devoted exclusively to the execution and enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. LEWIS. Then the Senator from Idaho is not contending in his argument as to the invalidity of the measure based either upon a constitutional criticism or upon the criticism of its being an illegal act or improper legislation?

Mr. BORAH. No; I am not, Mr. President.

Mr. LEWIS. Then I have misapprehended the Senator's position.

Mr. BORAH. I am not taking that view of it.

I heard the oral arguments upon the part of the very able counsel for the Standard Oil Co.; of course, the printed brief does them very slight justice; but I recall very well, indeed, the presentation of the case by the distinguished attorneys, wherein they undertook to show, and undoubtedly from their standpoint they felt justified in their position, that the acts complained of almost exclusively as against the Standard Oil Co. were that it competed too fiercely; that it had carried the law of competition too far; that it had been bidden to compete, and when they had exercised their ingenuity, their genius, and their capacity for business beyond a certain point, they were held to have violated the law. They say:

> The elimination of competition, so far as his property and business is concerned, is not a restraint of trade, but is merely an incidental effect of the exercise of the fundamental civil right to buy and sell property freely. The acquisition of property is not made illegal by the fact that the purchaser intends thereby to put an end to the use of such property in competition with him. Every purchase of property necessarily involves the elimination of that property from use in competition with the purchaser, and therefore implies an intent to effect such elimination.

Mr. Watson, in his brief, says:

> Competition is the striving of two or more persons or corporations, either individually or jointly, for one thing, i. e., trade; it is personal action; the strife between different persons. Properties do not compete. Their relative locations may more readily enable their owners to use them in competition, but of themselves, and as against each other, they do not compete.
> This idea makes the Sherman Act read that the same person or group of individuals shall not own and operate two or more sites for refineries or for stores or for any kind of manufactories which might be used by different owners in competition.

In the Tobacco case it was stated in the brief:

> Monopoly is the outcome of the practical cessation of effective business competition.

The beginning of monopoly is the cessation of competition. Notwithstanding the fact that there may be some hardships and some what we might call brutalities in the business world, in the great struggle of the Republic against the power of monopoly, are we willing to hamper and limit in any respect the power of competition in the business world? I think that we may well enlist and engage upon our side any power or influence which will enable us to restrain, to circumscribe, or to destroy monopoly; and just in proportion as there is what might be called a buffer against the action of that power, in that proportion benefit will somewhere arise to the interest of the monopoly.

> This word in the antitrust act has no reference to a grant of special privilege, but is used in a broad sense. Trade and commerce in any commodity are monopolized whenever, as the result of the concentration of competing businesses—not occurring as an incident to the orderly growth and development of one of them—one or a few corporations (or persons) acting in concert practically acquire power to control prices and smother competition.

In other words, Mr. President, when the business of this country and the lawyers have gone into court and said that we were seeking to mollify, to assuage, and to lessen competition, the courts have said, "In so far as you have sought to do that you have sought to build up monopoly." The rule of this Republic from its inception to now has been that competition will finally adjust the equities of the business world better than any other principle which we can invoke; and our fight has arisen not because there has been too much competition, though in some instances fierce, but because of the lessening effect and force of competition. I would strike from this bill, so far as I am concerned, anything upon that subject. There are some features of the bill I like, because I think they will help to execute the Sherman law.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will permit me, I understood him to say that, while he admitted that that was not the purpose of the authors of this bill, he feared that it would be in the end a buffer to protect to a greater or less degree monopoly. He indicated that he thought the energies of this commission should be employed in the enforcement of the Sherman Act, which under the decisions of the court can become, in his judgment, a thoroughly workable act. I agree with him as to his view of the Sherman Act, that it is a thoroughly workable act; but I ask him, pursuing his view that this commission's sole power should be the enforcement of that act, whether he would turn over the entire power of enforcement to that commission and relieve the Attorney General's office of this function?

Mr. BORAH. Turn that power over to the commission?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. No; I would not be willing to turn it over entirely to the commission. I would only want the commission as an aid to the Attorney General's office—an aid to the prosecution. Then I would——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me say there——

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator will excuse me for just a moment—then I would do one thing further. The best enforcer of the law that any society ever discovered is the individual interest of the injured party put into operation under a simple process. No one will ever enforce the Sherman law so well as the man who has been injured by the monopolistic combines, if you will make it simple enough so that he himself may bring his individual suit to recover damages for the trespass upon him.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then, I judge that the Senator admits that thus far the Department of Justice has not proved a very efficient agent for the enforcement of the Sherman Act?

Mr. BORAH. I would not want to——

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will not ask the Senator that question; it is not necessary.

Mr. BORAH. Well, I can answer it without reflecting upon anybody. I say that I think, in so far as the Department of Justice from time to time have had to do with the actual trial of cases and with the presentation of them to the courts, they have not only disclosed great ability, but they have done everything that the public could ask them to do. The fault, however, has arisen when the court has said, "This is an unlawful company," out of the fact that we, apparently, as a people have not had the courage to put into effect the decree of the court. When the Northern Securities decision was rendered, there was published the next day a statement, which seemed to be authoritative, that the business world need not be uneasy; that we were not going to run amuck.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment. I would hate to see, I suppose along with everyone else, business disaster in this country; but if it had been stated when the Northern Securities decision was rendered that every business concern in this country within a reasonable time would have to adjust its business to that rule, and that there would be no political favorites and no yielding on that question, in my judgment, to-day this question would be an infinitely small question compared to what it is.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to follow up my idea, then I will yield. It is not my purpose at all to indulge in any reflection upon the Department of Justice or upon any Attorney General who has ever held the position of chief of that department. On the contrary, I believe that they have all been able and conscientious officers; but I have contended for years that from the start the entire administration and enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law ought to have been put into the hands of a commission just as the interstate-commerce act was, and to-day, if I had the power, I would institute that means of enforcement. The very fact, however, that the Senator flinches from the suggestion that the control of the enforcement of the Sherman Act should be turned over absolutely from the Department of Justice to the trade commission indicates the difficulty. I fear that public opinion to-day might not approve such action, although I believe in it.

The inefficiency of the Attorney General's Office has arisen, not from the lack of ability or integrity of officials, but from the fact that society having determined to relieve the individual from the trouble and expense of prosecuting these cases by itself taking them in charge has put the function of enforcing the antitrust act upon a department the incumbency of which is changing continually, there having been, I believe, three or four Attorneys General in one administration.

Another difficulty has arisen: We have thus had, by reason of this changing incumbency, the varying policies of minds, able and brilliant, but differing in their views, with the consequent demoralization of the entire force engaged in the administration of this law. In addition to this, the Attorney General is in a measure a political officer. He belongs to the political department of the Government, the executive department; he sits in the President's Cabinet; and the Attorney General's Office feels the pressure of expediency everywhere——

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator and I agree.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Expediency with reference to the fate of the administration in power; expediency with reference to the fate of the party in power. We had an illustration of that when at a time of great financial disaster the proposal was made to a President of the United States as to whether monopoly should be increased by the acquisition by the United States Steel Co. of the property of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. Upon the suggestion that the taking up of the securities of that company would relieve a most tense financial situation, the President, responding to a patriotic impulse and acting only as he thought for the public good, practically sanctioned a transaction which was against the law with a view of averting a great financial disaster, and he went so far as to impress his view upon the Attorney General of the United States, charged with the function of enforcing this law. There a great financial emergency operated upon the political department of the Government to avert the enforcement of this law.

Everywhere along the line this influence is felt. An election is approaching and the powers of monopoly are aroused to prevent or to slow down a certain prosecution, and the idea is circulated that the continuance of that prosecution or of many prosecutions will have a disturbing effect upon the business of the country and affect the coming election, and political pressure is brought to slow down and retard the enforcement of the law. So we have these political exigencies arising all along and preventing the proper enforcement of the law.

We have found in the Interstate Commerce Commission a nonpartisan organization, which moves absolutely free from the influence either of Congress or of the President, an independent organization charged with the enforcement of the interstate commerce act, and commencing that enforcement at the same time that the Attorney General started in upon the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law. We find, however, by way of contrast that almost every transportation question has been settled, whilst we are just upon the threshold of the adjustment of the trust question; and meanwhile even the prevention of the creation of these great aggregations has not been accomplished. We have not only failed to destroy those which were in existence when the act was created, but we have failed to prevent the organization of others.

I cast no reflection upon any President of the United States or upon any Attorney General, but I say the system is a bad one, and, so far as I am concerned, I would gladly turn over the entire enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law to a nonpartisan, independent tribunal; but I do not think public sentiment is ripe for it, and therefore I want to go as far as I can in that direction, and I think we have gone as far as we can.

The Senator must recollect that the provision with reference to unfair competition is intended to disarm monopoly. It is monopoly, or the corporation possessing monopolistic tendencies, that engages in unfair competition, and unfair competition is a means of creating monopoly. We want competition, it is true, but we want a civilized competition, and not a brutal warfare in which the powerful can destroy the weak.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, there was another element that the Senator did not suggest that has led to the ineffectiveness, if it might be called so, of the Sherman Act; and without reflecting at all, of course, upon the courts, because it is their view that it is a mere economic statute and not a moral statute, the courts have universally refused to send anybody to jail for the violation of the Sherman Act. The Department of Justice has time and time again, under the criminal sections of that statute, convicted men, after jury trials or after they have pleaded guilty, and the courts have merely assessed small fines.

It has always seemed to me that if, at the commencement of prosecutions under the Sherman Act, the courts had sentenced men to jail, it would have solved this monopoly question, and there would not have been so many combinations and trusts formed; but never in the history of the Sherman Act has a single man gone to jail for its violation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is some reason for that, and that is that they got the wrong fellows.

Mr. KENYON. They had the right fellows sometimes.

Mr. BORAH. It was very rare, in criminal prosecutions. Most of the fellows that should have been jailed turned reformers and went into politics.

Mr. KENYON. The courts fined them, however, instead of sending them to jail.

Mr. BORAH. While I shall not mention upon the floor of the Senate the names of citizens of this country, the Sherman law would have been an effective statute from that date if four or five men whom I have in mind had been put in stripes.

Mr. KENYON. How are you going to put them in stripes if the courts will not put them there?

Mr. BORAH. Those men have never been prosecuted criminally.

Mr. KENYON. Some of them have.

Mr. BORAH. Not so far as I know.

Mr. KENYON. Some of the men the Senator has in mind were prosecuted, but they were not convicted.

Mr. BORAH. The men I have in mind have never even been tried.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, in order to make the record complete, I perhaps ought to say that even though the United States Supreme Court in the Standard Oil Co. case and in the American Tobacco Co. case declared that by the undisputed facts in the record the defendants in those cases had violated both section 1 and section 2 of the Sherman law, which were criminal provisions, the Department of Justice would not even prosecute. If one or two of the defendants in those cases had been sent to the penitentiary, where they ought to have been sent if we had had a decent regard for the law, we would not have the trust question now.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and I agree very generally as to why the Sherman law has not been enforced. That is because at a certain time we reach a crisis when business and politics feel that it is necessary to adjust their differences. That is not due to particular individuals. That is due to the fact that we have not yet arrived at the time when we are willing to deal with this subject in the only way in which, in my judgment, it can be dealt with effectively.

I do not believe you can take a commission and separate it from the rest of the world so that it will not feel the influence and the power that affect other men. I have no criticism for the Interstate Commerce Commission, but that question has not been tested yet to its full; not by any means. You can not judge an institution of that kind except in the sweep of the years, and I, as one, am not willing to take the currency question, the industrial business of this country, and the transportation business, and place all of those things entirely away from the electorate, entirely away from the recall of the people, with a bureau which is answerable in no respect to the people. In the end it will result in their moving to a very large extent in one groove and the people in another groove. I am not willing that the most tremendous affairs of government shall be wholly separated from the recall which the people have at stated periods with reference to the election of their officers. There is certain expert business which must be done by experts, but the policies which we are to pursue must always be subject to the determination of the popular vote.

Of course people have to experience things before they arrive at a conclusion to deal with them in what you might call a drastic way.

I have no doubt that when we come to deal in an effective way with the monopolies which have been organized in this country we will have to pay for our fight by certain losses which the people will have had to endure for a time. These monopolies have the power to create business distress. They have acquired that power, and you are not going to get it away from them without a contest which will in some way affect the business world.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr CUMMINS. I agree to the last proposition of the Senator from Idaho, and it forms the reason for the favor I entertain for the commission. If a commission goes wrong, it can be legislated out of existence. It is subject, in a way, to the temper of the people, and certainly subject to the power of Congress. Unfortunately, the courts of the United States are removed from both Congress and the will of the people. When the judges are appointed they are appointed during good behavior, which means, ordinarily, during life. It seems to me that the argument of the Senator from Idaho leads naturally and inevitably to the creation of a commission, through which some part of this work can be done, rather than to intrust it all to the administration of the courts.

For one I do not believe the courts can administer a law regulating commerce in many instances with efficiency, and I should like to suggest that view of the case to the Senator from Idaho, who, I know, wants an effective law. We always have our hands on the commission, not to influence its action in a particular case but, if it proves unfaithful, to dispose of it by legislation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in my humble opinion the Congress of the United States has no justification for in any way, directly or indirectly, criticizing the courts with reference to the Sherman antitrust law. The courts have met their responsibility and made this statute a most comprehensive and effective statute. They have not dodged for the sake of politics nor modified their decisions because of the threat of business disaster or tread softly in the presence of an approaching campaign. They have struck at the heart of monopoly.

With a single exception, the Supreme Court of the United States has maintained in its fullness and all its scope and power the Sherman antitrust law. I believe it was perfectly justified in saying what it did say in the case of the Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Co. against The United States, volume 226, page 49:

> This court has had occasion in a number of cases to declare its principle. Two of those cases we have cited. The others it is not necessary to review or to quote from except to say that in the very latest of them the comprehensive and thorough character of the law is demonstrated and its sufficiency to prevent evasions of its policy "by resort to any disguise or subterfuge of form" or the escape of its prohibitions "by any indirection." Nor can they be evaded by good motives. The law is its own measure of right and wrong, of what it permits or forbids, and the judgment of the courts can not be set up against it in a supposed accommodation of its policy with the good intention of parties, and it may be of some good results.

I do not believe there is any form of industrial monopoly, any device which they have been able to create, or any subterfuge which they have been able to bring forward which can escape the principles announced by the Supreme Court of the United States in regard to the Sherman antitrust law.

I agree with the Senator that the court can not administer or go out and execute a judgment or a decree. It is not the business of the court to do it. The court has laid down the principles, announced the judgment, and rendered the decree; and in doing so it has left no refuge for monopolistic practices in this country. If the Senators favoring this bill will confine it to the creation of a tribunal which will have for its purpose making more efficient the execution of the decree, I think, so far as I am concerned, that I should be willing to support it. I agree, further, that the execution of the Sherman law has not thus far aided the man in the street; but that is because we stopped short of our duty; it was not the court's fault. I agree the way we have been proceeding the burden has been too great for the court; but we can relieve the situation by appropriate administrative measures.

Mr. CUMMINS. This bill does that very thing.

Mr. BORAH. But, I say, if you would confine it to that.

Mr. CUMMINS. And the attempt is to go further and make some things offenses that are not now condemned by the antitrust law. That is the only purpose of section 5—to make some things punishable, to prevent some things, that can not be punished or prevented under the antitrust law.

I wanted, however, to refer the Senator from Idaho to two or three instances of the enforcement of the antitrust law. I concur with him in the statement that so far as the announcement of general principles is concerned no quarrel can be had even by the most captious with the declarations of the Supreme Court, save possibly in the Standard Oil and American Tobacco Co. cases, in which, I think, it introduced an element into the law that is not there; but I do not care to speak of that now.

Let us take, now, four or five of the great peaks in the history of this law. First, the Trans-Missouri Freight Association case, as well as its companion case, the Traffic Association case. What the railroads were doing under the arrangements that were there complained of was condemned by the Supreme Court, and these associations were dissolved. There is not an intelligent and observing man in the United States who does not know that the railroads are doing all the time the very thing that was declared in those cases to be a violation of the antitrust law.

Mr. BORAH. That certainly is not the fault of the court.

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment. It is the fault of the administration of the law through the court.

Second, let us go forward to the Northern Securities case. The Northern Securities case was intended to destroy the joint operation of the Northern Pacific Railroad and the Great Northern Railroad and to secure competition between those two great properties. There is not a man but who knows that the relation between those two properties is just as close and intimate and effectual now as it was when they were combined in the Northern Securities Co. of New Jersey.

Let us go forward again to the Standard Oil case. That company was denounced. Thirty-four companies were organized to take its place; and they have been operating, with a single exception, as I believe, just as much in association since the decision and since the decree as before.

The last case is that of the American Tobacco Co. It was denounced as a violation of the antitrust law. It was divided into 14 or 17 new organizations, and it has been conducting its business with just as much intimacy and with practically the same correlation between its various parts as before the decision of the court was announced.

Now, that is not the fault of the court. The Supreme Court laid down the correct principle in each of these cases; but so long as we must operate simply through the Attorney General's office—I care not how faithful and diligent he may be—there is no way to arrest these operations; and if we can not arrest them by committing the task to some tribunal whose sole duty it will be to prevent these practices, then we are hopeless, as I look at it.

I agree with my colleague [Mr. KENYON]; the courts will not put these men in jail. Why? Because they have done things which the most respectable men in the land do and have done and have maintained their places in society and in industry. They will not put a man in jail for those things; at least that has been our history.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the Senator refers to the courts. I imagine he means juries, does he not?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; they have been convicted now and then; but, as my colleague has said, the courts, having the alternative either to fine or to imprison, or both, have simply fined, and a fine is of no consequence. There never was but one fine inflicted, as far as I recall, the payment of which would have been a considerable penalty upon these concerns. There was a judge in Chicago who fined a company $29,000,000, and if the company had been compelled to pay that fine it might have created some respect for the law; but you all know how that fine was disposed of. I think, and I believe the Senator from Idaho will agree, that in the execution of these laws we must have some other and additional arm of the Government to strike a blow that will be felt.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not understand what the Senator from Iowa means when he says that we have not the power under the Sherman antitrust law, so long as it is executed through the courts, to carry into execution the decrees and judgments of the courts. I think we have the power; I have not any doubt that we have the power, and I think the Senator must conclude that we have the power. I presume what he means is that we are not willing to exercise it.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I do not mean that we are not willing to exercise it, but I mean that in this great, complicated Government of ours, where each of the various departments of Government has so much to do, and where the head of each of the departments is a political officer——

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is confessing just what I said.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not confessing anything; I am asserting. The head of each department is a political officer, and I am not using that term in a critical or disparaging sense. He must be a political officer. The Attorney General of the United States is one of the Cabinet officers. He is a man to advise with regard to politics. He is a man who must take into account tens of thousands of other things than the enforcement of the antitrust law. It is utterly impossible, as I look at it, to expect that the Attorney General will follow these decrees into their full and complete execution. I do not know, but I believe that the decree that was entered, bad as it was, in the American Tobacco Co. case, might well be inquired into, to ascertain whether the decree itself is not being violated from day to day; but who is to do it?

Mr. BORAH. There is no reason to assume that a commission would do that any more quickly than an Attorney General. The Attorney General has, in the first place, the power largely to define and to control the decree; and I do not see why we can assume that he will not inquire into it except upon general principles, the feeling that we are not willing to go to the extent of executing these decrees; and it is not because the machinery is out of order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am somewhat impressed with the Senator's observation with regard to vesting so much power in the commission, and I am inclined to sympathize somewhat with that thought. It seems to me that we are in danger of transferring to commissions a large number of the functions and activities of the Government, which may eventually prove rather a dangerous situation to us; and this commission undoubtedly would have tremendous power over all the industries of the country. The Senator's attention, however, is called to the fact that each commissioner is appointed only for seven years, and that he is subject to removal for malfeasance in office.

I wish to inquire of the Senator whether he can suggest any better way of controlling a commission of this kind. It seems to me that is perhaps more effective than the power of legislating them out of office, as suggested by the Senator from Iowa. Under this bill the term of each of these commissioners expires in seven years, and the President has the power to remove in the case of misconduct or malfeasance in office. Is there any way the Senator can arrange or suggest what will give a better control over the situation than that?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to make just one observation, if the Senator will permit me, and that is with reference to the power of the Attorney General to enforce thoroughly the antitrust act. I have not the slightest doubt that the courts are entirely capable of declaring the law, and that the Attorneys General whom we have had have been capable lawyers; and I believe that with the exception possibly of the Knight case the Supreme Court has declared the law in such a way as to effect the dissolution of every monopoly whose dissolution ought to have been decreed. The difficulty is that the enforcement of the law breaks down after the decision of the court.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. NEWLANDS. First in the framing of the decree, and then in the enforcement of the decree.

Mr. BORAH. Well, so far as——

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will permit me, simply because judges have not the training and experience in economics and industry which enables them, after dissolving a corporation, to permit or accomplish its reorganization in such a way as to make the decree really effective.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I will not agree to the proposition that the judges are to blame for these decrees. We know how these decrees have been framed.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not say they are to blame. I simply say they have not that peculiar kind of training and experience that is absolutely essential to reintegrate the elements that have been dissolved by a decree destroying a monopoly.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, without wishing to interrupt the Senators who are engaged in this debate, I ask the Senator from Idaho if he desires to go on and complete his remarks to-night?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, when I was at work on the farm I always quit at 5 o'clock on Saturday. I shall be glad to quit now if the Senator can take up the time.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask that the bill may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will be done.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 29, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridan.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 27, 1914.

The House met at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, we bless Thee for all the faculties of mind and soul with which Thou hast endowed us, which, under the dispensation of Thy providence are ours to unfold to full and symmetrical proportions till we all come in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ—a precious privilege, yet a great responsibility. Help us, we beseech Thee, to strive earnestly for the mastery. In His name, amen.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal as read will be approved.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the Journal says that the House agreed, after a quorum was shown not to be present, to meet at 10.30 o'clock this morning. I think the Journal should show that, pending the announcement of the roll call, the House adjourned to meet at 10.30 this morning. That was the fact. The Journal ought not to show that the House took action when there was no quorum present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is undoubtedly the fact, Mr. Speaker. The House agreed to the time of meeting before the announcement of the lack of a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will be directed to make that change in the Journal.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, on the roll call on amendment numbered 43, next to the last roll call that was had, the Journal shows that four Members answered "present." When the roll was completed there was not a quorum present, as shown by the roll call, and the Speaker directed the Clerk to note as present the gentleman from New York [Mr. BROWN] and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN]. The roll call shows that they answered "present." That would indicate a voluntary act upon their part, when it might have been very embarrassing to the gentlemen to have voted "present" when they might have desired to vote "yea" or "nay"; and when they had refrained from exercising the privilege of voting the Speaker directed that the Clerk note the presence of Mr. BROWN of New York and Mr. BRYAN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that Mr. BRYAN and Mr. BROWN of New York could not vote because they were not in the Hall at the time listening——

Mr. MANN. That is true.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And that they were present at the time that the Speaker told the Clerk to enroll them.

Mr. MANN. The Speaker directed the Clerk to note, under clause 3 of Rule XV, the presence of Mr. BRYAN and Mr. BROWN of New York to make a quorum. But they did not themselves answer "present," and the Journal shows that they answered "present." If they had voted at all, they might have desired to vote "yea" or "nay."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not quite catch the point which the gentleman from Illinois desires to make.

Mr. MANN. Under the rule, if a quorum does not vote and there is any Member in the House who has not voted, any Member may suggest, or the Speaker himself may direct, that the presence of those Members be noted in order to make up a quorum. That was done yesterday, but the Journal, I repeat, shows that they answered "present." If they could answer at all, they might have preferred to answer "yea" or "nay."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois desires the Journal to show that they were noted as present rather than that they answered "present."

Mr. MANN. Yes. It should show that they are noted as present instead of having answered "present."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Illinois is correct in that. That would yet constitute a quorum.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; certainly it would constitute a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there is no objection, the correction of the Journal will be made.

There was no objection.

The Journal was approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Speaker, I secured unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill, but it does not appear in the RECORD. I would like to have the omission corrected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from California have any particular preference as to the day on which he desires it to be shown that he made that request?

Mr. KETTNER. It does not make any difference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. KETTNER] desires to have the RECORD show that he had unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the Agricultural appropriation bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, before adjournment yesterday afternoon the previous question had been ordered upon the motion to recede and concur in Senate amendment 48. I ask unanimous consent that the order calling for the yeas and nays on that motion be vacated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the order calling for the yeas and nays upon the motion with reference to amendment numbered 48 be vacated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, Mr. Speaker, let us have a vote on the motion to further insist on the disagreement of the House——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the vote that was had last night, although a quorum did not appear, would be considered by the conferees as sufficient instruction to the conferees, and would be considered as a sufficient expression of opinion on the part of the House?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It would; and besides that I had stated that the amendment would not come back in the conference report, anyway. I made that statement in my remarks.

Mr. MANN. I did not hear the gentleman make the statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina that the House insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment 48.

Mr. CANTOR. Let us have the Senate amendment reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 40, line 22, insert the following:
"Assistant to the Secretary, to be appointed by the Secretary, $4,500."

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask that Senate amendment 52 be reported.

Page 41, line 6, strike out the figures "$60,670" and insert the figures "$68,320."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, which is simply a total, depending on the other amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment 52.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask that Senate amendment 76 be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 55, after line 17, insert the following:

"To pay to Thomas P. Kane the difference between the compensation allowed by law for the Comptroller of the Currency and the compensation allowed by law for the Deputy Comptroller of the Currency, for services as Acting Comptroller of the Currency from April 28, 1913, when the office of the Comptroller of the Currency was vacated, and continuing as long as the duties and responsibilities of said office of the Comptroller of the Currency shall devolve upon said Thomas P. Kane as Acting Comptroller of the Currency, such an amount as may be necessary, to be paid from the $5,000 appropriated for salary of the Comptroller of the Currency by the act of August 23, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 377), for such part of such services as may be rendered during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1913; and such amount as may be necessary to be paid from the $5,000 appropriated for salary of the Comptroller of the Currency by the act of March 4, 1913 (Stat. L., p. 756), for such part of such services as may be rendered during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment 76.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Without regard to the merits of the amendment, I wish to call attention to the form of the amendment. At the beginning of line 24 the amendment says, "and continuing as long as the duties and responsibilities of said office of the Comptroller of the Currency shall devolve upon said Thomas P. Kane as Acting Comptroller of the Currency." In another part of the amendment, page 56, line 7, it says, "for such part of such services as may be rendered during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1913"; and also, "for such part of such services as may be rendered during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914." He is not now occupying this office, is he?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No. Mr. Williams is comptroller; but from the time Mr. Murray went out until Mr. Williams took the office Mr. Kane acted as comptroller.

Mr. MANN. The language of the amendment assumes that he is still occupying the office, and may continue to. So if the amendment should be agreed to—and I do not express any opinion about that—I think the language ought to be corrected, so that it will not apparently relate to the future.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is quite true; but I will say to the gentleman that the language of the amendment is the language that came down in the estimates at the time he was filling the office.

Mr. MANN. I suppose that is true.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word. I am informed that the statement has been made that I am in favor of this amendment. I simply wish to say that I am unalterably opposed to this amendment. I believe the policy proposed in it is absolutely indefensible and should not be initiated by Congress. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina that the House further insist on its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the next amendment be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 78:

"Page 57, line 4, strike out the figures '$6,000' and insert the figures '$6,500.'"

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment 78.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) the Speaker pro tempore announced that there were 55 ayes and no noes.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I arose when the negative was called for.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this question the vote is 55 ayes and 1 no.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the next amendment be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment 79:

"Page 57, lines 13 and 14, strike out the figures '359,270' and insert '359,770.'"

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate. This is only a total, depending on the action taken on previous amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk report Senate amendment 85.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 85, lines 16 and 17, strike out the figures "$10,000" and insert the figures "$30,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment 85. I will say that this depends on the disposition of other amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment 85.

Mr. MANN. Does this depend on what disposition is made of the amendments relating to the assay offices?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; this amendment depends upon what we do with those amendments.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk report the next amendment, Senate amendment 101.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 67, line 17, strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$1,500,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a preferential motion. I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment. The gentleman from South Carolina, of course, is entitled to control the floor, and I will ask him to yield such time as may be necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, how much time is desired on the other side of this proposition?

Mr. MANN. Fifteen or twenty minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] desires half an hour.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I may not use it all.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will yield half an hour on that side.

Mr. MANN. That will use up the gentleman's time, and he had better ask unanimous consent for a little additional time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this motion end in one hour.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is going to take half an hour, and we want some time after that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] want more than 20 minutes?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] takes half an hour, it may take more than 20 minutes to answer him.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not desire to delay the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I will see if we can agree on 1 hour and 20 minutes. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this motion be limited to 1 hour and 20 minutes, one-half that time to be controlled by myself, and one-half by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]; that at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered.

Mr. MANN. Will that take care of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; the gentleman from South Carolina will yield to me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that debate on this item be limited to 1 hour and 20 minutes, 40 minutes to be controlled by himself, and 40 minutes by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], and that at the end of this hour and 20 minutes the previous question be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have moved to recede and concur in the Senate amendment. The effect of this motion is to increase the amount of the appropriation that will be available to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the enforcement of the income-tax law from $1,000,000, the amount now carried in the bill, to $1,500,000.

I do not desire to combat the views of the members of the committee on this question, and I would not do so if it were not for the fact that the amount of the appropriation directly relates to matters over which the Ways and Means Committee have jurisdiction.

In my judgment, after a full and careful consideration of this question with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, I believe it will be necessary for him to have the full $1,500,000 available to enforce the law within the next year. More than that, I believe the Government of the United States will make the amount of this appropriation many times over by increasing the appropriation from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000.

Of course I take it that the House understands that this appropriation will be used partially for the collection of the income tax in the regular channels, but the additional amount that is asked for will be almost entirely used to enforce the collection of the income tax against persons and corporations that are trying to evade the law. I take it that no matter what a man's opinion may be in reference to the income-tax principle, or whatever may be his opinion in reference to expenditures, that no man will take issue on the proposition that individuals and corporations who are attempting to evade the law and who are not paying their proportion of the income tax when it is due ought to be brought to a reckoning and required to comply with the terms of the law.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has stated to me that he believes this additional appropriation will allow him to make investigations that will enable him to collect from $15 to $25 for every dollar of this additional appropriation; that the indications are that a great many people have not made their returns, and some who have made their returns have not made the returns that the law requires them to make, some through ignorance, some through mistake, and some through deliberation. For these reasons I think it is important that the appropriation should be increased to the amount fixed by the Senate.

I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this is not an unusual request. It costs at the present time 3½ per cent to collect our customs revenues. It costs at the present time 1½ per cent to collect our ordinary internal-revenue taxes on whisky, tobacco, and other things, excluding the income tax.

Although the returns from the income tax this year will not reach the maximum and will fall somewhat below $100,000,000, there is no question in my mind, and I think I can demonstrate to the House in a few minutes, that the ordinary returns which will be collected from the income tax and the corporation tax in a normal year will amount to more than $100,000,000. A cost of collection of $1,500,000 a year will not exceed the amount that it costs us to collect the ordinary internal-revenue taxes to-day. It is much less than it costs most of the European countries to collect their internal-revenue taxes, and it will cost us very much less than to collect our customs taxes, as is shown by the difference between 3½ per cent and 1½ per cent. So I do not think the request of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is unreasonable.

Furthermore, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that this is a new law. It is true that we had an income-tax law 20 years ago, but it hardly was enacted into law before it was wiped off the statute books. There are a great many people in the United States who do not understand the law. Some probably desire to evade it, but in my judgment most of the failures to make returns are due to the fact of a misunderstanding of the terms of the law and not to an actual intention to violate the law. But whatever may be the cause we are putting into effect a new law. We have the machinery of that new law to build up. We have a vast deal of work to do this year, and possibly next year, in reference to the collection of taxes under this law, that will not be required in the future. I think it would be bad and false economy to withhold from this bureau the money that they say is necessary to enforce the law at this time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to take advantage of this opportunity to make a short statement not directly bearing on the amendment in reference to the present condition of the Treasury. As there have been a great many misleading statements made in the daily press I desire to call to the attention of the House and to embody in the RECORD a few facts in reference to actual conditions. I have seen it stated in the press and heard it stated on this floor that the present law would leave a great deficit in the Treasury. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, instead of the law being a disappointment as a revenue measure it has exceeded the expectations of those who wrote the law. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am reading now from a statement furnished to me by the experts of the Treasury Department on yesterday and from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1913, so that the figures that I propose to give to the House are official and not mine.

First, in reference to the customs receipts. When the recent tariff bill was written the committee estimated that the customs receipts for the first fiscal year under the new law would amount to $270,000,000. That amount has already been largely exceeded by the returns already received by the Treasury Department, and the Treasury estimate of the moneys that will be received from customs for this fiscal year amount to $292,000,000, or an excess in customs receipts of $22,000,000 above the estimate presented to the House at the time the bill became a law. Under the last year of the Payne bill the receipts from customs dues amounted to $318,891,396, so that it is seen that the falling off in customs dues between the present law and the Payne law will amount to the difference between $318,891,396 and $292,000,000, or about $27,000,000. Of course, we expected that there would be a falling off in the receipts from customs dues to some extent, or if we had not we would not have proposed the income tax. As a matter of fact, as I stated, we are receiving $22,000,000 more from customs receipts than we expected to receive. For the fiscal year 1914 the receipts from internal revenue, exclusive of the corporation and income tax, were estimated by the Treasury Department at $312,000,000.

The Treasury experts report that at the end of this fiscal year they will amount to $309,000,000, which is a falling off of $3,000,000 in the estimates. However, the ordinary internal-revenue receipts will be equal to the amount of the internal-revenue taxes received under the last year of the Payne law, which in that year amounted to $309,000,000. As to the corporation and income tax, the Treasury Department estimated that the returns from it for this fiscal year would amount to $95,000,000. As a matter of fact, this year it will not amount to more than $75,000,000, which is a falling off of $20,000,000, but we have made up $22,000,000 in customs receipts. I want to say to the House that although there is an apparent falling off of $20,000,000 in the income-tax receipts, that there will be no actual falling off for the next fiscal year. It is true that the income tax has in its operation applied thus far to the last 10 months of the year 1913, but it must be borne in mind that a large proportion of incomes upon which no collection of tax could be made this year accrue and are payable in January and February of 1913. Probably nearly one-half of the dividends and coupon interest on bonds are payable on January and February of each year, and of course they are not included in this year's returns of the income tax.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Did they not, in computing the income tax, take the full amount for the year and then take five-sixths of it for the 10 months, so that it includes the dividends received in January and February for a proportionate amount of the taxes?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No.

Mr. PAYNE. That was according to the instructions, according to which men made out their income-tax returns.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. PAYNE. If I can get a copy of it, I will show the gentleman that he is mistaken.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I will call attention to the fact that the five-sixths provision relates to deductions alone.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; it relates only to deductions. No one is charged for income for this last year except for income actually received during the last 10 months of the calendar year 1913. The income-tax assessment upon semiannual incomes payable in January and July only applied in 1913 to a period of four months. The law applied only seven months in 1913 to all quarterly incomes payable in January, July, and October. So it is fair to say that the entire income-tax rates really applied to these large classes of income during one-half of the year that has been available in which to collect the tax. Include the corporation portion of the tax and double the amount of the income tax that is collected for this year and you will have considerably more than one hundred millions of dollars, and the Treasury experts made the estimate only for $95,000,000. So I think it goes without saying that for next year we can be assured of collecting more than $100,000,000 from the income tax, even if no more proportionately is collected than was this year. But we will collect considerably more proportionately. I wish to call attention to the fact that under the Payne law the corporation tax produced more than one-fourth less the first year that it was in operation than the last year it was in operation, due to the fact that the Government had not caught up with some people who withheld their taxes, and also due to the fact that a great many people made mistakes in returning their taxes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. For a question only.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the comparison of the corporation tax between this year and last year?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The corporation tax for this fiscal year will yield about $44,000,000, as compared with $35,000,000 for last year. It will show an increase of about $9,000,000 over the last year of the Payne bill. That may be due to some extent to its natural growth, but to a large extent to the fact that we have cut out of the corporation tax the exemption of $5,000 and required all corporations to make a return now, whereas heretofore only corporations having an income in excess of $5,000 had to make the return. Now, Mr. Speaker, we estimated the returns last year for miscellaneous receipts at $59,000,000. As a matter of fact, there will be a falling off of $2,000,000, as shown by the figures furnished me by the Treasury Department, and they will only amount to $57,000,000, but, of course, the new tariff law had no relation to that whatever, because the miscellaneous receipts have been in no way affected by it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the gentleman put into the RECORD the principal items going to make up the item of miscellaneous receipts? I think it will be of interest in this connection to the whole membership.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will insert the principal items included under miscellaneous receipts. The following table shows the items included under miscellaneous receipts and the revenue collected from each during the fiscal years 1912 and 1913:

Now, Mr. Speaker, summing up all the estimates, the total receipts for the fiscal year 1914 as estimated by the Treasury Department amounted to $736,000,000. As a matter of fact, as shown by the returns of the Treasury Department, the collections will amount to $733,000,000. In other words, the returns for this year will be only $3,000,000 less than our estimates for the total estimates, and that loss of $3,000,000 in our estimates is almost entirely made up by the falling off of $2,000,000 in miscellaneous receipts, over which we had no control whatever, and we merely make the estimates from the last year. Now, when you compare the fact that we will raise this year $733,000,000, with only a half-year exercise of the income features of the law, with the fact that when the Payne law was in effect the receipts only amounted to $724,000,000, and that the receipts under our bill which will be turned into the Treasury exceed the receipts under the Payne bill as $733,000,000 exceeds $724,000,000, or $9,000,000 in actual receipts, it seems to me that gentlemen who have been criticizing this bill from the standpoint that it would cause a deficit in the Treasury and would not supply the Government with sufficient revenue have been dreaming idle dreams and making statements that were backed up by the wishes that sprung from political antagonism and not from basic facts as shown by the report of the Treasury. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, as to whether or not there will be a deficit in the Treasury, as I have said, the total receipts will amount to $733,000,000, and the total ordinary disbursements for this year will amount to $703,000,000, leaving a balance in favor of the Treasury or a surplus for this year of $30,000,000, with the income tax in full operation only a half year. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But gentlemen will say that that does not include the expenditure for the Panama Canal, and it does not.

The Treasury Department advises me that they will expend on the Panama Canal this year $35,000,000. With $30,000,000 of surplus over ordinary receipts and disbursements and $35,000,000 to be expended on the Panama Canal, it leaves $5,000,000 that has to be raised to pay for the Panama Canal expenditures, and only $5,000,000. Well, now, I want to say that $5,000,000, and vastly more, is in the Treasury to-day in the way of a surplus, and the Government of the United States does not have to borrow from anybody to pay it; but in the course of the next year the expenditures on the Panama Canal will practically pass away and the following year they will practically all be gone and the receipts from the canal will pay the running expenses of the canal. But there is nothing in having a deficit in the Treasury. I want to call attention to the fact, and I read from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1913, on page 123—under the Payne bill for the year 1898——

Mr. PAYNE. It was not under the Payne bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Under the Dingley bill. In 1898 there was a deficit in the Treasury of over $61,000,000. Now, coming down to a more recent year——

Mr. MURDOCK. That is, at the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. At the end of the fiscal year. For 1909, under the Payne bill, there was a total deficit of over $118,000,000.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, now, I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Payne bill did not go into operation until the end of the fiscal year 1909. You can not blame the Payne bill for that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Payne bill was partly in operation and the Dingley bill was partly in operation.

Mr. PAYNE. The 30th of June was the end of the fiscal year 1909, and the Payne bill did not go into operation until after that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will correct my statement; it is the Dingley bill. In 1909 there was a deficit of $118,000,000. Now, just one word; the next year, 1910, there was a deficit under the Payne bill of over $19,000,000. Furthermore, even with the receipts from the issuance of Panama Canal bonds, amounting to over $138,000,000, the disbursements for the fiscal years 1907 to and including 1913 exceeded the receipts for the same period by almost $10,000,000. The following table shows the Panama Canal receipts and the surplus or deficit in the Treasury at the close of each fiscal year from 1907 to and including 1913:

Panama Canal receipts and surplus or deficit on all Treasury receipts, 1907 to 1913.

Just one other matter. Much has been said concerning the falling off in exports as compared with those of the preceding year. I desire to print a table showing the total exports since 1898 and to call your attention to the fact that the exports did not reach the $2,000,000,000 limit until 1911, when they were $2,049,320,199; in 1912 the exports increased to $2,204,322,409, and for the first 11 months of this year they have been $2,207,424,688. The exports for the first 11 months of this year have exceeded the exports of every preceding year, with the exception of 1913, when they were $2,465,884,149, and we still have a month's exports to add to the 11 months' total before a fair comparison can be made. The following table shows the exports of domestic and foreign merchandise for the fiscal years 1898 to 1913 and for the first 11 months of 1914:

[1] First 11 months of fiscal year.

EXPORTS OF BREADSTUFFS.

For the first 10 months of this fiscal year the exports of domestic merchandise amounted to $2,018,083,447, as compared with $2,077,277,678 for the same period last year, thus showing a falling off of $59,194,231. The exports of breadstuffs for the 10 months this year were $139,000,000, as compared with $185,000,000 for the same period last year, or a decrease of $46,000,000. Over 78 per cent of the decline in exports is due to the decrease in the exports of breadstuffs, and for this decrease in breadstuffs lessened exports of barley, corn, and oats account for a decline of $41,000,000. Thus the short yield of these three crops has been the chief factor in turning the scale of the export trade.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is recognized for 40 minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I did not know this matter was coming up until the gentleman from Alabama made his motion, and especially I did not know there was to be a review of the condition of the Treasury, either under the Payne bill or under the Underwood bill, or I should have had the facts and figures here to make a more clearly official statement than I can make now on the spur of the moment. I desire to say there was no deficit under the Payne bill during any year. That bill did not go into operation until July, and what the gentleman claims was a deficit previous to that was not at all under any moment of the Payne Act. The deficit he speaks of in 1899 was after the large demand for the expenses of the War with Spain.

The deficit he speaks of in the year 1909, which seems to be greatly exaggerated by his statement—I have not the figures here to show it was——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will furnish the gentleman with the Treasury statement. My statement is taken entirely from the Treasury Department figures, and will send the document I have to the gentleman, if he will return it to me. They are not my figures. It is the published statement of the Treasury Department.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I can not find it just now, unless the gentleman will point his finger to it. It seems to include the expenses of the Panama Canal for that year.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think that is correct.

Mr. PAYNE. On page 120 this report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows a deficit of $58,734,357 73, of ordinary expenses over ordinary receipts, or $60,000,000 less than the amount of $118,795,919.63, stated by the gentleman. This was for the last fiscal year under the Dingley law.

During the four years and a little over that the Payne law was in operation we not only paid the ordinary expenses of the Government every year, but during the time we had a surplus of ordinary receipts over ordinary expenditures of $141,000,000 that we applied to the expenses of the Panama Canal. Now, the expenditures for the Panama Canal, I will agree with the gentleman, are not to be charged in the ordinary expenditures of the Government. I can not join with the gentleman in his optimism that we are going to get enough tolls out of the Panama Canal to take care of the expenses of its operation in the future. No one who has examined that subject believes that for a single moment.

But the gentleman has confused the years greatly in his statement, beyond all that. He is claiming credit for the revenues for the entire fiscal year ending the 30th day of this month, but the "blessed" Underwood bill did not go into operation until three months and three days of the fiscal year had already passed away, and the revenues then were due to the Payne Act and not to the Underwood bill. And the gentleman does not make any mention of the fact that the Underwood bill as to its greatest reduction in its tariff rates did not get into full operation until January 1. So that six months had elapsed under the Payne Act before we began to get definite returns under the Underwood bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In fairness, the gentleman ought to say that returns under the Underwood bill, or most of the returns, started in October. He ought to say in fairness that the customs returns under the Payne bill up to October were much less proportionately than they have been since that time.

Mr. PAYNE. I remember that on the 1st of October our jovial, optimistic Secretary of Commerce said in a public statement that the importation of precious stones would amount to $56,000,000 in that year. Well, they were $44,000,000 up to that time under the Payne law, paying a duty of 10 per cent. They have been practically nothing under the ridiculous duty of 20 per cent under the Underwood bill, in which case you can not collect duties on precious stones that are so easily smuggled into the country. The gentleman in all fairness, if he was going to bring in this statement, ought to have gotten from the Treasury Department just what the falling off of the revenues was on his wool schedule and sugar schedule, and all along the line.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would be delighted to give the falling off in wool and sugar, because the people of the United States receive the direct benefits from that falling off.

Mr. PAYNE. Exactly. Now, if the gentleman wants to claim any benefit from that he does not want to be claiming the benefit of the Payne law when they collected these duties and prevented a deficit in the fiscal year ending the 30th of this month.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman knows as well as I do that they ceased largely in importing sugar, so far as they could, and almost entirely ceased to import wool when they found the Underwood bill was going on the statute books. The gentleman knows that. There were practically no importations in those times.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman can not get it out of the report, unless he looks at it with a microscope to find out whether that is true. Of course the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has access to all these papers that I, as a member of the minority, do not have.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman knows, and it was stated in the debate here a number of times on the floor, that after it became apparent that the present law was going to be enacted as to free wool the importation of wool practically ceased.

Mr. PAYNE. You claimed the factories were running full force and had to have wool to run with, and they had to import the wool. The gentleman will find it so if he will look at the reports. They do not enter into the computation at all, and he wants to take credit for his bill, whereas credit is due to the bill that was superseded by his bill.

They claim they had disappointment in regard to the income-tax returns. What mortal man knew what would come under the income-tax law? Who knew anything about the incomes of the people of the United States? They had figures that were derived from the statements that were made on the Chautauqua lecture course that a hundred of these people had an income of $10,000,000, and some of them $100,000,000, and they were going to get an income out of that. They did not take into consideration that these Chautauqua gentlemen did not know anything more about it than the Secretary of the Treasury, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], and the gentleman from Alabama,

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAYNE. I can not yield. I have only 10 minutes.

They are disappointed about this. Now, they want more money. What for? For a little inquisition to inquire about the income of the people of the United States. They said that one of the blessed advantages under this whole matter was that we were not going to have inquisition, that people were going to be nice under it, and all that sort of thing. Now, the people are all dishonest. Why? Because the income tax does not come up to the expectation that these gentlemen founded on the merest rumor and on the remarks that were made in the Chautauqua lecture courses and the muckraking magazines. We will know on the 30th of June what the result will be for the fiscal year ending on that day. Or, we will know when the returns are made up. It is pretty hard work to get at them now. They are delayed for some reason or other. We do not get them. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] seems to have access to the Treasury Department. Whatever their books may show, I do not know, but there is a big falling off in their expectations; and still they come in here claiming the benefits under the Payne law for the three months of the fiscal year, six months on wool and five months on sugar, and five months on woolen goods, and all that sort of thing, and say that they are going to get along without a deficiency. The gentleman did not even mention in his half-hour's speech that the Payne law was entitled to any credit for the increased receipts under the present fiscal year.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman should be fair. When he contends that this law is not raising revenue, and when stated here on the authority of the Treasury Department—and it is within a few days of the end of the fiscal year—that it will raise $733,000,000 as against $724,000,000 raised in the Payne bill, I say the gentleman's statement is absolutely unjustified and not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I might say that the gentleman did not state that or the Secretary of the Treasury did not state it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did state it.

Mr. PAYNE. It is all prophecy, and you have been prophesying from the time you put this law on the statute book up to the present time. You prophesied you were not going to have any trouble. You did not have any trouble, you said; there was no trouble with business; everything was lovely. And while everybody else in the United States whose judgment was of any account knew that business was rotten, you kept on putting out that statement, and finally an intimation of the condition of business got to the White House, and the President, who was optimistic and had been telling that there was not anything the matter with business, finally admitted that "while business is not so good as it might be, yet the depression is only psychological," and it should not be blamed on the Underwood tariff bill.

When you got the Underwood bill on the statute books even the Speaker of the House, along about the 1st of December, made a speech here in which he said. "When we get the currency act passed everything will blossom as the rose." [Laughter on the Republican side.] We have been looking for those blossoms ever since. [Renewed laughter on the Republican side.] But it is the blossoming of thistles instead of roses.

Then you put your currency bill on the statute book late in December. Still there was something the matter. Business wanted a little more medicine. So the man who controls Congress and leads you, bound, hither and thither, while none of you dares say his soul is his own or has an idea that he dares express, says, "We must have these trust measures passed and you must stay here all summer and all winter and all the rest of the time and put them on the statute books; and when we get those on the statute books, then the psychological panics will disappear, and the Claflin failures will disappear, and business will blossom as a rose." [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] is recognized.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, this item is to provide an immense sum for the enforcement of the income-tax law. I desire to take this opportunity to call to the attention of the membership of the House the absolutely arbitrary and unreasonable policy being followed, in connection with the imposition of penalties, by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the enforcement of this law.

In the income-tax law provision has been made for certain penalties for failure to make reports by certain dates. The commissioner, in the adoption of his policy, and with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, has taken that provision of the law as some splendid new toy which he may operate for his own amusement, regardless of the real purposes of the act. Being given the opportunity, he is enforcing the collection of penalties, regardless of all considerations of fairness or of reason. He must have the pound of flesh.

In the case of an individual who has no net income subject to the tax he is not required by the law to make any report. The individual who has a net income subject to the tax is required to make report, and for failure to make such report within the time specified he is subject to a penalty of not less than $20, according to the law.

In the case of a corporation, whether it has a net income subject to taxation under the law or not, that corporation must make a report. For failure to make such report within the time specified such corporation is subject to a penalty of not exceeding $10,000, in the discretion of the officers charged with its enforcement. The following is the provision of the law found in subparagraph (d) of paragraph G of the income-tax law:

If any of the corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies aforesaid shall refuse or neglect to make a return at the time or times hereinbefore specified in each year, or shall render a false or fraudulent return, such corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $10,000.

The policy adopted by the Internal-Revenue Service is shown by the following circular letter issued by the collector of internal revenue at Detroit, Mich., and which has the approval of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and of the Treasury Department:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
INTERNAL-REVENUE SERVICE.

SIR: Your return of net income was not received in this office until ——— thereby involving you in liability to a specific penalty of not to exceed $10,000, under the act of October 3, 1913, in addition to the 50 per cent additional tax which will be assessed and collected.

The provisions of the act are mandatory, and no excuse or explanation can be accepted, except a showing that a complete or tentative return was in fact mailed in time to have reached this office, or a deputy collector, in the ordinary course of business on or before March 2, 1914 (March 1 being Sunday).

However, before instituting proceedings in court for the imposition of the specific penalty, I am directed to call your attention to the provisions of section 3229, Revised Statutes, which reads in part as follows:

"The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the advice and consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, may compromise any civil or criminal case arising under the internal-revenue laws instead of commencing suit thereon * * *."

Should you desire to take advantage of your privilege under this section and to submit an offer in compromise, the amount offered should be forwarded promptly to this office in the form of cash, postal money order, or certified check, which can be cashed without cost, payable to my order, accompanied by affidavit substantially in the following form:

"To the COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE:

"I hereby solemnly swear (or affirm) that my delinquency in filing return of net income as required by the act of October 3, 1913, was not due to any intent to violate the law or evade taxation, but was due to (here insert, concisely and clearly, the reason for delay).

"Desiring to compromise my liability, I hereby tender the sum of $———, which I request be accepted in compromise of the specific penalty only."

To be signed and sworn to before a deputy collector, notary, or other officer authorized to administer oaths.

This affidavit will then be forwarded by me, together with the sum offered, to the commissioner for consideration, and you will be notified by him of his acceptance or rejection of your proposal. In the latter event, you may increase your offer, if you so desire.

It may be added, that the department will not take favorable action on offers of less than $50 in cases similar to yours, but has accepted that amount in cases where there has been no intent to violate the law.

Respectfully,

JAMES J. BRADY,
Collector of Internal Revenue.

I have had this matter up at some length with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and, in the absence of the Secretary of the Treasury, with the Assistant Secretary, Mr. Hamlin, and find that the policy set forth in the above circular has the full approval of the department and is apparently its settled policy. Under this ruling every corporation that failed to file its report on the minute specified by the statute is liable to a fine of not less than $50, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue proposes to impose that fine and insist on its collection, regardless of whether the failure was the result of pardonable ignorance of the provisions of a new law, illness of responsible officials, conflict of opinion among attorneys and officials as to liability under the law, or other reasons that would appeal to minds outside of the office of the Internal-Revenue Service as valid and reasonable ground for the exercise of the discretion given that service by the law. Furthermore, the commissioner proposes to collect such fine for failure to report as to their income from all corporations, regardless of whether such corporations have any income or whether or not they are organized for profit.

In actual practice he is insisting that such corporations shall pay fines of substantial amounts for failing to fill out and return blanks to be furnished by the Internal-Revenue Service several months before such blanks actually were furnished. In other words, the Internal-Revenue Service, which was clearly given by the statute above quoted a discretion in the imposition of fines, proposes to and is acting absolutely without discretion. Some little, struggling mutual corporation, not organized for profit and officered by those unfamiliar with law, is to be called on to pay the same penalty out of its shallow or empty treasury as would be the most powerful and affluent financial combination, with the most skilled legal talent at command. Such administration of this highly important statute is highly mischievous and well calculated to bring into needless disrepute a law worthy of public support, but, at the best, unpopular enough.

The income-tax law is a new statute. It went into effect last October, and the country is having its first experience of actual contact with its provisions. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], the author of the law, says that at the time these returns were due the taxpayer had "had little time to understand the law and still less time to see and study the regulations of the Treasury Department. But few income-tax officials were appointed until all tax returns were due." There was little opportunity for the Internal-Revenue Service to lend to the public the aid which it can and will render in future years. It would seem, then, that this is a good time for the exercise of some discretion by the Internal-Revenue Service. The purpose of penalties in the law is not the increase of the revenue but the proper enforcement of the law. Wherever a purpose to evade the law or to hinder its just operation is manifest, penalties should be enforced commensurate with the enormity of the offense; but where it clearly appears a failure to observe the law has been due absolutely to misunderstanding or to ignorance of the law, and that the law has been promptly complied with on suggestion from the Internal-Revenue Service, the purpose of the law has been satisfied, and nothing is to be gained by unfair and unreasonable imposition of harsh penalties.

These considerations might well obtain in the case of all penalties, either as against individuals or as against corporations, but have special weight in the case of corporations, inasmuch as the law requires action by all corporations, but only by such individuals as have an income subject to a tax.

I desire, however, to bring especially before your consideration that class of corporations having no net income, and especially those corporations which are not organized for profit. The law expressly exempts some such corporations, but there are many others of similar nature that are not exempted. One class that I will call especially to your attention and that will serve to illustrate the unreasonableness of the Treasury Department in its refusal to exercise any discretion are the mutual fire insurance companies that are so common in my State and, I presume, generally throughout the country. In practically every county we have one or more such mutual organizations, generally formed by farmers for the insuring of their farm homes and farm buildings against fire or other perils. They are all strictly mutual, with no thought or possibility of profit and, of course, no net income. Their method of doing business is generally that described in the following from M. B. Armstrong, secretary of the Monitor Insurance Co. of Oakland County:

> We borrow money to pay our losses and expenses, and at the end of each year make an assessment to pay borrowed money. We carry no surplus in our treasury.

These companies, having no net income, are, of course, not subject to the payment of any income tax, and it would be quite natural for one not familiar with the provisions of the income-tax law to suppose that hence they would not be subject to such statute. There are in Michigan 90 such corporations. I have addressed an inquiry to the secretary of each such corporation and have had replies from 78 of them and have been able to find only three that filed a report by March 1, 1914, as required by the law. This would indicate that the law was not very generally understood by them. Further, I am advised by the secretary of one company that he wrote to the deputy internal-revenue collector for his district in Michigan in February concerning this same matter, and was advised by that deputy internal-revenue collector that his company being a mutual company was not under the income-tax law. Two companies informed me that they had referred this question to their attorney and been advised that they were not under the law. Another company informs me that its president had made inquiry of an official of the Internal-Revenue Service, and likewise was advised that it was not under the income-tax law. While internal-revenue collectors and lawyers disagree as to the jurisdiction over such companies, is it a matter for wonderment or severe condemnation that these officials should fail to understand their duty under the law?

There are two revenue districts in Michigan, one with headquarters at Detroit and the other with headquarters at Grand Rapids. In the Grand Rapids district no attention has been paid to these companies. Thereby the Government is being saved some expense and can lose no proper revenue, as none of the companies have any income subject to taxation.

In the Detroit district a new official, a recent appointee of this Democratic administration, has taken up the reins of authority with all the vigor of a new broom and with all of the lack of discretion enjoined on him by his superiors at the head of the Internal-Revenue Service. Reports under the strict interpretation of the law were due from these companies to be filed not later than March 1 on blanks to be furnished by the Government. Late in April and early in May the Detroit office furnished these companies the blanks whereon to make the reports which they should have filed in February. Uniformly the officials made their returns immediately, the delay never being more than a few days from the receipt of the blanks, and none of them reported any net income which would properly subject them to the payment of an income tax. Perhaps Collector Brady had read of the fears of the Treasury heads and Democratic leaders that the revenues for the current year might not be sufficient under the new law. At any rate, he promptly sent out to all these companies demand for payment of $50 per, and almost uniformly he has insisted upon it.

Twenty companies have paid him the fine, thereby contributing about a thousand dollars to guard against any deficit in the Federal Treasury, and 12 others have been notified to pay. In five cases he is understood to have waived the penalty, and in at least one case he has expressly waived the penalty, stating:

> I have had under consideration the matter of penalty incurred by your company for failure to file its return of annual net income for 1913 within the prescribed time, and with the advice and consent of the United States attorney have decided to relieve you from the payment of any penalty this year in view of the fact that there has been no willful violation of the law.

That reads like a sensible exercise of a sound discretion, and it is greatly to be regretted that there has not been a more frequent exercise of such discretion, both in the Detroit and Washington offices of the Internal-Revenue Service. It is entirely within the discretion of the Internal-Revenue Service and the Treasury Department, and the responsibility for these foolish and unfair and unnecessary exactions of tribute from these struggling mutual organizations must rest upon those charged with the administration of the income-tax law and not upon Congress.

It is to be noted that under the corporation-tax law of 1909 as administered by Republican officials there was the exercise of a sound and reasonable discretion. Under the strict interpretation of the law these companies were charged with the duty of making reports of their income, even though such reports would be of no use after they were filed; but under Republican administration the exercise of a sound discretion in the Internal-Revenue Service was not an unknown quantity, and these companies were never called on for such reports, much less being fined heavily for failure to make reports before they were called for.

The large and strong corporations will not be called on to pay penalties for failure to file reports, for the simple reason that they well understand the provisions of the law. The burden of the unreasoning severity of the policy adopted by the Internal-Revenue Service falls on these companies made up of many individuals actuated not by a desire to reap profits but to aid one another in withstanding the heavy losses of fire and storm. There are companies of many other descriptions, dairy associations, rural telephone companies, and probably many thousand little corporate organizations throughout the country, similarly affected. Each of these is being summarily held up under form of law to the extent of $50 simply because the Commissioner of Internal Revenue will not distinguish between good faith and bad faith, will not exercise the discretion given him by the law. He apparently wants to see how fast his new toy can be made to run or wants to make as flattering a showing of revenues as possible.

Relief should be granted these companies. It could be granted by the Treasury Department, but there appears to be no hope for that. There is pending before the Committee on Ways and Means Senate joint resolution 155, introduced by Mr. SMITH of Georgia, and which provides as follows:

> Joint resolution to remit under certain conditions and for the year 1914 the penalties provided by the act approved October 3, 1913, for failure to properly return the income tax provided for in said act in cases where said returns are completed by June 1, 1914.
> Whereas the income tax has gone into effect for the first time during the present year; and
> Whereas through misapprehension of the law many parties have failed to make their proper returns prior to March 1, 1914: Therefore be it
> Resolved, etc., That the penalties provided by the act approved October 3, 1913, for failure to properly return the income tax provided for in said act be, and the same are hereby, remitted for the present year in all cases where said returns are completed by June 1 of the present year, and where the failure to make said returns was not due to a purpose willfully to refrain from making the same.

Fairness and good judgment would dictate the passage of such a resolution by this Congress in the absence of proper action by the Treasury Department. I hope such action will be taken by Congress, if not by the Treasury Department.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the President resolves all our troubles by declaring them to be "psychological." The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] dwells in the realms of prophecy. It is one thing to hope, even when the hope is long deferred. It is quite another thing——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman from Wyoming allow me to answer his statement? Does the gentleman from Wyoming think that is a fair statement when we are within less than a week of the close of the fiscal year and when I stated that the actual returns in the Treasury Department exceed the returns of the Payne bill last year to say that my statement is in the realms of prophecy?

Mr. MONDELL. I still insist that the gentleman is dwelling in the realms of prophecy, because the cold, hard fact remains that the working balance in the Treasury of approximately $150,000,000 left by a Republican administration has dwindled to as low as $70,000,000, and it is now less than $80,000,000; that our gold reserve has dwindled by about $75,000,000; and that our expenditures, careful as the Treasury Department is to pay no bills until compelled to do so, largely exceeded our receipts.

The gentleman from Alabama tries to console himself by reason of the fact that his law is even worse than any of us feared it would be or prophesied it would be. He says there are to be larger returns and have been larger returns up to this time on imports than was estimated. That is true, and that is evidence of the fact that the law which bears his name is injuring the industries of the country even more than we expected it would. The late Claflin failure, involving mercantile houses from the Pacific to the Atlantic and from the Gulf of Mexico to the Lakes, is the latest illustration of its effect.

If there was any line of business in the country that might reasonably have expected and hoped to be successful, or at least to have kept its head above water during troublesome Democratic times, it was an enterprise like that—importing, jobbing, and retailing—a business so diversified that of all the industries of the country it might have been best expected to weather the storm. That that great industry has failed is prophetic of what we may fear for the future.

It is true that imports have increased under the Underwood bill, increased in the last six months, from December to May, to an amount of $105,000,000 over and above the imports for the corresponding six months of the year before; $105,000,000 of foreign goods imported over and above the amount imported for a like period the year before, to take the place of American-made goods. No wonder great institutions like the Baldwin Locomotive Works, that ordinarily employ eighteen to nineteen thousand men, are now employing less than one-half that number. No wonder great wall-paper and other industries down in the President's State of Jersey are closing down.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield for an inquiry in regard to wool in just a moment. No wonder the business of the country is stagnant from one end of it to the other.

Mr. ALLEN. I want to say that I had not intended to ask the gentleman with reference to wool——

Mr. MONDELL. That seems to be the staple inquiry over there.

Mr. ALLEN. But since the gentleman has mentioned it, does he know that the farmers of Ohio are getting from 3 to 5 cents more a pound for wool this year than they did last?

Mr. MONDELL. I knew that inquiry would come, and I have said here repeatedly that I knew the farmers of Ohio did get a very little more for their wool this year than they got last year, when, due to the threat of a Democratic tariff bill and low prices abroad, wool was below a free-trade basis. I am going to print that answer, and every time I rise to speak I am going to read the printed answer, so as to save gentlemen on that side the trouble of asking the question.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the gentleman answer the question that I really rose to ask?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the gentleman know that the Cincinnati Car Co., builders of street cars, located in my home city, received orders this week for 126 steel cars from the Chicago elevated railroad companies, completing a contract of $2,000,000?

Mr. WALTERS. Two weeks' work.

Mr. ALLEN. More like a year's work.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know about that particular order. It would be very extraordinary indeed if somebody, somewhere among the 95,000,000 people of the United States, was not doing a little something. If nobody was doing anything, we would be in a bad way, the Lord knows.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FESS. On the matter of wool.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAINEY). The time of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has expired.

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. FESS. I was going to ask whether the gentleman remembers that when the wool was sheared and put on the market it was sold at 10 cents less than it was a year ago; but now, since it is purchased and no longer in the hands of the woolgrower, but in the hands of the importers who control the prices, they can put the prices to suit themselves.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, no; my information came directly from the farmers of the gentleman's district. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FESS. Your information did not come from the farmers of my district, because their wool was sold months ago.

Mr. TAGGART. When is sheepshearing time in the gentleman's country?

Mr. FESS. In the spring. They do not leave the wool on the sheep's backs in this kind of weather—in the summer.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say again to the Democratic side that their prophecy with regard to the reduction in the cost of living, so far as it concerned wool, has not come true any more than it has come true with regard to anything else. It is true that some of the farmers of the country received a little more for their wool this year than they did last year under the threat of Democratic free wool, which sent the price of wool down to the lowest point it had reached since the days of the Wilson bill. Since then a world shortage has raised the price of wool everywhere, but the fact remains that our flockmasters are getting now less by 4 to 6 cents than they would receive under a fair tariff.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Does the gentleman know that the sugar factories in Michigan are able to operate only by paying the farmers who raise the beets 50 cents a ton less than in former years, making a loss of approximately $5 an acre to the farmer?

Mr. MONDELL. That is very true. The few sugar factories which are continuing to run are paying less for beets than they did under a Republican tariff, and they will pay still less when the Underwood bill is in full force and effect relative to sugar. Up to this time the refiners may be able to pocket all the difference between the foreign price and what was formerly the domestic price. If that continues the Government will lose $50,000,000 per annum in revenue, and no man, woman, or child under the flag who consumes sugar will receive any benefit. In the meantime our domestic sugar business will have become a memory.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. TAGGART rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman advocate taxing the tables of the whole American people in order to promote the beet-sugar industry?

Mr. MONDELL. I believe that the sugar industry in the United States should be protected and promoted, and I do not believe that in the run of the years the American people will pay any more for their sugar made in America than they will be compelled to pay for it under free trade, made under other flags. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GOOD. Will the Speaker kindly notify me when I have consumed five minutes of my time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has [illegible].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the gentleman from Wyoming should make a complaint because $75,000,000 of gold has gone abroad in the last two months. He certainly did not read the statement of the Treasurer of the United States as published in the Washington Post a few days ago, or he would have made no complaint on that account. I have the statement here and desire to read a part of it:

Treasury Department officials show only a passing interest in the phenomenal exportations of gold which are taking place through New York. Since January 1 the amount of gold exported has been about $70,000,000. The gold reserve supply at the New York Subtreasury was practically exhausted and over $40,000,000 worth of gold bars and coin was sent to New York last week from other subtreasuries.

"What difference does it make if Europe draws on us for $100,000,000 of gold or $200,000,000 worth?" questioned John Burke, Treasurer of the United States, yesterday, when asked about the movement toward Europe.

"The United States has plenty of gold," he explained. "We are not like countries which have only a limited amount."

Here is a statement that has gone broadcast throughout the world that our supply of gold is unlimited, and that it makes no difference how many hundreds of millions of dollars of gold goes abroad. I take it that that statement of the Treasurer of the United States will be received with considerable interest and will be questioned by the financiers of this country at least.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to the provision that we are considering. When the provision was up on yesterday in regard to increasing the number of officials in the Department of the Treasury I made an observation that in addition to the increase that was asked in the Treasury Department of 206 persons there was $1,500,000 for the collection of the income tax in addition, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] made the statement that that was for the field force alone. Of course he was mistaken about that. If he had consulted the Book of Estimates for this year, on page 128, he would have found that under the head of "Bureau force" there were seven heads of departments in Washington that were provided for, and 132 men that were provided for, at a total cost of $234,360 out of the $1,500,000.

Not all of this is field force, by any means. Two hundred and thirty-four thousand dollars of this is to be expended in the city of Washington for the employment of men here, in addition to the regular employment that was referred to on yesterday. The whole difficulty with this provision, Mr. Speaker, lies in the fact that this is political graft. If you had left the law as it ought to have remained, that collectors and deputy collectors of internal revenue, or assistant collectors, and collectors of the income tax should have been appointed as a result of civil-service examination, I would say that the motion of the gentleman from Alabama ought to be agreed to. I am not sure but that it ought to be agreed to anyway, but I think it is a disgrace that this House should write a joker into the tariff bill and then come in and ask for $1,500,000 to employ men to go throughout the various congressional districts working politics at the expense to the Government of $1,500,000. These persons are not employed as a result of civil-service examination; they are employed because of their political usefulness in the various districts throughout the country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GOOD. I yield myself two minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The employees who had charge of the corporation tax were all appointed regardless of the civil-service examination, were they not?

Mr. GOOD. I think not; there was no provision of that kind written into the law, and if they were appointed in that way, it seems to me, it was a violation of law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The persons employed in the collection of the income tax took their places and are appointed in the same way. All the corporation-tax men were appointed in that way without any protest from that side of the House.

Mr. GOOD. We have already provided under collection of internal revenue for 1,407 persons, and by this provision we are asked to provide for 678 additional persons.

Another difficulty is this: The law provides that in cases where we make a lump-sum appropriation the person who administers the law shall divide that sum over the period for which the appropriation is made, so that there may be no deficiency. The gentleman from New York, I take it, if he will look over the estimates, will find that the persons having charge of the collection of the income tax have outlined a scheme which will comprise a certain force, and to employ that force it will take $1,500,000. He will, no doubt, argue for leaving out the $500,000 until after election, and then bring in a deficency. If he does that, he says to the collector and to the persons who have the disbursement of this fund in charge: "You violate the statutes of the United States; go ahead and make your organization for the collection of this tax on an expenditure of $1,500,000, notwithstanding Congress has only allowed you $1,000,000, and we will bring in the other $500,000 as a deficiency."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman permit me to say this: I do not know what Congress is going to allow. Whatever it does allow, so far as I am concerned, unless the House outvotes me, I would not give an additional dollar to carry on the service during the fiscal year. I have never taken the position that the gentleman says I propose to take.

Mr. GOOD. What will the gentleman say if a deficiency of $500,000 is asked for after $1,000,000 has been appropriated—that he will oppose granting additional appropriations?

Mr. FITZGERALD. What I have said when other deficiencies were asked for. I have been against them and the gentleman has helped to grant the deficiencies.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I consumed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOUSTON). The gentleman has used 27 minutes and has 13 minutes remaining.

Mr. GOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the other day the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], in replying to some of the remarks that I made, took occasion to say:

The commodities of the mill and the farm and of the factory are commanding the very best prices possible. Wheat, corn, beef, and pork are high.

The Democratic Party and politicians are singing a new song. Heretofore they have been preaching about low prices. They made the campaign on the theory that they were going to reduce the cost of living. Now comes my distinguished friend from Indiana and tells us that farm products are higher than ever before, and so are the products of the mill. If farm prices are higher, what did you take the tariff off for; why do you take the revenue away from the Government if prices are continually growing higher?

I am afraid that my distinguished friend from Indiana makes a mistake about prices in his own portion of the country, as he did about Terre Haute, when he put in a clipping showing how prosperous they were there. The other day the gentleman put a clipping in the RECORD from the Indianapolis Star showing the great prosperity in Indianapolis.

I would like to read a little communication I received from that city. I used to live in Indiana myself, and I still have some friends in Indianapolis. This letter came to me unsolicited; and I hope my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], who told us of the great prosperity they were enjoying in that city, will listen to this. This letter is addressed to me, and is as follows:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., June 18, 1914.

Hon. W. E. HUMPHREY,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: The inclosed clippings from the Indianapolis Star, a straight-out "Bull Moose" paper, speak for themselves.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the clippings referred to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I will continue with the letter, and insert the clippings at the end of my remarks. The letter goes on to state:

I may add that every business man and manufacturer in this city tells me that business is worse than it has ever been, with the possible exception of the year following the Wilson tariff of 1893. A majority of our factories are either shut down or running two to four days a week. Our largest iron merchant told me last month that their business was less than one-half of what it was a year ago. He is a Democrat, and says he thought free trade a good thing, but is convinced that it is only "a theory and a thing to talk about." He says he thought when the duty was taken off of Swedish iron he could buy it cheaper; but he says that the iron mills in Sweden at once advanced their price equal to the tariff reduction, and that the iron has not been reduced to him one cent; but we lose the revenue. I know of five factories in this State that have been in operation for over 30 years and employ from 300 to 1,200 men ordinarily that are absolutely closed down because of the tariff law and dull business.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Name them.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I will pause here long enough to reply to the remark of the gentleman from New York that I name these mills. I stood upon the floor of this House and named 123 steel mills in this country where furnaces were closed, and I challenged gentlemen on that side to dispute the correctness of that statement. They have had over four months in which to do it, and not one of them has dared stand on that side of the House and dispute the statement that I made. They can turn to the RECORD now and see the location of those mills and the number of men out of employment, and whenever they do I will furnish them another list of those that are closed now.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. I think when the gentleman submitted that list to the House he included the steel plant at Pueblo, Colo., did he not?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not know, but if I did it was closed at that time.

Mr. KEATING. It was not closed at that time, and it is not closed now; and if the remainder of the gentleman's statement is as correct as that portion of it, it is not worth the paper it was written on. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I would have answered the gentleman at the time, but I was not in the House, and when I returned to the House the situation was such that I could not get the floor. This is the first time I have had an opportunity to state to the House and the country that that portion of the gentleman's remarks is not well founded. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman is not going to leave the floor. I challenge the gentleman now to go back and look at the RECORD and see the mills I named in his State that were closed, and then come on the floor of this House after he has looked it up and make the statement as to whether or not what I said was true at that time. Is the gentleman bluffing or not? If not, do that. I challenge the gentleman to look it up. If the gentleman from Colorado thinks he can come in on the floor of this House and work a bluff of that kind and not be called, he is mistaken.

Mr. KEATING. I am not bluffing. I will get your speech.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That may work in Colorado, but not here.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to finish the reading of this letter about the wonderful prosperity in the city of Indianapolis. The letter continues as follows:

There are 15,000 idle men in this city to-day, whereas one year ago last October there was not an iron foundry or a manufacturing company in town that was not from two to six months behind in their orders and 20 per cent short of labor. I was told this yesterday by one of our largest foundrymen, who added that they were then paying $1.75 to $2 for common labor. He also says he will not vote the Democratic ticket again. I am of the opinion we will elect a Republican Senator and a majority of Congressmen this fall. The people generally and the manufacturers and farmers particularly are in open revolt and feel outraged at this puerile Bryan-Wilson administration.

With best regards, I am,

Respectfully,

A. W. HATCH.

And I call the attention of the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] to the fact that I do not quote anonymous stuff on the floor of this House. He stated that somebody had told him about the great prosperity, but he did not dare give the names. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The newspaper clipping is as follows:

[From the Indianapolis Star, Wednesday, June 17, 1914.]

GETTING FROM UNDER.

Although President Wilson is very desirous that the country at large should remain optimistic as to the business outlook and talks, schoolmasterlike, about "psychological depression," he can not have failed to take note of some very material depression that is strikingly evident. He might have noticed, for instance, that a large manufacturing concern, the Otto Gas Engine Co., of Philadelphia, having reduced the number of its employees by 50 per cent, publicly attributed this reduction to the Democratic tariff tinkering.

But it went further than this. Finding that under the new "psychological" conditions competition with the foreign market was no longer profitable it investigated conditions abroad, with the result that it has found that it can manufacture its particular product abroad much cheaper than it can in America. By establishing a manufacturing plant in Germany this industry will secure all the employees it wants at a tithe of the wages necessary to pay here, and because of a reduction of the duty—amounting in this case to 25 per cent—it can ship its finished product over here and make a good profit.

This is one way of getting from under President Wilson's "psychological depression"; the German workmen will get the wages and so many more Americans will be thrown out of employment. No wonder, is it, that our export trade is decreasing and that more and more we are importing manufactured articles from abroad.

Nor is this particular case an isolated one. The Philadelphia concern is only following the examples of others who, facing apparently insolvable labor troubles, onerous conditions, and, on top of it all, the keen competition that has come from the reduction in the tariff, have established branch manufactories in England, France, and Germany. If this sort of manufacturing policy is to continue the outlook for permanent prosperity in many of our great industries is gloomy indeed. The bounteous harvest which this rich country is yielding this year might be expected, under ordinary or normal conditions, to bring us a world of prosperity, but if most of this money is to go abroad into the hands of foreign manufacturers or to pay the wages of foreign workmen, the measure of relief it brings will be rather slight.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not pretend to be a wool expert, but there is one quandary in my mind which I hope some of our Democratic friends will take the time some day to answer. If taking the tariff off wool and losing the revenues of the Government on the importations increases the price which we pay for the foreign wool, what was the object in taking the tariff off? Gentlemen say that we are now paying more for foreign wool than we were before the tariff was taken off. We know that we have lost——

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly not. The gentleman could not answer the question if he had a week to do it in.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, it strikes me that a child can answer that question.

Mr. MANN. Probably the gentleman from Mississippi could do it if a child could do it.

Mr. COLLIER. If the gentleman will give me time, I will take great pleasure in answering the question.

Mr. MANN. Is this coming out of my time, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. COLLIER. Is the gentleman referring to me?

Mr. MANN. No. The gentleman from his seat made some remark about a child. I think it is very applicable to the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, we know that we have taken the tariff off wool, and we know that there was paid into the Treasury $15,000,000 or thereabouts on the importations of wool; and if taking the tariff off has resulted in increasing the price of the foreign wool, the price that we pay to the foreign seller, I wish the gentlemen on the other side would take time some day to explain why it was taken off.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] states that our customs receipts are more than he anticipated. When the tariff bill was under consideration before the House I stated that, in my judgment, the estimates of the revenue under the proposed tariff bill was too low; that they would be more than the gentleman from Alabama estimated. Why? Because the reduction would increase the importations. What has been the result? We are largely increasing our importations of goods made by foreign laborers, and have largely decreased our exportations of goods made by American laborers. Every dollar's worth of the increase of the importations from abroad have been at the expense of some American laborers who are now out of work [applause on the Republican side], and we have sent abroad in the last 60 days more than a million dollars of gold per day to pay for these increased importations of goods made by foreign laborers which ought to have been made by American laborers, and if the gentleman gets any satisfaction out of that, let him take the satisfaction between now and election day in November, because after that day has passed he will get no satisfaction. [Applause on the Republican side.]

What is the proposition pending before the House? To increase the appropriation for the collection of the income tax from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000. I have no doubt that the gentleman from Alabama in the end, if not just now, will have his way and that the increase will be made—and why?

Well, some time ago in one of the bills we removed deputy collectors of internal revenue from the classified service and made them political appointees, and the men who will be employed under this appropriation come within that class. We have a campaign coming on; we have an election soon. The necessities of the case are great. They need on the other side of the House a half a million dollars more to employ political favorites to help conduct a political campaign, and under the guise and excuse of collecting the income tax they propose to appropriate that $500,000 to employ 500 more political appointees to do political work in a political campaign. Gentlemen on that side of the House have not had as many jobs given to them as they had hoped. No man in the White House can withstand entirely the pressure of the people in behalf of civil-service reform. A great many of the places which our friends on the other side expected to get for political favorites are still held in the classified service. Even the order in reference to fourth-class postmasters has not entirely satisfied our Democratic friends, because the Postmaster General, in my opinion, is endeavoring, and to some extent and to a great extent, to act fairly in enforcing the law. Gentlemen have not been able to get all the fourth-class postmasters named they wished as political appointees. The necessities are great. They must have the jobs; they need the places; every one of them a candidate for reelection in some way, they need somebody to help conduct the campaign while we are kept in Washington this summer by the order of the President, and they need these men. They do not wish to pay them out of their pockets—in fact, under the publicity law, perhaps, they could not do that and come within the limitation of the law—but they can appropriate a half a million dollars, and that will give each one of them practically two appointees to do political work in their personal interest at the expense of the Treasury of the people of the United States. Of course they will get it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, how much time has the other side consumed?

The SPEAKER. They have consumed all their time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remaining 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, it has remained for a negro to set a much higher standard for fairness and propriety and decency than gentlemen on the other side have set with respect to the administration of our present Federal affairs. [Applause on the Democratic side.] A few days ago the colored recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia was asked for his resignation. His reply was: "Certainly; I am ready to resign. This place belongs to the Democratic Party, and I am ready to turn it over to them." Notwithstanding the fact that for 15 years there has been an unfair administration of the civil-service law, under which our friends upon the other side were enabled to get into the service 85 per cent of our 400,000 employees, they now affect great indignation if in a few isolated instances, where close confidential relations are involved and personal responsibility will be due to a superior, some discrimination might be made with respect to the selection of certain officials. The position of our friends upon that question in dealing with the people is very much like their position upon the question of taxation. From hearing the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and two or three gentlemen from other States, one is reminded of the old-time stand-pat remarks that used to be made with so much more frequency than now. It is and has long been evident that with respect both to the civil service and taxation the gentlemen on the other side undertake to deal with the people in a spirit of premeditated hypocrisy and aggravated false pretenses. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We hear the gentleman from New York in a very slurring manner refer to the suggestion that the estimates for the income tax, both corporate and individual, or at least the individual, had been gathered from rumors or statements made upon our lecture bureau circuits. My information is that the same gentlemen who prepared the estimates for the income tax prepared the estimates of the Payne-Aldrich bill in 1909. Those estimates were prepared by officials of the Treasury Department who have been recognized as experts in those lines and who have been preparing estimates for the Treasury Department for many years.

Now, the gentleman from Alabama has stated very succinctly the reasons why this amendment as proposed should be agreed to by the House. It is only a proposition to appropriate at the rate of 1½ per cent of the amount collected for the expense of collection. This is really lower than the amount expended by the Government in collecting any other tax. Four years ago when the corporation-tax law was enacted the Treasury Department had considerable surplus time among its employees, during certain periods, which could be utilized in looking after the collection of the corporation tax. That surplus force, however, has been chiefly expended already, so that it now becomes necessary largely to create additional employees and the services of an additional force in order to handle this entire tax. I suppose the most extreme gentleman upon the other side will agree that this law will bring at least $100,000,000 of revenue to the Treasury for the year 1914. That being true, a million and a half dollars would be entirely reasonable.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. I am in favor of an income tax and I want to see it collected, but I do not know just how I am going to vote on this. I have been listening to this argument, politically and otherwise. If we do not appropriate the additional $500,000 will the income tax be collected?

Mr. HULL. I will say this to the gentleman: The law went into effect in October. The Treasury was unable to get the regulations out until several weeks later. The number of assessments that are now in the Treasury Department are assessments that just floated into their possession, the result of the voluntary action of those people who had a chance to secure a copy of the law, even though they did not secure a copy of the regulations in many instances. No extended efforts were made to accelerate the administration of the tax in the way of distributing well and thoroughly over this country, much less to nonresident Americans in other countries, copies of the law or regulations or to assist the taxpayers and Federal officials in making correct and accurate returns. This was due to lack of time. The taxpayer had little time to understand the law and still less time to see and study the regulations of the Treasury Department. But few income-tax officials were appointed until all tax returns were due. The necessary Treasury force must first be appointed and thoroughly familiarize itself with the law. It must then lend aid to the taxpayer in many important respects. Much data in all lines of business must be gathered, compiled, indexed, and so forth. The most convenient system of checks must be devised and applied.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the gentleman believe we will get a proportionally greater amount of income tax if we appropriate this $500,000?

Mr. HULL. I am sure it will aid very greatly toward placing it upon the best possible administrative basis in the way of adjusting it to the business conditions of the country and enabling the taxpayers to become familiar with it, and this would increase the tax receipts very materially.

Mr. MURDOCK. I think the gentleman, as well as myself, would like to see the present force collect this tax if it can?

Mr. HULL. Unquestionably.

Mr. MURDOCK. I believe they can do it, from what the gentleman says. It may be a little slower, but I believe they can do it.

Mr. HULL. The very fact I have stated, I think, Mr. Speaker, is evidence to the contrary, that the present force, engrossed as it is in the collection of $300,000,000 of internal revenue proper and $43,000,000 of corporation income tax, have no time to give to the other branch and other phases of this tax.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, Commissioner Cabell, in testifying before the committee with respect to the collection of the corporation tax, said that within certain limitations for every dollar that we gave the Bureau of Internal Revenue, his bureau, to make investigations he could bring into the Treasury $25 that the Treasury would not otherwise get.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. For a question.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why did not the committee recommend the $1,500,000 appropriation?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Because the Secretary of the Treasury at the time we made up the bill was not able to state definitely that he would need that sum.

Mr. GLASS. And I may add, if you please, that the Secretary of the Treasury has said to me within the last 12 hours that he is confident $20 will be collected for every $1 expended under this increased appropriation.

Mr. HULL. I have no doubt of the accuracy of those statements, Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen may underestimate the amount of work necessary to launch a new, comprehensive tax law. And as to the revenue, evidently the amount of revenue yield for the first year, when left entirely to the voluntary action of the taxpayer, will be much smaller than the accurate amount should be. This must be investigated and attended to with respect to the 10 months of the year 1913. In addition to that, the proper administration of the law for 1914 must be given attention at the same time. I am quite sure, Mr. Speaker, that with this additional force performing their legitimate functions, as I have already described, this law will be placed upon an administrative basis reasonably satisfactory to every person in this country, and the yield of revenue will be entirely up to the expectations of those who have made estimates.

Now, I do not think it comes in good taste for gentlemen upon the other side to undertake to offer criticisms at this stage. Most Republicans have heretofore reluctantly approved its principle. Gentlemen well know that the method of retaining the tax at the source of the income and turning it over to the Government, under which England doubled her revenues the first year, was not in operation last year. Furthermore, the Treasury Department had not had the opportunity to perfect its rulings with respect to important phases of the assessment. Many thousands here and abroad who were subject to the tax had no chance to see and understand the law and regulations, and so either made grossly inaccurate returns or no returns at all. The law thus far has only operated over fractional portions of the year 1913. Of course, standpat Republicans oppose this law, as they oppose any honest system of taxation. The income tax is universally conceded to be the fairest of all taxes. More than 50 similar laws are in successful operation throughout the world. Those standpat Republicans will soon learn that the American people will not tolerate the substitution of an immoral, dishonest tax, such as the high protective-tariff tax, for the present income tax. The latter, here as elsewhere, has come to stay. Wealth shall henceforth bear its fair share of the tax burdens. It can no longer shun and shirk and evade, as it heretofore has done. In view of the justness of this tax, it is monstrous for our standpat Republican friends, who now seem unable to learn anything or to forget anything, to ever again indulge the hope that they may at any future time be able to displace it with that abominable iniquity, that ghastly abortion—the Payne-Aldrich law.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendments No. 110 to No. 124, inclusive, as follows:

"Mint at Carson, Nev.: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $2,000; assistant assayer, $1,500; chief clerk, $1,200; in all, $4,700.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $2,500.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, $2,000.

"Assay office at Boise, Idaho: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $2,000; assistant assayer, $1,500; chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $1,200; in all, $4,700.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $3,000.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, $2,000.

"Assay office at Deadwood, S. Dak.: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $2,000; assistant assayer, $1,500; clerk, $1,200; in all, $4,700.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $3,000.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, new machinery, etc., $1,500.

"Assay office at Helena, Mont.: Assayer in charge, $2,000; chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $1,400; assistant assayer, $1,500; in all, $4,900.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $3,000.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, $2,000.

"Assay office at Salt Lake City, Utah: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $2,000; chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $1,600; in all, $3,600.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $2,500.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, $2,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate 110 to 124, inclusive.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman make his request that they may be considered together? The gentleman made a request for unanimous consent that the House disagree. Will not the gentleman make his request that they be considered together?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will put the request that way, Mr. Speaker—that all the amendments beginning with 110 and ending with 124, inclusive, be considered together.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that the amendments 110 to 124, both inclusive, be considered together. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 110 to 124, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendments 110 to 124, inclusive.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 168: Page 104, line 91, strike out the word "assistant" and insert: "Three members of a board of appeals, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at $4,500 each; assistant——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 168.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 168.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion.

Mr. MANN. Before the motion is made——

Mr. RAKER. I offer the preferential motion that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that he ask unanimous consent to consider amendments No. 168 and No. 169 together.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, No. 169 is simply the total at the end of the paragraph, and would depend upon the action taken on the one now under consideration. I make the request that the two be considered together.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to consider amendments No. 168 and No. 169 together. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] makes a preferential motion that the House recede from its disagreement to these two amendments and concur in the same.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like five minutes of time.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] rise?

Mr. MONDELL. I rose for the purpose of making a preferential motion, but it has been made by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How much time does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] want?

Mr. MANN. About 15 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Is that all the time you want on that side?

Mr. MANN. Twenty minutes, say.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. MANN. Settle the time first.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think we will use nearly an hour. There are a number of gentlemen who are interested. But I did not want the hour to run out. I do not want any time lost on this. I am willing to yield——

Mr. GOOD. Agree on 40 minutes, then.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I am willing to agree that this amendment shall be debated for 40 minutes, and I suppose that practically all the time will be taken by the gentlemen who are in favor of the motion.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman want to make an agreement of 20 minutes on a side?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Some of these gentlemen who are asking for time do not want to talk on the Land Office at all. I will ask for 20 minutes on a side.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me a minute?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. That gives the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SELDOMRIDGE] five minutes each?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes. How much time does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desire over there?

Mr. MANN. We want 20 minutes if there is an agreement.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] wants five minutes and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SELDOMRIDGE] five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I have already promised 30 minutes.

Mr. MANN. That is all right. If we can have an agreement, we will take 20 minutes on this side and you can have 30 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the debate be limited to 50 minutes, 20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] and 20 minutes by myself.

Mr. CULLOP. In those 30 minutes has the gentleman from South Carolina reserved some time for me? I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the debate be limited to 50 minutes—20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa and 30 by myself—and that at the end of that time the previous question shall be ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that the debate be limited to 50 minutes—20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa and 30 minutes by himself—and that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the gentleman from South Carolina, if it is not interfering with his arrangement, tell us just what this is?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, all the information I have is—and I am using the information that came to me from the Secretary of the Interior—that they have about 2,300 land cases on appeal in the Land Office. They are in arrears anywhere from 6 to 18 months or 2 years in the final determination of land patents, and the contention is that this long delay amounts to a denial of justice, and they are asking that this board of appeals be constituted to enable them to make the work current.

Mr. FOSTER. This creates an additional board of appeals in the Interior Department to settle these land disputes?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; and these gentlemen from the land States can explain that far better than I can, because I come from a State, one of the original thirteen, in which there never was an acre of public land. We have had no experience in dealing with public lands there, and for that reason I want to yield time to gentlemen who understand and are interested in the question. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina has used 5 minutes of the 30. He has 25 left. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me a moment at the start?

Mr. RAKER. In a moment. The proposition is, Mr. Speaker, to have three members of the board of appeals appointed at the rate of $4,500 a year salary. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas for a question.

Mr. MURDOCK. Are these to take care of appeals from the local land offices to the General Land Office?

Mr. RAKER. They are not.

Mr. BURNETT. Is it a Senate amendment or House amendment?

Mr. RAKER. This is a Senate amendment. This was estimated for by the department when they sent up their estimates for consideration. This is to appoint three competent lawyers who are able to handle appeal cases, the same as three lawyers appointed on the bench as judges. There are something over 2,300 cases now on appeal from the General Land Office to the Department of the Interior. These cases are handled by the First Assistant Secretary of the Interior, whose work to-day is more than he can legitimately do without even looking at some of these cases, and much delay is occasioned. It means that the people who have appealed—private individuals many of them; probably 90 per cent of them—at present have their cases held up and do not know whether their rights are granted or not. The cases are appealed, after they have been decided in the General Land Office, to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MURDOCK. Would this be a final court, or would there be an appeal from its decisions?

Mr. RAKER. It would be in the same position as the decision of the Secretary of the Interior himself.

Mr. MURDOCK. And there would be no appeal from this board to the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. RAKER. Surely there would be, just as there is now; not to the Secretary of the Interior individually, but this would be the decision of the Secretary of the Interior. I want to make this plain. If the Secretary of the Interior approves these decisions of the board of appeals, there would be no appeal from the board of appeals to the Secretary; but after each instance the party has the right to a review, and he can petition the Secretary of the Interior to grant him a review of his case. Many cases have been reviewed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Would not that review be made by the Secretary of the Interior rather than by this board of appeals?

Mr. RAKER. No. In the first instance, the man must have his case decided by the highest tribunal; and in land matters that highest tribunal is the Secretary of the Interior. These cases are reviewed by the department; and the Secretary of the Interior, and in many cases the First Assistant Secretary, acts as a judge of appeals.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This action of the board of appeals would not be final? The Secretary of the Interior would have the final say as to what would be done?

Mr. RAKER. It would be just the same as any other case that is now handled by the department. The decision of the board would be final when approved by the Secretary of the Interior, as the Secretary of the Interior's decision would be final unless some one asked for a review. It relieves the work. It puts three competent men in the office of the Secretary of the Interior to act as judges of appeals.

Now, every Member of the House can realize that with over 2,300 cases these men believe they have a right in their homesteads which are involved, their desert-land entries which are involved, their right to be heard on an application for a reservoir site that is involved; and they have to wait from one year to three years to get a determination as to whether they can go ahead or must stop. It is not fair. You give them the right of appeal. You now provide for one officer. Why not make your machinery sufficiently ample and expeditious so that the men, when their cases are appealed to the Secretary of the Interior, may have those appeals passed upon by three competent men whose business it is to do that and nothing else; to decide and make determination in these cases instead of having the Assistant Secretary pass upon those cases when all of his time is required for other work?

Every bill that is reported from the Committee on the Public Lands and from the Committee on Irrigation and other committees first goes to the Secretary of the Interior, and the First Assistant passes upon it. Look at the bills and look at the reports—hundreds of them are on file in the Committee on the Public Lands—and you will see the enormous amount of work that that official has to do, assisting in proper legislation. It is only an act of justice to the men whose homes are involved, whose all is involved, that they may have additional judges to dispose of their cases and that decision be had at the earliest date possible.

These amounts were estimated for, but the item was not included in the bill as it came from the House committee. The Senate placed it on the bill. It should remain. It is necessary. This was fully shown by the statement of the First Assistant Secretary of the Interior when he appeared before the House Committee on Appropriations (hearings, pp. 390–394). The reasons there given for this item are unanswerable. The Members of the House have read it. I am satisfied that the committee will finally agree to this amendment. It is economy in the final analysis; the reasons for it are good.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman from South Carolina give me one minute more?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I can not do it. I have given out all my time.

Mr. RAKER. Then, Mr. Speaker, to present the matter more fully I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I understand how reluctant, and very properly so, the conference committee is to increase the number of officers of the Government, and I know that this side of the House has been criticized and chastised in certain instances for increasing the number of offices. But there are 300 cases a month on appeal on contests, many of which are brought about by the Interior Department itself in trying to see to it that valuable water sites and power sites and valuable mineral land and timber land and oil land does not slip away from us through the regular homesteading process.

In former times it was the practice for a man in the West to go out and apply to the local land office and file on a piece of Government land. There was a law which permitted him to get the land, without rhyme, reason, or question. In other words, if the land had on it a tract of timber worth $10 000, mineral, oil, gas, coal, and power sites, the man who filed on it was allowed to get title to the land. This was all wrong then. It is all wrong now. It needed changing then. It needs changing now. Here is an opportunity to help out down there, and it is up to us to do it. Nobody investigated it; nobody knew what was there. If it had coal, oil, gas, or other mineral, or water power, he got that.

Now, the time has come when the public sense of justice believes that actual farming land on the public domain should go to homesteaders, but that land with valuable deposits of mineral, oil, or coal ought not to go to the homesteaders. Now what happens? The Interior Department and the Appropriations Committee have provided for inspectors to go out and see what the land is before it passes to the homesteader. What happens when the applicant gets a filing on a piece of land, and the inspector reports to the Interior Department that he should not have title to it, for the reason it is not chiefly valuable for agriculture. Three hundred of those cases, on appeal, come to the Interior Department to be decided every month. No living human being can intelligently pass on all those cases. Immediately the business is not kept current trouble and delays ensue. Some clerk makes them and briefs them up and brings them in to the Secretary, and the Secretary has to put his O. K. on them. What the Secretary asks for is a board of three good lawyers to pass on these cases, so that when they bring their report to him there will be little left to do but to put his signature on it. Here are two or three pages in the hearings, where Assistant Secretary Jones pleads with the committee, urges the committee, begs of the committee, to give them this board, so they can do the work properly. It ought to have been done. There is no economy in halfway doing the things that must be done. It breeds dissatisfaction and stagnation in the development of the West. It breeds confusion and dismay for the homesteader. It is bad administration for the department, and it ought to be remedied. I appeared before the conference committee on this item. I think the conferees themselves agree some relief is needed.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman state for information how large a clerical force they have now in the Interior Department to pass upon these matters?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not know exactly. They have an Assistant Attorney General and several law clerks, but not enough to do the work.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. That is a matter that ought to be stated.

Mr. FERRIS. As above said, they have attorneys or law clerks there now, but not enough to keep the great volume of business current. It needs to be current.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I thought perhaps the gentleman might know.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not know offhand the exact number. They have an Assistant Attorney General and four or five lawyers under him. Of course, the Interior Department handles multitudes of matters—Indians, irrigation, public lands, pensions, patents, and so forth.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. They ought to have more than that.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes, indeed, they ought; and the Assistant Secretary says 300 cases on appeal come to him every month; that the office is now approximately 2,300 cases behind; that the homesteader whose case is contested by one of these special agents has his patent held up by 12 or 15 months.

I do not want to antagonize the Committee on Appropriations. I felt so keenly about it that I went before the conference committee and said about this same thing to them. I do not want to antagonize the committee on this or any other matter. I think the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] have had it so forcibly called to their attention that I believe they are very much impressed with it. I do not want to take the words out of their own mouths, or try to quote them, but I think they full well realize the almost burning necessity of keeping this work current. We all want economy, but it is no economy to let things go to waste for want of a small appropriation to conserve it.

Mr. MURDOCK. In the Interior Department all appeals finally reach an Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; they finally reach the Secretary of the Interior. I assume that is what you mean.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is true of pensions.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; that is true of a lot of bureaus; but of course, if the gentleman will pardon me, they have a lot of law clerks and men to pass on these cases. One of the main things in addition to keeping the work current is to have some uniformity about their decisions.

Mr. MURDOCK. As a matter of fact you are establishing a court, are you not?

Mr. FERRIS. It is a board of review to act in conjunction with the Interior Department.

Mr. MURDOCK. It is a court.

Mr. FERRIS. It is a board to pass upon what the people are actually entitled to under the law, so that these three men, when they bring in a report to the Secretary, can say, "This is the last word on the subject."

Mr. MURDOCK. I hope the gentleman is aiding the homeseeker, but I doubt it.

Mr. FERRIS. I think I am. I think the gentleman will conclude that I am if he will read the hearings. I will present the words of Assistant Secretary Jones before the committee. The Interior Department to-day is perhaps better equipped with information about the West than any Interior Department within the last generation. Secretary Lane is a western man, who knows what to do and how to do and when to do what is needed in the West. The Assistant Secretary is able, is conscientious, and would not ask this if it was not needed.

Mr. JOHNSON. You are asking for an increase of $35,000 in that one item; will you state the reason why?

Mr. JONES. In the Assistant Attorney General's office there has been really no increase in the force since 1891. There was a change a few years ago in regard to some of the work in connection with the Pension Office, and instead of appropriating for that special work in the pension appropriation, the work was transferred to the office of the Assistant Attorney General. That made an apparent increase in the force of the Assistant Attorney General, but it was not one in reality, except through that means of taking on additional work in his office. The work of that office has increased many fold since 1891. The office of the Assistant Attorney General prepared a statement which I presented to the committee during the summer when we were asking for an emergency appropriation. That statement shows the increase of work in that office during the last five years, and a summary of it appears in this estimate which I have before me, on page 225. That statement shows you how the volume of the work of that office has increased. The paper which I presented last summer shows the nature of the work which has so increased. I do not know whether the committee would like to be supplied with another copy of that paper now or not. The committee has it in its files of last summer.

Mr. JOHNSON. It will not be necessary to encumber this record with that.

Mr. JONES. The summary appears on page 225 of this bill.

Mr. BYRNS. As I understand your note, the three members of the board of appeals, if created, would be charged with the duty of considering appeals in all matters brought to the Secretary, with the exception of pension cases?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. BYRNS. And up to this time those matters have been considered in the office of the Assistant Secretary, and are being considered there now?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. BYRNS. Which, as the note states, necessarily takes his time and attention from other matters. I was wondering if it be a fact that the office of the Assistant Secretary has been looking after these matters heretofore and is now considering these appeals, whether, if that board of appeals, consisting of three members at salaries of $5,000 each, should be created, that would not be quite an item of expense to be incurred in considering something that the First Assistant Secretary has been heretofore considering in connection with the other duties of his office.

Mr. JONES. I would like to make that plain. At the present time the office of the Secretary of the Interior, so far as money values are concerned, seems to me to be the greatest judicial tribunal in the world, or the greatest of any tribunals of which I have any knowledge. There are about 300 appeals from the General Land Office per month passing over the desk of the First Assistant Secretary. These cases, or a majority of them, involve only homestead entries varying in value from a few hundred dollars to a few thousand dollars, but there are many cases involving much greater values, running up into the millions of dollars. I have heard argument in a case that was under consideration and investigation where the parties all agreed that the property involved was worth anywhere from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000. Another case was considered in which the property involved was worth not less than $5,000,000, and there are many cases involving large amounts of property in which it is not necessary to consider any element of value, but they involve questions of law which are very complicated. The legislation of Congress in regard to the western lands has been built up from time to time. The different statutes are many, and one must really devote a great deal of time to them to be able to feel certain that he has become acquainted with all the statute law on the subject, and the varying decisions are even more uncertain.

Those 300 cases per month have been going over my desk, but, as I said a moment ago, the grist comes to the mill and we must pass it through. The most that I have been able to do has been to read the statements of fact in the decisions prepared for my signature, and then see what conclusions have been reached. I have had no opportunity to study the language of the decisions, but simply the statements of fact, and then decide as to the conclusions. Now, with 300 of these cases per month, you can understand the amount of deliberation with which the First Assistant Secretary can render his decisions. My office also has supervision of the Indian Bureau and the Reclamation Service, and there are many matters—and important matters—passing through my office from those bureaus every day. I must depend in a very large measure, of course, upon those who present these matters to me for their accuracy and correctness; but no one would feel like signing his name to a paper unless he could feel that he was reasonably safe in doing so.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not, of course, underestimate the immense amount of property and money involved in these cases, nor the importance of the work that must be done in passing on these appeals, but it occurred to me that if we should create this board, whose sole duty would be the taking care of this immense volume of work which heretofore has been done by you and which now devolves upon you, it would be a rather expensive departure. Now, I want to ask this question: Of course, I realize the value of having three persons to pass upon these matters, as is the case with our appellate courts, but why could not one individual, at a salary of $5,000, whose sole duty it would be to investigate and pass upon these appealed cases, look into and pass upon them just as effectually and just as properly as a board?

Mr. JONES. It will take more than one man to do the work. For instance, last summer I spent seven nights at my office hearing one case. Of course it was an important case or I would not have done it, but it involved a mass of testimony and records. In a case of that kind there is no one man who would feel that he ought to assume the absolute responsibility for passing upon the questions involved. It is just the same way with the Supreme Court of the United States now. The nine judges sit and hear arguments, but the case is assigned to one man ultimately to write the decision. So I take it that we would have this board operated in that way. The work should be done in that way. With the large number of cases that come there, it would be absolutely impossible for any one man to do all of that work. At the present time these cases are considered by an examiner, who makes up a statement of the facts. There are a good many contested cases, and we do not like to leave it absolutely to one examiner to make up that statement of the facts. Then it would surprise you to know the number of legal questions that arise in regard to statutes which ordinarily you would believe had been settled years ago. Those questions are still coming up, and it is surprising how many questions do arise.

Mr. BYRNS. If such a board were created, of course that would take an immense amount of work from those upon whom you are depending now to investigate these records and report to you for your final or ultimate decision.

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. BYRNS. Would it be possible to reduce your items here in any way in the event this board should be created? It occurs to me that might be done, because you would be taking away from those examiners this great amount of work.

Mr. JONES. On the other hand, we are asking for five more assistant attorneys.

Mr. BYRNS. I noticed that, and that is one reason for my question. Would it be necessary to have five additional attorneys if you are going to take away from these assistant attorneys this immense volume of work and place it upon this board of appeals?

Mr. JONES. We would not take that work away from the other attorneys. On the other hand, the only object in having this additional force there is to be able to catch up with the work. Now there are over 2,000 cases on appeal from the Land Office pending in that department to-day. The office is from 9 to 12 months behind with its work, but we think that with this additional force we might within a reasonable time be able to catch up with the work. As I have said, the work of the office is increasing from year to year. We concluded that with this additional force we would be able to catch up with the pending work and that this force would be large enough to take care of the future work. We are asking for it, not for the purpose of having Congress to arbitrarily make a departure in the conduct of the office, but to provide for men whom we may be able to get for that salary. The salaries paid the attorneys in that office are, in my opinion, far below what they should receive. Considering the amount of work that they do and the grade of the work, the salaries paid are very meager, and we wanted to be able to pay at least $5,000 a year to the three new men We need the men there. We need that dynamic force in that office to take care of that work.

Mr. BORLAND. Is there any provision of law for the creation of this board of appeals?

Mr. JONES. This is the only law on the subject.

Mr. BORLAND. There is no existing provision of law authorizing it?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; there is no such board of appeals now, and the only purpose in putting it in here was to indicate to Congress how we would like to use men of that grade.

Mr. BORLAND. Is this your own idea of having it in the form of a board of appeals?

Mr. JONES. It was our own idea; but I learned last summer, when I appeared before the committee, that Secretary Fisher had also requested the same thing. I did not know that he had done so until after we had concluded that it would be a good thing.

Mr. BORLAND. Is it your idea that they would sit together as a court?

Mr. JONES. In many instances; yes, sir; and they would hear arguments as a court.

Mr. GOOD. Would it not be necessary to change the present law in regard to the duty of the Secretary of the Interior with reference to hearing appeals?

Mr. JONES. I do not think so, because if this board were to be unanimous on these cases, I would feel like signing the decisions without giving them further consideration, but if they should be divided and the question important, of course I would feel called upon to go into it myself.

Mr. GOOD. Of course, litigants always want to carry their contentions to the court of last resort, and if the Secretary of the Interior would have something to do with regard to all of them they would want to take their appeals a little further. It seems to me that without making some further provision with regard to this board it would not be a court of final resort in cases of that character.

Mr. JONES. It was not the idea to relieve the Secretary of the responsibility of signing these decisions, but merely to give that additional aid in the preparation of the decisions and to satisfy the Secretary's office that the decisions had received ample consideration.

Mr. GOOD. Your idea being that this board would simply aid the Secretary and that it would be his decision in all cases?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; that it would still be the decision of the Secretary.

Mr. BYRNS. I notice you are asking for an additional clerk of class 4?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; the clerks in the office now are too few, and with this addition of attorneys we will require additional clerical assistance.

Mr. BYRNS. You are also asking three of class 2.

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. BYRNS. And I suppose the same reason applies?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; the same reason applies.

Mr. PARKER. Before we leave I want to submit this proposition in regard to the Secretary's office: That the appropriations asked for the Secretary's office for all purposes under the legislative and sundry civil bills, including this increase in the Assistant Attorney General's office, show a net decrease over the current appropriations of some $34,000.

Mr. GOOD. Have you detailed any clerks from the office of the Secretary to other bureaus?

Mr. PARKER. Very few from the Secretary's office to other bureaus, but quite a number from the bureaus to the Secretary's office.

Mr. GOOD. Are any clerks detailed from the various bureaus in the Department of the Interior to other departments of the Government?

Mr. PARKER. When that occurs, that becomes a transfer and they go off our rolls.

Mr. GOOD. You do not detail them from one department to another?

Mr. PARKER. No, sir.

Mr. GOOD. I understood you to say there have been a good many details to the Secretary's office?

Mr. PARKER. Fourteen employees are on detail from the bureaus to the Secretary's office.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. TOWNER. There will have to be a decision by the Commissioner of the Land Office before there can be an appeal, will there not?

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, of course; and to the local land office, too.

Mr. TOWNER. Then in what way will this aid the congestion in the Land Department?

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will pardon me, the congestion arises in the Interior Department?

Mr. TOWNER. If the same conditions have to be met as now and the only right that will be given is the additional right of appeal, in what way will that quicken the decision of cases?

Mr. FERRIS. This does not propose to insert any new link at all. It is merely an aid to the decision in the court of last resort, which is the Interior Department. There is no new cog in the wheel. This will not be cumbersome; it will be the greatest sort of aid.

Mr. TOWNER. There must be an appeal from the decision of the commissioner before it can reach this board or court.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; but this is no court.

Mr. TOWNER. Then it really aids the Secretary, but not the department.

Mr. FERRIS. When I refer to the Secretary I mean the Interior Department, of course. Three hundred appeals come to the Secretary every month. He can not pass on them, and neither can any other man. Uniformity, good administration, and good sense demand this.

Mr. TOWNER. Is not the complaint from the commissioner rather than from the Secretary?

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, no; the facts which I am stating are quoted from the statement of Assistant Secretary of the Interior Jones in the hearings and relate to his department. He can read them on page 390 and 391 of the printed hearings on this bill, where he can find a corroboration of exactly what has been said. At the bottom of the page he goes on and says:

We need this board here. We need that dynamic force in the office to take care of that work, nearly 3,000 cases behind. The homesteaders and the miners and the people on the public domain have to wait more than a year to have their cases adjudicated.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a relief to every man who is trying to get a home, that he may have his claim adjudicated early?

Mr. FERRIS. There can be no doubt about that. I think it is in the interest of good administration. These long delays discourage the entry and development of the public lands. This item is estimated for; it is needed. I think the conferees should accept it and help us with this relief.

At the present time, because of the very large amount of business in the way of contests, applications to enter, and appeals before the local land offices, the General Land Office, and the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and particularly at the present time before the Secretary's office, long delays in action upon applications, appeals, and contests can not be avoided. This situation is disadvantageous, first, because it discourages the entry and development of the public lands; second, contest fees and fees and commissions in connection with applications and entries not being payable until they are allowed or acted upon result in delay, and sometimes absolutely prevent the receipt in the Treasury of the moneys which would otherwise be paid in by contestants and applicants; third, delays make it possible for speculators to make entries which they do not intend to reside upon or perfect, but intend to hold for speculation and sale; it also aids in the speculative handling of relinquishments of public lands; fourth, it discourages bona fide applicants from prosecuting applications already pending or instituting new applications to enter or develop public lands. The proposed amendment, which would add three new positions to the force of the Secretary's office charged with action upon appeals in all matters relating to public lands and reclamation, would very materially aid in disposing of the accumulated business now on hand and in keeping new business current, and would, I am sure, increase the revenues from the public lands in excess of the amount of the salaries proposed. [Applause.]

[Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the Interior Department is preeminently a legal department of the Government. To the office of the Secretary of the Interior come the appeals from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the Commissioner of Patents, the Commissioner of Pensions, the Director of the Reclamation Service, and other bureaus of that department. These appeals come by the hundreds and the thousands, and they come in greatly increased number with the growth and development of the country and with the increased complexity of public-land questions.

There is quite a considerable force of excellent attorneys in the Secretary's office who have charge of the consideration of these appeals, but there is not in the Secretary's office any board whose duty it is to examine the final decisions of the attorneys before they reach the Assistant Secretary.

We have an efficient Secretary of the Interior, and the present Assistant Secretary is, in my opinion, one of the very best officials that ever occupied that office. That official, the Assistant Secretary, who in the main passes on legal questions for the Secretary, realizes, as his predecessors have for years, how impossible it is for him to form a correct judgment in these hundreds and thousands of cases without a larger force in his office, and particularly without a board of review. This is called a board of appeals, but it is really a board of review, whose duty it would be to review the cases after they have been gone over by the attorneys and decided by them—to review them before they pass to the Secretary for final examination and decision.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Who writes the opinions of these cases?

Mr. MONDELL. The various attorneys, of whom there are ten or a dozen, write the opinions. It is proposed to have a board of review. They have such a board now in the Land Office, known as the board of law review, to review these decisions before they pass to the Secretary.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. Why not increase the number of attorneys?

Mr. MONDELL. We do; we increase the number of attorneys by three. What will occur under this legislation is that three of the best attorneys in the office will be advanced to form the board. Three other men will then be appointed, and so we will have an increase of three in the office of the Secretary. It is a wise thing to form this board, whose special duty and function shall be to go over the decisions rendered by the individual attorneys in the office.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will that expedite things? How will it relieve congestion?

Mr. MONDELL. It will relieve congestion, because, instead of necessitating all cases remaining on the desk of the Assistant Secretary while he examines them in detail, they will be so examined by this board. As it is the Assistant Secretary, having no such board as this, must of necessity endeavor to not only go over the decisions in detail but, so far as it is possible, go into the testimony. The result is delay, even after cases have passed through the hands of the attorneys, because the Secretary feels that under these circumstances without a body of men removed from the general body of attorneys which is to do the work of review he must give special and particular time and time-consuming attention to all these cases. This is really an increase of the force by three men, and if we did nothing more than that we would do well.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. You appoint three men to do the work that one man is doing.

Mr. MONDELL. We still have the Secretary and Assistant Secretary, but before the decisions reach him they are to be considered by the board of review.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Does the board refer the decisions to the Secretary?

Mr. MONDELL. They will come to him from the board.

Mr. TOWNSEND. There is nothing final in the hearing by the board of review?

Mr. MONDELL. No; it is a board of review and a board of examination before the decision reaches the Secretary.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does not this provide one more step in the proceeding and therefore increase the delay?

Mr. MONDELL. I think not, and I have had considerable experience in that department. I have long believed that a board would expedite the business, and what is more it would give careful consideration to important decisions which I think we ought to have and which it is difficult to have under present conditions. If we only increase the number of attorneys, we shall have helped the situation. The board is also, in my opinion, a good idea.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], this prophet of evil and chairman of the committee on distress [laughter], this self-constituted mouthpiece of calamity howlers and forerunner of business destruction seems to enjoy his obnoxious and disgusting office. [Laughter and applause.]

He scans newspapers day and night to find, if possible, where some human being somewhere has been overtaken by misfortune, and he seems supremely happy when reciting and recounting in this House so-called newspaper evidences of human distress and adversity. The bright, beaming stars in the firmament and the white light of the milky way across the heavens do not attract his attention; they concern him not; but just let him see the temporary soft and shining furrow of a falling star and straightway he throws a fit, and spasms of rejoicing travel up and down his spinal column.

Mr. Speaker, it matters not what character of business a man is engaged in, the capital invested, or the amount of business sought to be done, and the ability of the man in charge of the business to make a success of it; none of these engage the attention of the trouble-hunting gentleman from Washington.

If an incompetent, indolent man fails in business because he did not have the ability, the industry, and enterprise to succeed, the gentleman from Washington attributes his failure to the Democratic administration

I submit that if he is going to charge to the Democratic administration the few failures that have come, and will come occasionally under any administration, he ought to be fair enough to give us credit for the millions of business enterprises now flourishing in every State in the Union. He ought to give us credit for reducing the cost of living in many of the necessities of life.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that there is an effort on the part of certain illegitimate business concerns of the country to hamper and hinder the President in his great work in behalf of the American people. I believe that men engaged in public plunder under the license of Republican laws have conspired together to defeat just and much-needed legislation at the hands of this Congress. They have sent word into every quarter of the country, saying, "Write your Congressman and your Senator and tell them to hurry up and adjourn; that they are disturbing business." There is big business and little business, legitimate business and criminal business. These crafty and avaricious fellows engaged in criminal business are anxious to have Congress adjourn before the hand of just legislation is laid upon them.

This Democratic President is leading in this great work of saving the life of this Nation from the dangers which threaten it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Some gentlemen on that side have referred to the Claflin failure in New York, and they attribute it to the Democratic tariff. Mr. Claflin himself makes a statement in which he attributes it to other causes. He does not attribute it at all to the tariff, and the Wall Street Journal says that it was due to an effort to do business on too large a scale for the capital invested, and because of changing the character of business—going out of the wholesale business into the retail business, and arousing the antagonism of men who were formerly his customers, because when he became a competitor as a retail merchant the local merchants fought his business and sought to help themselves. Mr. Claflin in his statement gives as another reason for his failure that the center of business moved into another quarter of New York and away from him. And yet gentlemen have the gall to bring that failure up as the fruit of Democratic legislation. You can not deceive the people by such false statements.

Mr. Speaker, President Wilson is working earnestly in the interest of the American people. He is trying to do certain definite and needful things for them. He is striving to free the American masses from the oppressive conditions woven around them through 16 years of Republican legislation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I repeat that there is an organized effort on foot to embarrass the President and to prevent, if possible, the completion of his legislative program. Here is a letter from the Shapleigh Hardware Co., of St. Louis, sent to its salesmen throughout the United States. It speaks for itself:

[Copy of a letter sent by the Shapleigh Hardware Co., of St. Louis, to each of its 250 salesmen throughout the United States.]

ST. LOUIS, June 12, 1914.

DEAR SIR: You have doubtless been shown copy of letter issued by Simmons Hardware Co., dated June 10, in which they state that "general business in the United States is exceedingly dull at present."

It is very evident from the tone of this letter that they think the same conditions that apply to the Simmons Hardware Co. apply to the entire United States.

The facts are our sales up to date this year are just three-fifths of 1 per cent less than the same period last year, and if June business continues to increase as it has done so far, we will gain this three-fifths of 1 per cent and probably finish the first half of the year with a gain.

* * * * * * *

We suggest you do not waste any time discussing this letter with your customers. If they bring the matter up just smile and tell them the facts about our business as explained in this letter.

We believe our salesmen should be fully posted on our business and in position to talk intelligently and truthfully regarding the business we are doing.

Yours, very truly,

SHAPLEIGH HARDWARE CO.

This letter calls attention to what some people are trying to do. They may manufacture specials for newspapers and send out false statements regarding the business situation of the country, but they can not frighten or intimidate the big and brave leader of the Democratic Party or deceive the people with regard to his work in their behalf. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why, Mr. Speaker, gentlemen on that side hard pressed for something to talk about and politically embarrassed by the record of Democratic achievement are trying to scare the country with manufactured notices of business disturbance. Yet we call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that the New York Commercial to-day says:

General trade conditions throughout the country are considered sound by large merchants in the New York market, and they are firmly convinced that there is every reason to look for good business during the last half of the year.

Did you gentlemen know that the coal mines of Pennsylvania are doing more business, producing more coal per day, than ever in their history? Did you know that the silk mills of Pennsylvania are running 24 hours a day when they can secure the labor? And yet you talk about men being thrown out of employment. Did you know that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] wrote to his wool-producing constituents that if the Underwood bill became a law it would put them out of business, and did you know that wool is higher now than it was then? Gentlemen, quit your growling and grumbling and join us in the completion of this great work of constructive legislation, and it will not be long until prosperity will come and the country will blossom as the rose. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. HEFLIN to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, we desire to serve notice on the Republican side of this House that, from now on until the adjournment of this Congress, whenever it occurs, we propose to answer on the Democratic side such unpatriotic, almost treasonable, prophecies of disaster as the gentlemen on that side so frequently make. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], in referring to the Claflin failure, made this prophecy: This great failure, he said, "is prophetic of what we may expect in the future."

According to H. B. Claflin, the head of the Claflin firm, the failure of his business was due to the unprecedented shifting of trade centers in New York City. In the statement he gave out, he said that this condition—compelled his concern to rely mainly upon its retail stores in other cities for its profits.

Referring to the business of these retail stores, he said:

Their rapidly expanding business had occasioned large capital requirements, which we have not been able to meet.

He denied, and those financiers who attempted to tide over the affairs of the Claflin Co. denied, that the present tariff laws had anything to do with bringing about the crash. A representative of the large financial interests which attempted to avert the Claflin failure, speaking, yesterday, for those interests, said:

This was simply a case where the Claflin business was too big for the capital invested. There is plenty of money, and cheap money, too. It is not that; it is a situatio where people are without the confidence sufficient to guarantee the raising of the money. It was a case of getting it all or not getting it. We could not get it; that was all.

The Dry Goods Economist in its issue to-day discusses the Claflin failure, and calls attention to the fact that the Claflin failure is due largely to the fact that New York is now "situated on the rim of the country" as a primary merchandise market; that the "drifting westward of the center of population has brought a marked change in jobbing distribution." This journal attributes the Claflin failure largely to the fact that the Claflin Co. in establishing affiliated retail stores throughout the country "encountered the direct competition of their own sources of supply." This paper reaches the conclusion that the Claflin failure was due entirely to a violation of those laws of trade which control enterprises of this character. According to the opinion of the head of the Claflin Co., the failure of that company was due principally to the fact that the stores affiliated with it throughout the country in their expanding business made demands upon the parent concern which, on account of the diminishing business of the parent concern, they were unable to supply. The great Claflin failure, the greatest failure we have ever experienced, has almost passed into history. There is not a cloud on the horizon. Trade proceeds as though nothing had happened. The situation is a splendid tribute to the feeling of confidence inspired by the Federal reserve law and by the policies of the present Democratic administration. If such a failure as this had occurred under either of the last three Republican administrations, the result would have been disastrous throughout the land, and perhaps would have disturbed trade centers throughout the world.

I remember, and all of us remember, a time in this country when we had a real panic, not long ago, a Republican panic, which came after 12 years of uninterrupted Republican rule, when on every hand was heard the crash of failing banks. So strong is the feeling of confidence inspired throughout the country by the Democratic Federal reserve law that not many days ago when a great bank in Chicago failed and a chain of affiliated smaller banks went down with it—it was a bank conducted by typical Republican politicians for typical Republican purposes—there was not a ripple on the surface, not one. In connection with the Claflin failure two days ago there comes to us the news that throughout the country from 3,000 to 5,000 banks held the paper of this concern, and there is no talk about a bank panic or any failing of securities throughout the country—so strong is the confidence in the present administration and in the fact that the Federal reserve law will soon be in operation. If the fact that this law is soon to be in operation has this effect, we can understand what sort of a feeling of business security will prevail when it is in actual operation. On account of this great piece of constructive legislation bank panics belong now to a period that has gone forever. There will never be another bank panic. When the trust bills become laws there will never be another period of serious business depression.

In 1907 the men who had toiled all day long, day after day, in our shops, and under the hot suns of summer on our farms, were unable to go to their banks and get the money they had earned and had deposited there. During that period of time I myself recall that a check on the Treasury of the United States, drawn by the Sergeant at Arms of this House, payable to myself for one month's salary, was refused payment by one of the greatest banks in the Middle West. The banks locked up the money of the people in their vaults during that typical Republican panic, and they issued their own paper, in violation of law. We suspended the operation of the criminal and civil laws of this country and permitted throughout the land every bank that wanted to do so to violate the law. On this side of the House there was not a murmur of discontent or disapproval throughout the dark days of 1907—not a single political speech calling attention to this panic, for which the Republican Party was directly responsible, was made on this side of the Chamber. It was a case where we applied the faith cure to the situation, and starting on the Democratic side of the House and of the Senate we made speeches of confidence, and the inspiration created here spread throughout the country.

Out in my section a widow who had saved up two or three hundred dollars and hid it away, because she did not believe in banks, was so inspired with the patriotic feeling which started on this side of the House and extended throughout the country that she brought her money from its hiding place and deposited it in a local bank, and said: "Here is my money; I feel I ought to contribute this toward the security of the banks and business throughout the land." Those acts of patriotism, numerous as they were, conspicuous as they were in 1907, can all be traced to the wave of patriotism which was inspired by Democratic leaders here and throughout the country in the dark days of this Republican panic. Patriotic utterances so frequent in 1907 and 1908 on this side of the House are absolutely lacking at the present time on the other side of the House. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the present time bristles every day with unpatriotic prophecies of business disaster made by Republican Members of this House, evidently willing and anxious to profit politically at the expense of the prosperity of this country; and these utterances are all wildly applauded by Republicans and Progressives alike on that side of the House. As soon as I have an opportunity and can get the time I propose to discuss the business situation in the country to-day. We are just recovering from the Republican panic of 1907, and throughout the land the evidence of revival is abundant. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You gentlemen can not bring about a period of business disaster, no matter how hard you try.

"Lest we forget," let me tell the gentlemen on that side some of the things that happened in 1908, after the bank panic of 1907, for which we can charge the Republican Party with responsibility—there was nothing psychological about conditions in 1907 and 1908:

In Chicago, on February 11, 1908, the papers announced that the total number of unemployed were estimated by the Federation of Labor at 100,000, and about that date a warning was issued to craftsmen to keep away from the city of Chicago.

On April 8, 1908, 700 Bulgarians in Chicago appealed to the city and county authorities for aid for deportation to their own country.

In Buffalo, on the 20th of January, 1908, 500 men besieged the superintendent of the poor for food. Four men were taken to the hospital suffering from starvation.

In Camden, N. J., on the 10th of August, 1908, a riot followed the application of 1,500 men for less than 400 jobs advertised by the Joseph Campbell Co.

In Denver, on the 20th of March, 1908, more than 200 Bulgarians petitioned the Government for employment or aid to return to Bulgaria.

In Detroit, on January 28, 1908, more than 2,000 men marched to the city hall to solicit work of the mayor.

In Granite City, Ill., on April 25, 1908, 50 men knelt before various churches pleading for work, and 1 man killed himself because he failed to obtain work.

In New York school children numbering 5,000 mobbed the restaurant of Adolph Lorber to obtain the free meals offered by Mr. Lorber on February 13, 1908.

In New York, on March 15, 1908, the city government was urged by the Central Federated Labor Union to let contracts for subways to furnish work for 500,000 unemployed; and on March 28, 1908, there was a demonstration in New York in favor of armed revolution made by 10,000 unemployed, singing the Marseillaise and other inciting songs as they marched through the streets. A bomb was thrown at the police by an anarchist during this demonstration.

On February 10, 1908, in Philadelphia, a total of 50,000 idle men were reported by the labor unions in the Kensington district; and on February 20, 1908, in Philadelphia, a riot followed the march of 1,000 foreigners, chiefly women, to the city hall to demand employment; 3 policemen were shot and 14 unemployed were arrested. Also at that time a loan of $9,000,000, to provide funds for public work, was asked by the city for the unemployed, and a race riot followed the demonstration of unemployed demanding work; Italians were attacked by men of other nations.

On January 28, 1908, in San Francisco there was a league formed of the unemployed, and they demanded an issue of $23,000,000 in bonds to aid them.

On March 23, 1908, in Toledo, 1,000 Hungarians marched through the rain to receive a loaf of rye bread each.

At that time the total unemployed was estimated at 1,200,000, half that number being in the large cities, New York having 250,000 unemployed and Chicago 90,000. I am indebted for the data I have been using to a recent compilation made by a great western newspaper, the Milwaukee Journal.

This is the record, but only part of it. I have only succeeded in calling attention to a small part of the evidence in existence as to the effect of this great Republican panic of 1907, which still existed in 1908, and which has come with us down to the present time. From it, under the wise guidance of the present Democratic administration, we are just recovering. It was brought about by long periods of legislative inactivity in this country—inactivity here in this body. You depended upon the obsolete legislation of years ago with which to meet the present-day problems presenting themselves for solution. All these problems which you pushed forward indefinitely into the future, which you did not have either the executive or legislative ability or courage to meet or to handle, came down to us, and we are solving them all, every one of them, as the time comes, shirking no responsibility, placing the constructive legislation upon the statute books of this country demanded by the business conditions of the present period.

The amount of much-needed legislation we have placed upon the statute books has been equaled by no other administration in this country in a century of time. Here on the Democratic side of this House we propose to stand by the administration through the long, hot months of a summer in Washington, if it becomes necessary to do so. We propose to stay here until the trust bills are enacted into law. Throughout the land a subsidized press is working overtime in its efforts to compel an adjournment. From the invisible government, which, thank God, no longer governs in this country as it did in the days of Republican supremacy, there come demands upon the constituents of Members of Congress throughout the land that they write letters to their Members urging an adjournment before the trust bills are enacted into law. A discredited invisible government can not prevent this much-needed legislation. The dawn of a new day has come. There were protests, vigorous protests, against the parcel post; there are none now. There were protests against the Federal reserve law; there are none now. Everywhere there comes from those interests whose profits have heretofore been protected by Republican tariffs most violent protests against the Democratic tariff law, but a recent report from Bradstreet's agency shows that there are substantial reductions in the wholesale prices of over a hundred manufactured staples in common use in the country. This means the bringing about in due time of retail-price reductions so important that a return to the old Republican system of protective tariffs will never again be possible. I propose on this floor, as soon as I can get time for that purpose, to call attention to reviving business conditions throughout the country and the dawn of the new era of business prosperity which will be felt not only in the centers of trade but by the great masses of consumers throughout the land.

Papers controlled by the interests may continue their unpatriotic efforts to produce a feeling of business depression; Members on the other side of this House may continue their almost treasonable utterances along these lines, but the time has come when, under Democratic management, the laws of trade can no longer be artificially controlled. The prosperity for which the country has waited since the Republican panic of 1907 is almost here, and in our efforts a kind Providence smiles upon us. Crops were never better; our granaries will soon be full to bursting with garnered grain. When the elections are held this fall, in the pleasant Southland 30,000,000 acres will be white with cotton, our greatest exchange crop, the crop which brings here gold from all the rest of the world; when the elections are held this fall, on 107,000,000 acres in the colder North the ripening corn will be rustling in the breezes of autumn. It is impossible for Republican orators, for Republican journals, for Republican prophets of calamity and disaster to stop the rising tide of prosperity; they can not contend against the conditions which confront them now. Willing and anxious as you on that side of the House seem to be to sacrifice national prosperity to party advantage, you can not make progress against reviving trade conditions throughout the country, combined with the favors an All-Wise Providence has showered upon this land to-day. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by simply inserting one extract of figures.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended for 10 minutes more than was agreed upon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the time be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. STOUT].

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Speaker, with a homesteader who goes out into the Western States to build a home upon Government land time is almost always the essence of success. Perhaps few, if any, of the Members of this body come in contact with more cases of homesteaders which are pending or are constantly being brought before the Secretary of the Interior, for one cause or another, than I do. Being one of the Representatives at Large from the greatest of all the public-land States in the Union, I receive daily dozens of letters from settlers who have gone into Montana, taken up and are trying to establish themselves on the public domain. These letters very generally deal with delays in receiving patents or in having their cases adjudicated, if their claims are in controversy. These settlers remain on the land the required length of time—three years, now—make honest efforts to comply with all of the laws and regulations of the department, endure hardships and privations, and have a right to receive at the earliest possible date the just reward for the sacrifices which they make—a title from the Government to the land which they have so faithfully worked for. Some of them who have been compelled to wait for two or three years or longer write me that they are discouraged and feel disposed to give up the struggle and begin all over again the trying task of earning a home for themselves and families. These letters convince me of the absolute necessity for some legislation which will provide a more expeditious method of handling these cases, of adjudicating the rights of the settler to the claim upon which he has filed. As has been stated by speakers who have preceded me, over 300 of these cases come up to the Secretary of the Interior on appeal every month. Since the records reveal that approximately one-half of the homestead filings of the past year were made in Montana, it is reasonable to assume that 150 of these cases each month, or 1,800 per year, are Montana cases.

It is a physical impossibility, Mr. Speaker, for the Secretary of the Interior to give personal consideration even to a small percentage of these cases. He is charged with the responsibility of administering the affairs of what I believe to be the greatest department of the Government—one involving great complexities and a wide range of subjects of far-reaching importance. He must, therefore, accept the judgment of the men in his office, a wholly inadequate force, as to the merits of these 3,000 cases and more which are brought to him on appeal from the General Land Office. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, there is a crying need for another tribunal in that department, whose sole duty it shall be to review these cases, inquire into the equities of the settlers' claims, and render decisions in accordance with the facts as they find them. Not only should they be settled, but they should be settled quickly, in order that the settler may know at the earliest date possible whether or not he is to receive title to his land. I have known of cases which dragged along in the department for four or five years, during which time the settler was unable to negotiate a loan with which to make improvements, and if he did make improvements, he did so at the risk of losing them as the result of an adverse decision.

There is nothing of greater importance to this country than to have the vast unoccupied domain of the Federal Government taken up and improved by its citizens. During recent years we have heard with dismay, read with chagrin, of the great movement of homeseekers from this country to the Dominion of Canada. The figures show that for a period of several years 100,000 of the very flower of American citizenship have annually migrated to the country to the north of us, and carrying with them the stupendous sum of $100,000,000 in cold cash each year. This is a fearful toll in people and money to pay for our failure to manage properly the affairs of our own public-land department. I live not so far from the Canadian border. I meet almost daily people who have been up through the vaunted grainfields of the Canadian northwest, the section to which most of our people have been going. From my conversations with them, I know that we have better land in Montana than they have in Canada.

The weather is far less severe, the necessary element of moisture is more certain, the yield vastly more bountiful, the conditions generally more congenial to those who were born and reared in the atmosphere of our own form of government. Moreover, Montana has no lack of good public land left. Twenty million acres remain unappropriated, just lying there idle in the best country on earth waiting for the homeless to come and claim it. But the Canadian Government has offered more liberal inducements to settlers than we; they have evolved a system of which senseless red tape is not a predominant element. This has offset the superiority of our land and accounts in a large degree for the loss by this country of hundreds of thousands of people whom, with a wiser policy in effect, we might have kept on this side of the line.

Thanks, however, Mr. Speaker, to a better administration of the affairs of the Department of the Interior, to a more sympathetic understanding of the needs and trials of the homesteader, to the best administration, I honestly believe, that has ever been given that important department of our Government, the tide of immigration has during the past year been turned back our way. As was stated in the illuminating address by my colleague, Judge EVANS, yesterday, 22,000 more people have come to the United States from Canada than went from this country to that frozen clime during the past 10 months. This is a hopeful sign. It indicates that by continuing to improve our system under the direction of such a man as Franklin K. Lane we may draw back from the frost-bitten prairies of Alberta, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan additional thousands of the good people who have been expatriated by reason of our short-sightedness. It clearly indicates that already reforms have been effected in the Department of the Interior which imbues in the settler a willingness to take a chance under the laws of his own country. Let us, then, Mr. Speaker, go forward with the work so auspiciously begun. Let us afford to the hard-working Secretary of the Interior the assistance which his splendid program of reform and efficiency demands. There is a most vital necessity for the creation of a tribunal of review such as this amendment proposes to establish, and I sincerely trust that this House in its wisdom will recede and concur in the Senate amendment. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman from Iowa use some of his time?

Mr. GOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I hope the motion of the gentleman from California to recede and concur in this amendment will prevail. I am in full accord with all that has been said by those who have spoken in favor of its adoption. The creation in the Interior Department of such a tribunal as is provided by the Senate amendment will do much toward facilitating appeals that go to the Secretary of the Interior, not only in land cases but from other bureaus under that department. It will not only result in hastening action, but also in better decisions, as there will be more opportunity for scrutinizing and examining decisions after they are prepared by the law clerks and before they are promulgated by the Secretary.

As I understand the proposition, there will be three attorneys appointed, possibly from those now in the office, to this board of appeals, and three other attorneys will be appointed to do the work that those now perform that will constitute this board of appeals, thereby making it possible for those gentlemen to give personal attention and a closer examination of appeal cases than has been given heretofore. They can also devote all their time to this work, which will enable the department to more promptly dispose of the cases.

Those of us that come from the West who have occasion to go to the office of the Secretary of the Interior quite frequently find that by discussing cases with the Assistant Secretary, the Assistant Attorney General, or the attorney who has charge of the land cases, it usually results in a fairer and better decision being rendered than happens where the decision has been written by a law clerk, because these officials have not had the time to scrutinize and examine each case, as will be done by competent persons, if this amendment prevails.

Mr. Speaker, my observation has been that there is a very efficient force in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and particularly is this true at the present time, and I take pleasure in stating that there is a disposition on the part of this department, under the direction of the present Secretary, to be more liberal toward the settlers who are struggling to secure title under the public-land laws. The present Secretary has, in several cases to my knowledge, reopened, reconsidered, and reversed cases finally decided by his predecessor, and sent them to patent, thus restoring to honest homesteaders perhaps all that they possessed in the world. I am most heartily in favor of giving to him this additional force, thereby making it possible for him to administer promptly and efficiently the many important questions that come before him.

Mr. Speaker, as has been stated, there are thousands of appeal cases pending in the department where there is delay because of the fact that the officials of the department—the Secretary himself, the First Assistant Secretary, the Assistant Attorney General, or the chief attorney—have not the time to review the decisions that have been prepared by the law clerks. In addition to land cases from the General Land Office, appeals go to the Interior Department from the Patent Office, from the Reclamation Service, where there are very important questions involved; also from the Indian Office. Under existing law the Secretary of the Interior is clothed with the jurisdiction of determining heirship in cases of deceased Indians and has final jurisdiction, and there are many cases where complicated legal questions are involved affecting property rights of much value. Again I express the hope that the House will adopt the motion to concur, or if it does not and the bill goes back to conference, that the conferees will recede and accept the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me, but I do not care to speak until the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] comes in on the floor of the House; therefore I yield back my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman yields back four minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SELDOMRIDGE].

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, if one should attempt to place his hand upon the sore spot in the administration of our public-land laws, I am sure he would recognize the fact that it must rest in the slow method followed in determining title. I believe a serious mistake was committed years ago in not conferring jurisdiction upon receivers in the local land offices or in establishing local land courts in public-land States, through which these titles could be secured without the delay which now too frequently occurs. The Government has been very liberal with the homesteader in allowing appeals from the decisions of local land offices and the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Complaints are increasing in number from the public-land States concerning the delay which arises in the determination of these cases.

The burden of this delay falls most heavily upon the class of people who are least able to bear it. They are people in moderate circumstances, who have endeavored to comply to the best of their ability with the obligations imposed upon them by law. They find themselves in many instances brought into conflict with the claims of others, and in many cases with the Government itself.

I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that there has been a great obstacle imposed upon the settlement of our public domain through these delays, which should be avoided and which should be relieved.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. One question only. My time is short.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the gentleman think that three judges can settle cases which are being originated every single month as long as the public domain is thrown open?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I will say in reply to that, Mr. Speaker, that an impression seems to have been generally created that the Secretary of the Interior personally passes upon these appeals, and the settler whose title has been contested believes that if he can get his case before the Secretary of the Interior there may be some reasons outside the legal propositions involved that may appeal to the Secretary in his case, and that he may secure a favorable decision. I believe the establishment of this court of review, or board of appeal, made up of those who will be particularly qualified to pass upon questions involved in the administration of the land laws—that the very fact that there is such a court of appeal resident in the Land Office in Washington will do away with a large number of unnecessary appeals. I believe the very procedure which we have at present in operation invites a larger number of appeals than would otherwise be made, and I think the establishment of such a court will do much to relieve the congestion that now exists and also prevent the filing of other appeals.

I also believe that we should, as far as possible, lift from the shoulders of the Secretary of the Interior and his assistants this work, which is largely administrative in character, and which can be performed by other men of legal ability. We should give to these officials larger freedom from the exactions of mere matters of routine and detail to engage in the consideration of some of the great problems of general importance concerning the development of the national domain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] submit to a question?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I would like to ask whether or not this provision will create a permanent court here that would be looked upon as a life job in the District of Columbia?

Mr. GOOD. I was going to raise that question.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I heartily approve of the announced purpose of this provision to provide additional help temporarily for the Interior Department. There are a very large number, I think something like 2,000 cases, pending on appeal before the Secretary of the Interior, and it is almost a denial of justice to the people of the West who are interested in these matters to have them held up in the way they are at the present time.

This large amount of accumulated business ought to be disposed of as fast as possible. At the same time, I have nearly always opposed creating new offices. It is the easiest thing in the world to create new positions, to provide new jobs—we are doing it nearly every day—and I think often needlessly. On the other hand, it is an absolute physical impossibility to ever abolish or get rid of an office. We never on earth can discontinue or wipe out a job once created; and for that reason I am very much in doubt about the language of this provision. It looks to me as though it is not at all temporary, but permanent; and I am very much opposed to creating a court here in Washington composed of Washington attorneys—or, at least, probably lawyers who have little or no practical knowledge of the subjects upon which they will be called to pass—to determine these important questions affecting the rights of the settlers of the West.

I have always been in favor of providing for an appeal from the final decision of the Secretary of the Interior, or, in some cases, the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to the United States district court or circuit court of appeals of the district in which the land involved is situated. But I have always been very much, and, in fact, bitterly opposed to the bills that have been pending before Congress for several years to authorize appeals from the Secretary of the Interior to the Supreme Court or Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia; and I am very much afraid that this amendment is an indirect way of bringing about that provision or creating another court similar to what that court would be to handle these western matters. I think the language of this amendment should be expressly limited, and the tenure of appointment of those attorneys to assist the Secretary of the Interior in the disposition of this accumulated business should be very specific and rigidly limited to a certain number of years, or some way; otherwise we will have those offices on our hands forever, even after the public lands are all disposed of.

Mr. GOOD. I agree with the gentleman. I believe there is no department of the Government where the work is more behind because of the lack of men to perform the work than the Interior Department. There is no department where there is a greater effort being put forward to perform the duties of the office, but, as the gentleman from Oklahoma and others have stated, new questions have arisen because of legislation that throw so much additional work upon the department they are not able to perform it.

And, Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the gentlemen on that side of the House to the provision in that it creates a board of appeals. A board of appeals will mean something. It means it shall have some power. And I know that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] and the other conferees realize that the Department of the Interior must have additional force. But it should not be allowed in the words and the language of the Senate amendment.

I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has five minutes and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] eight minutes remaining.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS Mr. Speaker, I conferred with some of my friends who are members of the Public Lands Committee and some of my friends on the conference committee. The conference committee has been very willing to do full justice in this, and they are trying to work out some relief for the General Land Office. They want to work it out so that it will be intelligible and mean something. And so do we; and, therefore, we want to aid them in that direction. So, with the consent of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], I withdraw the motion made a moment ago to recede and concur.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman?

Mr. RAKER. I join the gentleman in that request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That leaves nothing for me to say. I think it is very proper that this amendment should go back to conference, and I hope my motion will prevail.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Just what did happen? The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] offered a motion, and there was nearly an hour's debate. Then he withdraws the motion.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That leaves before the House my motion, that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments, and that puts it back into conference.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman from South Carolina is still in favor of disagreeing?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think everybody is of that opinion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HARRISON). The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 168 and 169. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the next amendment be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 107 of the bill, line 20, after the figures "$3,500," insert the words "second assistant commissioner, who shall also perform the duties of chief clerk, $2,750."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider amendments 176 and 177 together. The one is the total, and that depends upon the action taken in respect to the other.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to consider amendments 176 and 177 together. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House further insist on its disagreement to amendments Nos. 176 and 177.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report amendment No. 177.

Page 108, line 7, strike out the figures "$325,400" and insert "$328,150."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendments numbered 176 and 177. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is on page 121.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment 195, page 121 of the bill: Strike out the following language, lines 1 to 8, inclusive, as follows: "New Washington, D. C., post-office building: For 4 assistant engineers, at $900 each; 4 assistant electricians, at $900 each; 10 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 4 oilers, at $720 each; 22 watchmen, additional to 2 watchmen acting as lieutenant of watch, at $120 each; 15 laborers; 1 assistant plumber, at $720; 2 female laborers, at $480 each; 15 charwomen; in all, $48,540," and insert the following: "Washington, D. C., new post-office building: For 3 assistant engineers, at $900 each; 3 assistant electricians, at $900 each; 8 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 2 oilers, at $720 each; 12 watchmen; additional to 1 watchman acting as lieutenant of the watch, $120; 12 laborers; 1 assistant plumber, $720; 2 female laborers, at $480 each; 12 charwomen; in all, $33,840."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to amendment numbered 195.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make a preferential motion that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Does the gentleman from Illinois want any time?

Mr. MANN. I want a little time; yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have 10 minutes altogether.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] five minutes and to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, a little while ago, when I was talking in regard to another matter, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] interrupted me for a question, and in that question made the statement that if the remarks that I made last January in regard to the closing of the steel mills were no more correct with reference to other mills than they were in regard to the one in Colorado—the Coal, Fuel & Iron Co. at Pueblo—my statements were not true, or words to that effect. I do not know whether he used exactly that expression or not, but that is the information he sought to convey.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that was rather a bold statement. I know that upon the floor of this House, when it comes to expressing political opinions, we are somewhat reckless at times, and I presume I am one of that class; but I do think I am reasonably careful when it comes to making statements of facts. A statement of facts is an entirely different proposition, and in my experience here in this House I have very rarely heard a statement of any Member on either side of this aisle questioned when that Member made a statement of fact.

Now, here is what I said, reading from the RECORD, and the gentleman from Colorado said that he was familiar with what I stated in the RECORD, and that what I stated at that time was not correct. I used these words: "I want to call attention to this list of 123 furnaces by States." I call the attention of the gentleman to the language. Then I went through the different States, and I said, referring to closed furnaces:

In Colorado 2, representing 240,000 tons——

Mr. KINDEL. What are the ones in Colorado?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The Coal, Fuel & Iron Co. at Pueblo.

Mr. KINDEL. Did the coal strike there have anything to do with that?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not know; I simply know the mills were reported closed. I ask the gentleman if he knows that that is not correct?

Mr. KINDEL. No; I do not know.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If anyone denies that any furnace in the list is not closed, I will be glad to correct it. I am taking my statement from a trade paper that assures me they are correct.

I now ask the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] whether or not he contradicts that statement and says that my words were not true at the time I used them, on the 13th day of January last? I yield to the gentleman to answer, if he will.

Mr. KEATING. I will say to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, that I prefer to answer in my own time, that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has been good enough to promise me. It will follow right after the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I understood the gentleman to state that it was not true when I said there were two furnaces closed in the Coal, Fuel & Iron Co., of Pueblo, at that time. Do I understand the gentleman to say it was not true? I will ask the gentleman if he knows the president of the company?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Is his name J. F. Wilburn?

Mr. KEATING. I have no desire to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I desire to ask the gentleman a question, and I desire him to answer.

Mr. KEATING. I refuse to be placed on the witness stand by the gentleman from Washington. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has promised to yield to me some time, and when I get that time I will answer the gentleman at length. The gentleman from Washington can proceed with his own speech.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman is getting very tender about answering questions.

Mr. KEATING. Not at all tender. I refuse to be cross-examined and be placed upon the witness stand by the gentleman from Washington. If the gentleman wants to make a speech, let him make it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. A while ago the gentleman voluntarily stated that the statement I made was not correct. Now, I challenge him to answer whether or not it is correct.

If he does not answer it, by his silence he repudiates what he said a while ago. I say to the gentleman that what I said was true, and he does not dare to stand upon the floor of this House and deny it. I will yield him an opportunity now to do it, if he dares.

Now, inasmuch as he will not do it, inasmuch as he refuses to do it, and inasmuch as he has refused to show the manliness to stand up and do as any man would if he wanted to be fair and honest and square about it, I will read a dispatch from the president of that company, sent the next day, to show whether or not I stated the truth. Here is a dispatch to the New York Times:

PUEBLO, COLO., January 14.

On account of the strike by the Colorado miners, and some reduction in the demand for steel, our operating blast furnaces were reduced from three to one

Does not that show that two were closed down, just as I said?

And about one-half of our employees, or 2,000 men, were temporarily laid off. Conditions have improved. We have about 2,500 men working, are blowing in another blast furnace, and there is fair prospect of still further increase in the working force.

J. F. WILBURN.

That is a dispatch from that company to the Democratic New York Times which verifies the statements that I made. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I regret that my good friend from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] displays so much feeling on this subject. I stated this morning that the steel plant at Pueblo had not been closed at the time the gentleman made his speech, and that it is not closed now.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I decline to yield, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I never made any such statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. KEATING. I recognize that the Speaker has some difficulty in keeping the gentleman in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take care of that part of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEATING. I have the utmost faith in the Speaker's ability to do so. Now, Mr. Speaker, I stated that the steel mills at Pueblo were operating when the gentleman made his former speech, and are operating now. I stated that I was not on the floor of the House when the gentleman made the speech to which I referred. As soon as I had an opportunity, I secured a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing his speech, and I have it before me.

The speech was delivered on January 14, 1914; and as it appears in the RECORD it is preceded by one of those very instructive summaries which the gentleman is so fond of placing as an introduction to his speeches. I take it that he once had to do with a newspaper, and that he has discovered that most readers read the headlines and the summary, and in that way form their opinions of the contents of the article. This is what the gentleman says in the summary:

More than one-third of all the steel mills in the United States closed.

Now, you will notice that the gentleman says nothing about stacks, nothing about furnaces. He speaks of mills having closed down; and all through his speech he interlards mills with furnaces and stacks in the hope of creating the impression that steel mills are closed down in this country.

Then he tells the House that he will insert a list which he has taken from a trade paper, and he does insert such a list, but the list has to do with stacks, not with mills, and so far as the list is concerned, there is no evidence that a single steel mill in the United States closed down. That is true so far as Colorado is concerned.

As every Member of this House knows, we have had a coal strike in Colorado. It was a strike that tied up the fields which supplied the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. Now, it is entirely possible that some time last January, for a few days, it was necessary to curtail the output of the Pueblo plant; but the statement that the plant was closed down on account of a lack of orders—that it was closed down in any sense in which that expression is generally accepted—is without foundation in fact.

The Pueblo mills have never been in such prosperous condition as they are to-day. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I personally do not claim that that is due to the tariff or the lack of the tariff. The truth is, it is due to efficient management of those mills; but the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. is to-day showing most gratifying net earnings so far as its steel plant is concerned. The strike has probably caused a marked falling off in its receipts from the sale of coal.

Now, the other mills cited by the gentleman show one stack and two stacks and in a few instances four and six stacks closed down. Sometimes furnaces are relined and reconstructed, and when they are undergoing these changes, of course they can not be operated. Then again, as in the case of Colorado, there may be a shortage of fuel supply. But that is not the kind of "shut down" the gentleman wanted this House to understand he was describing when he made his speech last January. If the gentleman had wanted to be fair at that time he would have read the statement from Mr. Welborn, president of the company. You will observe that the president of the company does not claim that his mills are closed down on account of lack of business. He says there has been some reduction in the demand for steel, but he makes it clear that the temporary suspension of two stacks was due to lack of fuel supply, and that was chargeable to the coal strike.

So, Mr. Speaker, I want to state that so far as Pueblo is concerned—and it has the only steel mill west of the Missouri River—we were never more prosperous than we are to-day, and that our steel mills have not been closed down, and we are getting along in bully fashion. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR].

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], who has just taken his seat, has been working overtime for six months in an effort to lead the country to believe we are in the throes of a disastrous panic. Time and again he has taken the floor and called the attention of the House to business conditions in some particular section of the country. Heretofore I have remained silent, but when he undertakes to slander and misrepresent conditions in my own State, as he has done this morning, I can not permit his statements to go unchallenged. I would not say that the gentleman from the State of Washington has intentionally misrepresented conditions, either in my State or elsewhere, but I do say that he has been misled, that he has been deceived, and that the statements he has given to the House are incorrect and untrue. It has been repeatedly shown upon this floor that his statements regarding the condition of business in other States have been exceedingly unreliable, and so far as conditions in my State of Indiana are concerned I know he has been misled and misinformed. He talks a great deal about conditions existing in Indianapolis, and would have the country believe that such conditions as he describes are the result of tariff legislation.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that some time ago Indianapolis had a street-car strike which did affect injuriously the business of that city. That strike is now over and business is resuming its normal basis. No one except the gentleman from Washington ever charged that the temporary conditions at Indianapolis were due to a revision of the tariff. We know out in Indiana that the tariff had nothing to do with it; that it was the result of a local condition and nothing else. Business in that city is now improving, and in the future, as in the past, Indianapolis will remain in the front rank as one of the largest and one of the most progressive and successful manufacturing cities throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, the Underwood tariff bill is meeting with the universal approval of all fair-minded people. It has not up to this time, nor never will, close a single factory or throw a single laboring man out of employment anywhere. As a whole, business conditions are satisfactory throughout Indiana. Our factories are running, labor is employed, and the people are happy, prosperous, and contented. I hold in my hand a copy of the Muncie Star, a splendid newspaper published at Muncie, Ind.—one of the leading cities in the district I have the honor to represent—always a Republican paper until two years ago, at which time it gave its support to the Progressive Party. I find in its columns an article copied from the Indianapolis News, an independent Republican paper, written by a Republican staff correspondent, showing business conditions in Elwood, Ind., a beautiful city of 13,000 people, only 50 miles from Indianapolis. The article I refer to reads as follows:

ELWOOD BOOSTED BY STAFF WRITERS—TIN-PLATE PLANT EMPLOYEES RIDE IN OWN AUTOS TO RECEIVE SEMIMONTHLY SALARIES—ALSO LIVE IN OWN HOUSES.

W. H. Blodgett, staff correspondent of the Indianapolis News, visited Elwood, and the following is the result of his observations:

"Did you ever know of a man working for day wages who went to the paymaster's office in his own automobile to get his money? Well, that is just what more than 10 per cent of the men working at the American Tin Plate Co.'s plant in this city do. Tom O'Brien, general superintendent of the plant, is authority for the statement that on the semimonthly pay day the vicinity of the plant is so thronged with automobiles owned by the men who work in the plant for day wages that it is almost impossible to get through them.

"A banker told me that last year more than $50,000 of Elwood money was invested in automobiles and a large part of that sum came from men employed in industrial plants of this city.

"COSTLY IMPROVEMENTS.

"In 1913 the improvements in the city of Elwood amounted to about $500,000. In the list were a public building and a large schoolhouse. This year the improvements in streets, houses, dwellings, additions to plants, etc., will amount to about $300,000.

"ELWOOD IS PROSPEROUS.

"'What about the industrial situation in Elwood?' I asked a Republican politician.

"'Elwood is prosperous,' he answered.

"'Business is fine in Elwood,' said a banker. 'Our deposits are increasing all the time and the merchants have money and a good trade.'

"Just to see what the industrial situation is in Elwood, I took a look into the pay rolls of the different factories. The biggest plant here is that of the American Tin Plate Co., a subsidiary plant of the Steel Trust. Because of the extreme heat it is impossible for the men to work full time, and there is some falling off in the number of men employed at this season of the year. All the other factories are working a full complement of men, and some of them are working overtime. Here are the leading industries of Elwood and the monthly pay roll of each:

The American Tin Plate Co	$110,000
The Indiana Box Co	3,000
The Ames Tool & Shovel Co	7,000
C. T. Sellers & Sons, kitchen cabinets	8,000
The Macbeth Evans Glass Co	12,000
The Elwood Lawn Mower Manufacturing Co	1,500
The Elwood Iron Works	3,300
The Frazier Packing Co	2,000
Total	146,000

"HAS REASON TO BE PROUD.

"And that is not so bad for a city of 13,000 population. This city has a good deal to feel proud over. It has good streets, good water, and good lights, and some of the handsomest public and private buildings in the State. Its schools rank with the best in Indiana, and its public library is largely patronized by workingmen."

Mr. Speaker, I know personally Mr. Tom O'Brien, referred to in this article, and I can testify to his honesty, his integrity, and his truthfulness. I know he would not make a statement that was not true in every respect. The investigation made by a Republican correspondent for a Republican paper shows that all the factories at Elwood are running, and some of them overtime; that bank deposits are increasing, labor employed, and business good. I had a letter a few days ago from a prominent physician living in Anderson, Ind., saying that business had never been better in that city than it is now, and that every man who wanted work was employed. Only a few days ago I saw an advertisement in a Republican paper published in my district, advertising for men wanted by a manufacturing plant, which, as I remember now, was located at Connersville, Ind., only a few miles south of Indianapolis. All this talk about poor business conditions in Indiana is a farce and a fraud. It is incorrect, it is not true; and if the gentleman from Washington will come out to Indiana and live among a happy, contented, will come out to Indiana and live among a happy, contented, and prosperous people, he will be less partisan and more patriotic.

Mr. Speaker, five or six years ago the tinplate mill referred to in the article I have just read was closed for nearly one year and 2,400 men were walking the streets of Elwood, idle. Many were compelled to leave that city and seek employment elsewhere. At that time the administration was Republican; but I did not come upon this floor and charge the Republican Party with that responsibility. The closing of the tinplate mill at that time was not the result of legislation, and I did not try to gain political advantage by charging it up to the party in power. The gentleman from Washington may play politics if he desires to do so, but so long as I remain a Member of this House I am going to be absolutely fair, stating facts as they are, regardless of whether they hurt or help any political party. I am here representing all the people of my district, and if the time ever comes when I allow my partisanship to override my patroitism, it will then be time for my constitutents to leave me at home.

Mr. Speaker, just a few days ago I saw a statement to the effect that automobiles are being sold in Indiana at the rate of 150 per day, and that the greater part of this number were bought by farmers. This does not indicate a panic in that section of the country, but it does show our people are prosperous, business is good, and money is plenty. Only recently there appeared in the Daily Review, a Republican paper published at Greensburg, Ind., the following:

BIG CONTRACT TO BE FULFILLED BY BIG FOUR THIS FALL.

On September 1 the Big Four through here will enter upon one of the largest contracts ever had by this company. It will receive, at Cincinnati, from the Louisville & Nashville, 3,000,000 tons of coal from the Virginia fields and transfer it to Scheff, where the Chicago, Indiana & Southern will take charge and deliver it to the steel mills at Gary. To take care of this contract it will take 10 trains a day westbound, and they will be returned made up in 5 double-headers. This business will not only require additional train crews, but three additional train dispatchers on the west end, more telegraph operators on the east end, and a number of assistant car distributors. From this it would seem that the Big Four boys in all departments will not be short of work for some time to come. This business would also indicate that the steel mills at Gary are expecting a demand next year for their product. If so, and the old saying holds good—busy steel and iron mills means good times—we may expect better financial conditions for this country.

This shows the steel industry is booming and the business of the Big Four Railroad is unusually large. The facts are, railroads held up business for a while for the purpose of coercing the Interstate Commerce Commission into granting a 5 per cent increase of freight rates, which would transfer from the pockets of the people $50,000,000 annually and place it in the treasuries of the railroad companies. I do not know whether they are entitled to this increase or not, but I do know they can not fool the Interstate Commerce Commission nor the people by such unfair methods. They can play the game no longer. The business of the country is growing so rapidly and the demand for cars is growing so great that they can no longer hold up business, but are forced to furnish transportation to move the enormous products of the farm and the factory. Now they have begun the purchase of equipment in tremendous quantities, as is shown by press reports. The Wall Street Journal of June 28, published in New York City, has the following statement, which shows purchases by railroads, and indicates a wave of prosperity:

The Havana Central has bought 450 flat and box cars, most of which went to the Standard Steel Car Co., and 100 underframes from the same company; and the Charlotte Harbor & Northern has bought 30 phosphate cars from the Pressed Steel Car Co. The Tampa & Gulf Coast has ordered three locomotives and the Carolina, Clinchfield & Ohio two, all from the Baldwin, and the Bingham & Garfield one, from the American Locomotive Co.

The last two weeks have been exceptionally busy ones in the equipment market, most of the large inquiries having been closed, although several new ones of fair size have been put out during that period. The New York Central lines will take 4,000 freight cars in addition to their recent orders. Alcolu Railroad wants 50 box cars, the Lackawanna is inquiring for 250, and the Havana Central will buy 6 motor coaches. The St. Paul is asking for bids on 5 locomotives, the Kansas City Southern wants 30, the Minneapolis & St. Louis wants 20, and the Western Maryland 20, making a total of inquiry for 70 engines put out this week. The Wabash has practically closed for 60 locomotives with the American Locomotive Co., which company also took 20 from the Seaboard Air Line this week.

Thus far in June nearly 17,000 cars have been ordered, which includes the 5,000 for the Illinois Central and 7,500 for the New York Central, most of which goes to the Big Four. At present there is a total inquiry out for about 10,000 more cars, probably half of which should be closed this month.

Previous to June the best month in equipment this year was February, when about 13,500 cars were ordered.

Also the following dispatch from Pittsburgh from the same journal:

The McKeesport plants of the National Tube Co. have been ordered into operation on full time. The entire mills will be in operation by Saturday, while two additional welding furnaces will begin operations at once. For some time the mills have been working below capacity, and their being ordered on full time has every indication that a number of other plants in this district will follow the lead set by the National Tube Co. Three blast furnaces of the company were put into operation Thursday, and a number of others will shortly be added to the active list.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that mills and factories are running all over the country and that labor is employed everywhere—except in a very few instances where some local situation has temporarily affected business—and in view of the further fact that our railroads are seemingly unable to move the freight offered for transportation and have been compelled to purchase 17,000 cars, as shown by the article just read, I can not understand how the gentleman from Washington can have the nerve to stand on this floor and even insinuate that business conditions are not good. I have here a statement showing that the greatest plow works in the world, located at South Bend, Ind., will on July 1 increase its force 2,500 men, and similar information is coming to us from all over Indiana.

Mr. Speaker, I could stand here for hours reading into the RECORD statements showing the wonderful increase of business during the past 60 days, the building of new mills and factories, and the increased demand for labor, but I shall not burden the RECORD or take up the time of the House in doing so. The Underwood tariff bill is doing full justice to the manufacturing interests of the country and at the same time is bringing great relief to the farmer, the laborer, and a consuming public in general. The currency bill has taken the control of money out of the hands of Wall Street and made money panics an impossibility in the future. We are going to pass antitrust legislation, and when that is done fair and legitimate competition will be restored, trusts and combinations will be wiped out, and we will enter upon an era of prosperity the equal of which was never known in the history of our Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the tariff bill and the currency bill were passed in the face of fierce opposition from the beneficiaries of class legislation. Letters and telegrams came thick and fast protesting against their passage and asserting their enactment into law would destroy business and bring on a panic. Notwithstanding this protest both bills were passed, and now the special privileged class, seeing the good effect they are having upon the business of the country, is loud in their praise.

But now, Mr. Speaker, letters and telegrams are coming again, protesting this time against the passage of antitrust legislation and asking Congress to adjourn and give business a rest. will take away from a favored few the privilege of robbing the balance of the people the beneficiaries of such a vicious system It is the same old story. Whenever legislation is proposed that will strenuously object. I hold in my hand a letter I received from the president of the Southern Iron & Equipment Co., of Atlanta, Ga., which reads as follows:

SOUTHERN IRON & EQUIPMENT CO.,
Atlanta, Ga., June 20, 1914.

Hon. J. A. M. ADAIR,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Beg to call your attention to the following extracts from an editorial that recently appeared in the Atlanta Constitution:

"Since the Wilson administration assumed office three great masterpieces in legislation stand forth:

"1. Tariff reform.

"2. Currency reform.

"3. Undoing of the canal-tolls blunder.

"Any one of these three achievements would have justified the party in going before the country and asking indorsement. Together they should be irresistible. And they will be irresistible if Congress, mindful of when the country has had enough, mindful of the condition of business throughout the country, will rest on its laurels, go home, and give business a chance.

"Since the first year of the Roosevelt administration business has been harried. To this day it is living in an atmosphere of uncertainty.

"Business thrives on uncertainty less than any other diet. It has stood admirably the two needed capital operations of the tariff and currency revisions. But it has not yet recovered from their effects. It is unfair to business to expose it at this time to further radical operations. The patient has lost blood. Let him recuperate."

The paragraph referring to adjournment does appeal to the business interests throughout the country, and the best news that could emanate from Washington at this time would be announcement of adjournment.

Yours, truly,

F. P. KERN, President.

On June 27, 1914, I replied to this letter, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 27, 1914.

Mr. F. P. KERN,
President Southern Iron & Equipment Co.,
Atlanta, Ga.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge receipt of yours of the 20th instant, calling my attention to an extract from an editorial that recently appeared in the Atlanta Constitution, which editorial praises very highly the action of Congress in passing the Underwood tariff bill, the Glass currency bill, and the repeal of canal tolls. So far as its indorsement of this legislation is concerned, I am in hearty accord with the editorial, but I have no patience for that part of the editorial asking that Congress adjourn at this time and give the business of the country a rest.

I recall when the tariff bill was under consideration that a large number of trust-owned newspapers, as well as a large percentage of the business interests connected with trusts and combinations, were then calling upon Congress not to enact a tariff law because it would disturb business. It was openly charged that the passage of the Underwood bill would close our mills and factories and throw millions of men out of employment. Notwithstanding these protests from a special-privileged class, we passed the Underwood tariff bill, and now those who protested against its passage are loudest in its praise. It has not closed a single factory or thrown a single man out of employment anywhere in the United States. Then, again, when we took up currency legislation, letters, telegrams, and protests, like the one you have forwarded, came to us from all over the country, asking that currency legislation be dropped, that it was disturbing business, and if we continued it would bring on a disastrous panic. We knew this opposition came from a class of people who did not have the interest of the people at heart, but who had been enjoying special privileges through the old currency system and, as a matter of course, were too selfish to give them up for the benefit of the country as a whole. When these protests were received we knew the motive back of them and gave no consideration to such opposition but passed the currency bill; and now the same people who protested against currency legislation are indorsing it heartily. The same thing was true of the repeal of the canal tolls, and now another very important piece of legislation is being considered and protests are coming from the same special interests, saying to us that we are disturbing business, and that Congress ought to adjourn and the country given a rest. The facts are, antitrust legislation is necessary in order that the people may receive the benefit of the tariff act which you are now praising. It is the same old story; no legislation was ever proposed in the history of the country for the benefit of the people as a whole that some selfish individual, who was profiting by special legislation intended to enrich the few at the expense of the many, did not protest against it. Honest and legitimate business is not protesting against antitrust legislation and will not be injured by it. You might just as well save your time and your postage, as such appeals as yours has no effect whatever upon Congress.

Very truly, yours,

J. A. M. ADAIR.

Mr. Speaker, I am in hearty accord with the views of the President. It is our duty to stay here, no matter how hot it gets, until these antitrust bills are passed and the pledges of our party are redeemed. The enactment of this legislation will give freedom to legitimate business, will restore honest competition, and give every man an equal opportunity under the law. It is our duty to see that our laws are such that the strong may not trample on the rights of the weak, but that every man may have the same privileges and the same opportunities of enjoying the blessings so bountifully showered upon us as a Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I give notice that I am going to enforce the rule as to the character of debate.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I did not hear the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois gives notice that he will ask the enforcement of the rule as to the debate.

Mr. CULLOP. The gentleman from Illinois does not mean to apply that to the time yielded to me?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. That is the tactics that the gentleman is going to use, is it?

Mr. MANN. We have had two political speeches on that side and one on this, and we want to proceed with the business for reasons that everyone understands.

Mr. CULLOP. I certainly ought to have the courtesy from that side to reply to the gentleman from Washington, who has alluded to me in his speech. I would not ask it if he had not done so.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman from Washington would want time to reply, and we have had this debate running for several weeks.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman from Indiana has been trying for the last hour to get in.

Mr. CULLOP. The chairman promised me 10 minutes under the other amendment, but because it was withdrawn the allotted time was not used, and now he has granted me an opportunity to reply to the gentleman from Washington, and I would like to do so.

Mr. MANN. Very well, Mr. Speaker; I will not ask for the rule to be enforced against the gentleman for five minutes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. "Sail on, O Ship of State."

Mr. CULLOP. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is so enraged at the success of the policies of the Democratic Party that he sees evil in everything and good in nothing. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He fears the success of this Democratic administration, and it vexes him.

Now, if the gentleman's information in that letter is no more correct than his history, I am astonished that the distinguished gentleman from Washington should put any reliance in it at all. If the gentleman will look at the letter as he read it on the floor of the House, the writer fixed the passage of the Wilson bill in 1893. Now, every intelligent and well-informed man knows that the Wilson bill was not introduced in Congress until December 19, 1893, and it did not pass and become a law until August 27, 1894.

Now, how could the enactment of the Wilson bill in August, 1894, affect conditions in 1893? Will some wiseacre inform us? Now, this statement in the letter displays the author's want of knowledge on the conditions around him. The truth is the gentleman from Washington is so enraged over his disappointment at the assured success of Democratic policies that he has not only got his dates mixed but his facts all wrong. The hard times he speaks of in 1893 occurred under the McKinley tariff and not under the Wilson bill. The condition of hard times, the unemployed, idle factories, and low prices occurring under the McKinley tariff made necessary the passage of the Wilson tariff law in 1894 in order to revive business and bring about prosperity in this country. Under the McKinley law bankruptcy and receiverships were the thriving industries of that dark and dismal period in this country. And yet men like the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] and his correspondent declare it was under the Wilson bill, which had not then been written or formulated.

Mr. Speaker, there were more bankrupts during the existence of the McKinley tariff law than under any other tariff law enacted in this country. Under it, in 1893, the dockets of bankrupt courts all over the country were glutted with these unfortunate cases, and the unemployed and homeless swarmed around the thoroughfares of every business mart throughout the Nation. Property dwarfed in value, money could not be had, and business closed down. It was the darkest period in our commercial history. We hope it will never be repeated.

But the gentleman's correspondent has his ire aroused because the article I inserted was from the Indianapolis Star, which he asserts is a Bull Moose paper, and of course a standpatter never believes anything can be true which appears in a Bull Moose organ. Better be a Bull Mooser any time than a standpatter. The former shows some hope of being reclaimed from the error of his ways, the latter none. The standpatter is hopelessly lost.

Now, the gentleman from Washington says why did I not give the name of my informant from Terre Haute. Ah, Mr. Speaker, I gave him facts, furnished him the means to get information to contradict them, if they were not as I stated, I furnished him with names of plants and improvements being made, public and private, and it is easy for him to ascertain whether correct or not. Ten days have passed, ample time, and he has not attempted to refute them. Silence is acquiescence in this case, and must be so considered. Let me say to the gentleman from Washington, there will be no panic under the administration of Woodrow Wilson, but business will thrive and the people enjoy the result of their frugality and industry.

This Government is now being administered in the interests of the many and not alone in the interest of the favored few, as has always been the case under standpatism. It is the people's administration and not that alone of a favored few.

Now, some of the gentleman's party in Indiana are playing jokes on the distinguished gentleman from Washington in order to see what a ridiculous plight they can put him in before the country in his spasmodic and frantic efforts to produce a panic and sustain standpatism. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, this instance clearly demonstrates that fact, and I advise him to be cautious in these matters. Now, let me give my stand-pat friend from Washington some good evidence of prosperity in Indiana in the steel industry. I read for his consideration an article from the Daily Review, published in Greensburg, Ind.—not a Bull Moose paper, as he says of the Indianapolis Star, but a stand-pat Republican paper, of the same type as is the gentleman from Washington. Here is what it said on Tuesday, June 16, of this year:

BIG CONTRACT TO BE FULFILLED BY BIG FOUR THIS FALL.

On September 1 the Big Four through here will enter upon one of the largest contracts ever had by this company. It will receive, at Cincinnati, from the Louisville & Nashville 3,000,000 tons of coal from the Virginia fields and transfer it to Scheff, where the Chicago, Indiana & Southern will take charge and deliver it to the steel mills at Gary. To take care of this contract it will take 10 trains a day westbound, and they will be returned made up in 5 double-headers. This business will not only require additional train crews, but three additional train dispatchers on the west end, more telegraph operators on the east end, and a number of assistant car distributers. From this it would seem that the Big Four boys, in all departments, will not be short of work for some time to come. This business would also indicate that the steel mills at Gary are expecting a demand next year for their product. If so, and the old saying holds good—busy steel and iron mills mean good times—we may expect better financial conditions for this country.

This does not sound much like panic, but it has a very prosperous tone. It does not sound like the steel industry was out of business, but it shows, on the contrary, a most prosperous condition. Democratic policies are not destroying it, as the article clearly shows.

Now let me call attention of the gentleman to another evidence of prosperity in Indiana, and I read for his benefit the following:

AUTO SALE AVERAGE IS HIGH.

INDIANAPOLIS, June 16.

One hundred and fifty automobiles are being sold every day in Indiana this summer, according to the records in the office of the secretary of state. The licenses issued so far this year number 53,511. The greatest number of the automobiles go to the rural districts.

Mr. Speaker, the report of these sales shows nearly all of them are being sold to farmers. Under a Democratic administration in this country the farmer can enjoy comfort, a thing unknown during the career of standpatism. A conservative estimate of these sales would be $1,000 per automobile, and this shows the Indiana farmers are paying $150,000 per day for automobiles in order to have comfort and enjoy some of the luxuries of life, a thing they could never do under Republican rule. Money is easy; farm products are commanding a high price, the best ever known, and find a ready market. Oh, no; the farmer is prospering under Democratic policies.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Not now. At South Bend, Ind., are the greatest plow works in the world, and we are proud of that great manufacturing city in Indiana. On the 1st day of July, it has announced, it will increase its force by adding 2,500 new employees. So much and so good for a Democratic administration. That does not indicate business is poor in Indiana.

In the district I have the honor to represent on the floor of this House the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad shops are located at Washington, Ind., a large and up-to-date plant, working a large number of employees. The officials of that company had announcement made 10 days ago in the public press that on July 1 every department in that industry would be increased to its fullest capacity, and arrangements are being made accordingly; not only an increase in number of men, but also of hours and wages. This sounds mighty good for Democratic policies and a Democratic administration. It is so everywhere, and, while I know it goes hard with the gentleman from Washington, yet I hope he will survive, become a convert, and join the Democratic procession.

This splendid condition does not exist alone in Indiana, but it seems to be sweeping all over the country, if any reliance can be placed in the reports of the public press.

I call the gentleman's attention to a dispatch in the Philadelphia North American of to-day from Sharon, Pa., as follows:

SHARON, PA., June 26.

Business with the Sharon Steel Hoop Co. is very close to capacity of the plant. At a meeting of the board of directors to-day the regular quarterly dividend of 1¾ per cent was declared.

Plans to build several open-hearth furnaces and blooming mills at Wheatland were approved. Improvements to the 9-inch mill were also ordered. The expenditures will exceed $1,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Not now. I have not the time. I also call the gentleman's attention to the Wall Street Journal of June 28, published in New York, which shows something about what the railroads are doing in the way of ordering new cars, evidences of prosperity and of good times in that line of business, as follows:

The Havana Central has bought 450 flat and box cars, most of which went to the Standard Steel Car Co., and 100 underframes from the same company; and the Charlotte Harbor & Northern has bought 30 phosphate cars from the Pressed Steel Car Co. The Tampa & Gulf Coast has ordered three locomotives and the Carolina, Clinchfield & Ohio two, all from the Baldwin, and the Bingham & Garfield one, from the American Locomotive Co.

The last two weeks have been exceptionally busy ones in the equipment market, most of the large inquiries having been closed, although several new ones of fair size have been put out during that period. The New York Central lines will take 4,000 freight cars in addition to their recent orders. Alcolu Railroad wants 50 box cars, the Lackawanna is inquiring for 250, and the Havana Central will buy 6 motor coaches. The St. Paul is asking for bids on 5 locomotives, the Kansas City Southern wants 30, the Minneapolis & St. Louis wants 20, and the Western Maryland 20, making a total of inquiry for 70 engines put out this week. The Wabash has practically closed for 60 locomotives with the American Locomotive Co., which company also took 20 from the Seaboard Air Line this week.

Thus far in June nearly 17,000 cars have been ordered, which includes the 5,000 for the Illinois Central and 7,500 for the New York Central, most of which goes to the Big Four. At present there is a total inquiry out for about 10,000 more cars, probably half of which should be closed this month.

Previous to June the best month in equipment this year was February, when about 13,500 cars were ordered.

Also the following dispatch from Pittsburgh from the same journal:

The McKeesport plants of the National Tube Co. have been ordered into operation on full time. The entire mills will be in operation by Saturday, while two additional welding furnaces will begin operations at once. For some time the mills have been working below capacity, and their being ordered on full time has every indication that a number of other plants in this district will follow the lead set by the National Tube Co. Three blast furnaces of the company were put into operation Thursday and a number of others will shortly be added to the active list.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from South Carolina to let me have three more minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will make the point of order on the gentleman unless he talks to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina yields three minutes more to the gentleman from Indiana, and the gentleman from Illinois serves notice that the remarks must be on the bill under the rule.

Mr. MANN. We want to get through with this bill by the 1st of July.

Mr. CULLOP. Oh, I would like to have the gentleman——

Mr. MANN. Oh, I was courteous enough to the gentleman a while ago, and he need not undertake to lecture to me now.

Mr. CULLOP. I only wanted to read from a speech the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] made at Tacoma, Wash., on August 3, 1910, in which he asserted that a Republican tariff had reduced the price of the products of Washington wherever it had been raised in the Payne law, and the price had increased on all articles where the duty was reduced.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the speech referred to and commenting thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLOP. Now, Mr. Speaker, this remarkable speech made by the gentleman from Washington clearly shows how he diagnosed the effect of the Payne bill on the three leading products of his State—lumber, coal, and shingles. Note what he says about the Payne bill and the Republican Party:

We reduced the tariff on lumber, and the price immediately went up; we reduced the tariff on coal, and the price immediately went up; we increased the tariff on shingles from 30 to 50 cents per thousand, and shingles immediately went down.

The Payne high-tariff law put the shingle industry down and out in his State. Standpattism, with which the gentleman, I hope, is not irrevocably, but I know strongly, allied, dealt a deadly blow to the industries of his State, and this is why the members of his party deserted it in 1912 and joined the Progressive Party. They took it out of the stand-pat column of States and, I predict, will keep it out.

But the gentleman says in his Tacoma speech that the price on articles on which the duty was reduced advanced, and those on which the duty was increased were immediately reduced in price. Has not the gentleman advocated—and every disciple of high protection—an increase of the tariff in order to increase the price of the article? If it does not do it, then why levy any tariff duties for protection's sake? If it does not protect, then it serves no purpose, so far as protection is concerned. If it does not raise the price, then the whole doctrine of protection is completely demolished.

The gentleman is an ardent advocate of high prices and yet he shows in his remarkable speech that the lower the tariff on an article the higher the price of the article, and the higher the tariff the lower the price. Strange logic for a standpatter. Oh, it is well known that open confession is good for the soul. And the gentleman concluded he would confess all. In the gentleman's speech he defends Ballinger and Ballingerism, who a short time thereafter was compelled under fire to resign his seat in President Taft's Cabinet and retire to private life. In it he also defends Cannon and Cannonism, which contributed largely to the overthrow of the Republican Party in the Nation, and the downfall of standpatism in this country. The gentleman from Washington should not take the success of Democratic policies so seriously, he must possess his patience and permit himself to be reconciled to them. Under them the country is now entering upon a most marvelous era of prosperity. The business of the country is adapting itself to them, because business men well know they are adopted to promote and not retard prosperity; that they furnish opportunity and do not close the door against it. I observe that the gentleman from Washington stated in a speech the other day "that there were now 242,000 idle freight cars in this country, the largest number ever known in the history of the country."

Mistaken again. The assured success of Democratic policies and a Democratic administration is so absorbing the attention of the gentleman from Washington that he either overlooked the fact, or had forgotten it, that the statistics of this country show that in January, 1909, under a Republican administration, when the Dingley law was in force, the highest protective tariff law we ever had up to the passage of the Payne-Aldrich tariff, there were more than 426,000 idle freight cars standing on the tracks of the various railroads of the country, with their wheels rusting to the rails. I commend this fact to him and to the country for consideration.

It seems the gentleman from Washington, like his unsolicited correspondent, gets the dates as well as the facts of undisputed history wrong. Oh, no; let me say to them both never can anything be as bad under a Democratic administration as it has been under the administration of standpatism in this country. Never; and no one can point to a single instance which will contradict this assertion.

The administration of Woodrow Wilson will go down in history as the greatest constructive administration in the annals of the Republic. It is one of glorious achievements, adopting constructive legislation redounding to the welfare of all the people, equalizing opportunities, and enlarging the fields of human endeavor for the benefit of the struggling masses and affording no advantage to one which is not the common heritage of all. Day by day the people of this country realize and appreciate the splendid work in their behalf being done and how faithfully the Democratic Party is redeeming its promises made and is carrying into effect the wishes of the people who by their votes made their cause triumphant at the polls.

The speech is found in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer of August 3, 1910, and is as follows:

HUMPHREY SHOWS HOW PROMISES WERE FULFILLED—REPRESENTATIVE TELLS OF PROUD RECORD OF REPUBLICANS IN CONGRESS—TAFT SHINES BY DEEDS—WONDERFUL LIST OF GOOD LAWS PASSED, ALL FOLLOWING LINE OF LEGISLATION IN INTEREST OF MASSES OF AMERICAN PEOPLE.

TACOMA, August 3.

Representative HUMPHREY, in his address before the Republican convention, said:

"Standing here to-day facing this splendid body of men, representative of all that is highest and best in American citizenship, I declare to you without hesitation, without apology, without stammering or stuttering that I am a Republican, and I am proud of the fact. I am a Republican that it takes no adjective to describe. There is but one kind of honesty and there is but one kind of Republicanism. Republicanism is not one thing in the White House and another in the State of Washington. A man that is against President Taft is not for the Republican Party.

BELIEVES IN PARTY.

"I believe in the policies of the Republican Party. I believe in protection. I believe in the present tariff law. I believe it is the wisest and best and fairest that was ever written upon the statute books of the world. I voted for it. I am glad that I did. I believed then that I was right—I know it now. I believe in the Republican Party. I believe in the leaders of that party. I believe that the achievements of the Republican Party in the last year are as splendid as any in all its glorious history.

"I believe in the sincerity and the honesty and the earnest endeavor of Gov. M. E. Hay. His administration is one to command respect, confidence, and admiration.

BELIEVES IN BALLINGER.

"I believe in the integrity and the ability and the grim courage of Secretary Richard A. Ballinger. I believe he is right. I believe he is doing his duty. I believe he is fighting the battle of the great West. He is an honor to his State and to his country. The polluted lips of slander can not tarnish his reputation. All the hired assassins of character can not destroy him."

BELIEVES IN CANNON.

"I believe in the obstinate integrity of that grand old man who for 36 years has held 'as with hoops of steel' the confidence and esteem of his constituents and his colleagues; who for more than a generation has stood between wild extravagances and the National Treasury; who has saved this Nation more money than any other man that ever lived beneath our flag; who knows more about the wants and needs of this Nation than any other man in the Republic; who for years has borne his own sins and the sins of every infernal coward in Congress; under whose leadership during the last eight years Congress has passed more important legislation than was passed in all the 30 years prior to that time; that grim old fighter that never asks quarter nor ever gives it—the 'Iron Duke' of American politics—Speaker Joseph G. Cannon.

BELIEVES IN ROOSEVELT.

"I believe in that most versatile and popular man that the world has ever known—Theodore Roosevelt. I believe in his policies; they are the policies of the country; they are the policies of the people; they are the policies of the Republican Party. They are the policies which the Republican Party has followed for the last eight years. They are the policies that the Republican Party is following to-day. They are the policies from which the Republican Party will never depart.

"In the White House to-day is a man as patient and truth-loving as Lincoln, as gentle and kindly as McKinley, as resourceful and courageous as Theodore Roosevelt. I believe in William H. Taft. He is one of the greatest men that ever occupied the Presidential chair. He accomplished more in the first 17 months of his administration than any other President ever accomplished in that period of time. William H. Taft is to-day the foremost statesman of the world.

THE NEW TARIFF LAW.

"It costs a thousand million dollars per year to run this Nation—the greatest and costliest in the history of men. How is this vast sum to be raised? Mostly by tariff duties. The Dingley bill failed to give the amount required. To revise the tariff so as to raise this sum with justice and equality, and at the same time protect American labor and American industries, was the problem that faced President Taft and the Republican Party on the 4th day of March, 1909, one of the greatest problems in practical statesmanship that any party or any nation was ever called upon to solve.

"But the Republican Party met this responsibility with courage, without apology, with consummate wisdom, and, in spite of the attacks of its enemies out of the party and in the party, successfully solved it, demonstrating anew its greatness and its right to the confidence of the American people.

REPUBLICAN PROMISES.

But it is said that the new tariff law was not a revision downward. Who promised that it would be? Not the Republican Party. There is not a word or a phrase or a sentence in the platform that can be so read or distorted so as to mean any such promise. Only the enemies, not the friends, of the Republican Party claim that we promised a downward revision. An upward revision of some schedules might be as necessary and as wise as any downward revision could possibly be, and this was, in fact, found to be true.

The Republican Party promised honest revision, nothing more. It did not promise perfection. This quality abides only with the free trader, the Democrat, and the reformer that votes with them.

But the revision was downward. Only the enemies and not the friends of the Republican Party deny this. A few schedules were increased, many were reduced, and a larger number remained unchanged. Most of the increases were on luxuries. All of the decreases were on necessities.

TARIFF WAS REDUCED.

The tariff was increased on 220 articles. It was decreased on 874 articles. It was left unchanged on 1,150 articles. Certainly this shows a downward revision. So far the rate of duty paid under the new tariff shows a reduction of over 12½ per cent, and at the same time it further shows more than 12 per cent addition to the free list. Certainly this demonstrates downward revision. But the fairest and most conclusive way to show whether there was really downward or upward revision is to take the consumption value of all the goods upon which the tariff was increased or decreased. Here are the official figures, which no man can successfully dispute. The tariff was reduced on goods of the consumption value of $5,000,000,000. It was increased on goods of the consumption value of $878,000,000. Is not that downward revision? Remember, that of this $878,000,000 on which there was an increase, $628,000,000 of that sum was on articles of luxury, leaving only $240,000,000 of necessities on which there was an increase, as against $5,000,000,000 on which there was a decrease. Or, on articles of necessity the decrease was twenty times greater than the increase. There are many ways of figuring whether there was an upward or a downward revision of the tariff, but there is no honest way that does not show a downward revision.

THE TARIFF AND WASHINGTON.

What of the operation of the present tariff law in the State of Washington? Take the three great products of this State—lumber, shingles, and coal. We reduced the tariff on lumber, and lumber immediately went up in price. The Government lost the revenue. The British Columbia timber owner and lumberman has the prices of his products increased. But not a single American consumer has bought a foot of lumber for a fraction of a penny less than he would have paid for it had the tariff remained unchanged. Who was benefited by this reduction?

TARIFF ON COAL.

We reduced the tariff on coal, and immediately the price of coal increased. The difference between the old and the new rate went to the mine owner of British Columbia and the railroads that carry the coal. The Government lost the revenue, and not a single American consumer has bought a single bushel of coal for a cent less than he would have paid for it had the tariff remained unchanged. Who benefited by this reduction?

SHINGLES REDUCED.

"We increased the tariff on shingles from 30 to 50 cents per thousand. Immediately the price of shingles was reduced. Every American consumer that buys a bale of shingles has been benefited by this reduction. Not only has the price of shingles gone down, but since the time the new tariff law went into effect $3,500,000 in wages has been paid to the American shingle weaver, to American citizens, that under the old law would have been paid to the Chinaman, the Hindu, and the Japanese working in the shingle mills of British Columbia. This was the result of one increase.

A PROUD RECORD.

"As a member of the Republican Party I stand before you to-day, proud of the record that that party has made since the inauguration of President Taft on the 4th day of March, 1909. Let me briefly tell you some of the most important legislation passed. Fifty-four million dollars appropriated for the improvement of rivers and harbors. As I was a member of that committee, as it was my first term, and as I succeeded a man that leaves as little for those who follow as does Senator JONES, I feel proud of the fact that this bill authorizes the expenditure of $12,000,000 in the State of Washington, and that not a single project in this State having a favorable recommendation but what received an appropriation. Two battleships provided for, greater and more powerful than any that have ever been constructed. A Bureau of Mines created. Twenty million dollars appropriated to complete the great irrigation projects of the West. A bill to regulate motor boats and prevent collision at sea. A bill requiring all vessels to be equipped with wireless apparatus. Extending the safety-appliance law, giving increased protection to millions of men. Suppression of the white-slave traffic. Requiring the publication of campaign contributors. More than 60,000,000 acres of the public domain opened up for settlement. The President given unlimited power to withdraw lands for conservation purposes. A Postal Savings Bank System, encouraging thrift and giving a place of absolute safety where the poor can deposit their earnings. The new railroad-rate law, amending the interstate-commerce acts on the statute books, and creating a Commerce Court, a law alike beneficial to the people and the common carrier, one of the most intricate and important laws that Congress has ever passed. Two new stars placed in Old Glory—Arizona and New Mexico. A tariff law written upon our statute books that has put to work 3,000,000 idle men; that has set in motion all the wheels of industry in this great Republic; that is producing sufficient money to run the mightiest Nation in all the world's history; a law the wisest and best that human mind has ever written. A feat of statesmanship unequaled in the annals of the race. All this, besides the great appropriation bill disbursing millions. All this has been done, and yet, when the sun goes down to-day, the Taft administration will be just 17 months old. I challenge the world to match that record. In all the brilliant history of the Republican Party, the most brilliant in all the political history of the world, there is not a more brilliant page than the Taft administration has already written. Against that record the criticism of our enemies within and without the party fall harmless. Never before was there greater cause for a Republican to feel proud of his party than there is to-day.

"Let us swear anew our allegiance to the grand old party. Let us renew our faith in its principles and its policies. Let us here to-day unfurl the banner of Republicanism—the banner of Lincoln and Grant and Blaine and McKinley and Roosevelt and Taft, and go forth to meet the enemy. If it be to defeat; then let us meet it bravely with closed ranks and with our faces to the foe. Better, a thousand times better, to nail the old flag to the mast and go down with colors flying than to compromise with principle. Better, a thousand times better, temporary defeat than permanent dishonor. But we are not going forth to defeat, but to glorious victory. The triumph of the Republican Party in the State of Washington is as certain as the rising of the sun on election day."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the amendment under consideration relates to the paragraph in the bill concerning the force for the new post-office building over here by the Union Station. The House provision calls for 4 assistant engineers; the Senate provision is for 3 assistant engineers. The House provision was for 4 assistant electricians and the Senate provision is for 3. The House provision was for 10 elevator conductors and the Senate provision is for 8. The House provision was for 4 oilers and the Senate provision is for 2. The House provision was for 22 watchmen and the Senate provision is for 12. The House provision was for 2 lieutenants of the watch and the Senate provision is for 1, and various other provisions where the reduction is made by the Senate. The total of the paragraph in the House bill was $48,540 and in the Senate bill $33,840, a reduction of about $15,000. In the House Office Building, which requires a great deal more help in the way of watchmen and policemen than the post-office building can possibly require, we have the force cut down so that it is not much more than the number of watchmen carried by the Senate provision and is less than the number of watchmen proposed to be carried by the House provision. I do not know how anybody can defend the number of employees to be in this new post-office building. I suppose the department asked for them and the committee, without giving full investigation to the matter, perhaps allowed them. Thirty-three thousand dollars for taking care of the building itself is a very large amount. It is more than is really necessary; but to give them $48,000, or $15,000 more, is outrageous. I have moved that the House accept the Senate amendments, which reduces the number of watchmen from 22 to 12; which reduces the number of assistant electricians from 4 to 3; and makes various other reductions; and when we allow those we will have allowed ample number to take care of this new post-office building. If we are ever going to have economy in the Government, we can afford to be economic in providing the number of watchmen for the new post-office building and for the other employees. Think of it! Even the Senate—and they are not particularly inclined to economy—could not bring their stomach to take the extravagant allowance which the House has put in the bill; and if we will never be any more economical than is proposed by the distinguished body at the other end of the Capitol, we will never overdo the economy business.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this amendment provides for the force to take care of the new city post-office building near the Union Station. The estimate which was submitted to Congress and which was incorporated in the bill as it passed the House was very carefully considered by the Postmaster General, and he very earnestly insisted that he needed the employees set forth in that estimate for the purpose of properly taking care of the building. Gentlemen know that the Postmaster General had a most distinguished and honorable service in this House, and those who served with him know that he was never in favor of excessive appropriations for watchmen or any other class of employees of the Government, and I am sure they will agree with me that he would never have indorsed this estimate or made these recommendations had he not considered that this force was absolutely necessary for the proper care of that building. Gentlemen must not lose sight of the fact that the city post-office building must be run 7 days in the week and 24 hours in the day. It is not on a par with the District Building and other Government buildings in the city, but it is necessary to have watchmen and charwomen and electricians and engineers there on Sunday, as well as every other day in the week. It is necessary to have them there at night as well as in the day, and that necessarily requires a greater force of watchmen and other employees to take care of the building.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. The perplexing thing about this item is this: Time out of mind the Senate has increased our items, but here is a case where the Senate has cut our item deeply, and I want to know how that happened.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to say to the gentleman from Kansas that the Senate never took one line, not one syllable of testimony upon this proposition. Not a single witness or person, if I remember correctly, appeared before the Senate Appropriations Committee for the purpose of testifying upon this proposition or giving to the Senate committee any information in regard to it, nor do I know of any Senator who ever asked for information about it; and, with all due respect to the Senate, without a line of testimony or information before them, they adopted the amendment, which undertakes arbitrarily to cut down the estimate of the Postmaster General.

Mr. MURDOCK. It is a most astonishing thing, and I do not still quite understand the explanation of the gentleman. The gentleman does not know, as a matter of fact, why the Senate did this?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know, and there is nothing in the hearings to show why the Senate so acted.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. How does it come—possibly I display my ignorance in putting the question—that the Postmaster General or the Post Office Department has charge of the force of this post-office building, whereas other post-office buildings and Government buildings of that character are under the Treasury Department?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state that the Post Office Department has always had charge of the Washington post-office building. The building provides not only for space for the Washington City post office but for many activities for the Post Office Department itself.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is the new building?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This building is not to be used entirely for the city post office; a considerable portion of it is to be used by the Post Office Department in the conduct of its activities or business. Now, the gentleman from Illinois has criticized the estimate of the Postmaster General and the number of watchmen which were asked for. The House allowed 22 watchmen, which the Senate cut down, without any evidence whatever, to 12. Now, let us see what the Post Office Department has to say as to the necessity of those watchmen. I read from a memorandum which was submitted to the House committee:

As it will take 1 watchman 6 days to relieve every 4 men so as to give them a day off each week, it is figured that, in addition to needing 18 watchmen, there will have to be 4 men to act as reliefs.

And you will remember that building has to be open seven days in the week, and therefore it is necessary, of course, to give each man one day in the week to make up for the loss of the Sabbath.

This is not considering leaves of absence, either sick or annual. It is considered absolutely necessary, on account of the valuable supplies in the building which will be scattered from the subbasement to the third floor, consisting of stamped paper, postal cards, money-order forms, and blanks, in addition to all the general supplies used in the Postal Service, to have a watchman in the subbasement, which extends under the entire area of the building, the basement, two on the main floor, and two on the upper floors. It must not be lost sight of that this building will be open to the public 24 hours each day; that on account of the city post office people on entering the building can not be interviewed; also the mailing platform in the rear of the building will be open to the public more or less during the entire night. It was first proposed to ask for four lieutenants of the watch, but this number was subsequently reduced by the department to two, with the idea in view that the captain of the watch, who has supervision over the watchmen in the Post Office Department Building as well as the City Post Office Building, could handle the force during the day and thus avoid the necessity for more than two lieutenants of the watch.

The gentleman from Illinois referred to the engineers——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Regarding these, the department says:

An assistant engineer will be in charge of each watch. They will be stationed in the subbasement where the switchboard and major portion of the machinery is located. They will attend to the heating and ventilation of the building and exercise immediate supervision in the working and daily examination of the elevators and other machinery.

Now, in regard to assistant electricians they say:

They have supervision over all electrical machinery such as motors, of which there will be over 200; the electrical controlling apparatus on elevators; the lighting of the building; will relieve the engineer in connection with the switchboard when he is called to any part of the building. It is proposed to locate an engineer and an electrician in the subbasement, and thus one will be able to relieve the other and avoid the necessity of an additional man to act as switchboard attendant at all times as is the custom at other large electrical plants.

Now, gentlemen of the House, the Senate has undertaken to cut down the elevator conductors for that building from 10 to 8. If the Senate amendment is agreed to, you will find that it will be absolutely impossible for those in charge of that building to run the necessary number of elevators in order to accommodate the general public throughout the hours I have mentioned. In this connection I read further from the memorandum referred to:

There are 9 elevators and the department is requesting only 10 conductors. It is obvious that this service could not be handled with 8 elevator conductors, as provided by the Senate. Request, however, is not made for more than 10 conductors in the belief that the department will be able to make some arrangements, yet to be worked out, to avoid the necessity of running all the elevators during the entire day.

It is contemplated giving the elevator man a day off each week, and as a majority of the elevators will be working but six days a week such a large relief force as is requested in the case of the other subclerical men will not be necessary, although it may prove necessary to operate at least one elevator on Sundays, and it must also be borne in mind that the hours of service on the various elevators must be of greater duration than the regular official hours of employees.

Now, in conclusion I want to say, or rather to repeat, what I said at the outset, that the Postmaster General, after a careful consideration of the estimates submitted to the House, is firmly of the opinion and most earnestly insists that it will be impossible to keep that building as it should be kept with the force allowed by the Senate amendment, and he most earnestly asks that a greater force be allowed than was allowed him by the Senate. If we refuse to send this to conference and accept the Senate amendment, then you do so in the face of the positive insistence of the Postmaster General and the chief clerk of the Post Office Department that the force allowed will not be sufficient to maintain this building as it should be maintained for the accommodation of the public and the public business.

Mr. GOOD. Where did the gentleman find the statement of the Postmaster General in the hearings?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was reading from a memorandum which was read in the presence of the gentleman the other day when the conferees were in session.

Mr. GOOD. I thought the gentleman stated that the Postmaster General appeared before the committee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; I was reading from a memorandum which was submitted for the use of the committee.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman ought to include it in his remarks.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will do so. I hope that the House will agree that this amendment shall go back to conference. If the number allowed by the House is to be changed, why then the House conferees and the Senate conferees can get together upon some reasonable basis and bring in a proposition which will not cripple the Post Office Department in the maintenance of that building.

But certainly we do not want to put ourselves in the attitude of accepting an amendment by the other body which, as I say, was adopted without any information being furnished to them by the department so far as I am informed.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman stated that there would be nine elevators. Have you any statement as to how many of those elevators will be run on an average daily? The gentleman stated that part of them would not be run.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know, but I will say that it is the purpose of the department, as I understand it, to work out some plan by which they can reduce the number of elevators to be run during the day.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Of course if you ran all of these elevators you would need at least nine conductors.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They would need more than that.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. You would have to have a relief man.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They would have to have a relief man; yes. I ask that the memorandum from which I have read and which gives the reasons why the force allowed by the House is necessary be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The electrical equipment in the new city post office comprises the following machinery:

Two 35-horsepower electrically driven fans for indirect ventilation; 2 motor-driven vacuum cleaners; 3 motor-driven air compressors and 2 pumps for the drinking-water system; hydraulic elevator plant, consisting of 2 electrically driven pumps; 1 motor-driven fire pump; 2 motor-driven air compressors for cleaning purposes, blowing out motors, etc.; 4 fan systems, each consisting of 2 motors and 1 fan, air washer, and 2 sets of heating coils; 2 steam vacuum pumps; 1 garbage-destroying plant; 1 bilge pumping system, consisting of 2 pumps and 2 electric motors; 200 (approximate) motors.

This machinery is located in the sub-basement, basement, first floor, and the third floor of the building. There are also 3 hydraulic elevators, 6 electric elevators, 2 motor-driven fans on the third floor, and a mail-conveying system on the main floor consisting of 25 electrically driven machines. It will be seen that this machinery is widely scattered and will require an operating force of active and energetic men to care properly for the plant, and the subclerical force asked for is based on the department being able to select such a force.

This plant, on account of the city post office working at night, with the exception of the elevators, unlike other Government buildings will be in operation 24 hours a day 7 days in the week. Some of the elevators will also be in operation during the entire day. It will require five days a week for the relief watch to give each employee his day off a week. This does not contemplate any annual or sick leave. Each watch is to have a tour of duty of eight hours, making three watches or similar forces. Four men, however, have been requested with the same qualifications in order to provide for a relief watch.

Assistant engineers: Provided by the House, 4; by the Senate, 3. An assistant engineer will be in charge of each watch. They will be stationed in the sub-basement, where the switchboard and major portion of the machinery is located. They will attend to the heating and ventilation of the building and exercise immediate supervision in the working and daily examination of the elevators and other machinery.

Assistant electricians: Provided by the House, 4; by the Senate, 3. They have supervision over all electrical machinery, such as motors, of which there will be over 200; the electrical controlling apparatus on elevators; the lighting of the building; will relieve the engineer in connection with the switchboard when he is called to any part of the building. It is proposed to locate an engineer and an electrician in the sub-basement, and thus one will be able to relieve the other and avoid the necessity of an additional man to act as switchboard attendant at all times, as is the custom at other large electrical plants.

Elevator conductors: Provided by the House, 10; by the Senate, 8. There are 9 elevators, and the department is requesting only 10 conductors. It is obvious that this service could not be handled with 8 elevator conductors, as provided by the Senate. Request, however, is not made for more than 10 conductors in the belief that the department may be able to make some arrangement yet to be worked out to avoid the necessity of running all the elevators during the entire day. It is contemplated giving the elevator men a day off each week, and as the majority of the elevators will be working but six days a week such a large relief force as is requested in the case of the other subclerical men will not be necessary, although it may prove necessary to operate at least one elevator on Sundays; and it also must be borne in mind that the hours of service on the various elevators must be of greater duration than the regular official hours of employees.

Oilers: Provided by the House, 4; by the Senate, 2. The oilers requested are to do the work of assistant engineers and electricians in the examination of all machinery, keeping it in repair, and seeing that it is daily wiped off and oiled. They will also be required to keep the space clean in which the machinery is located. In the case of the night watches the majority of the time of the oilers will be required on elevators alone, and in the daytime they will be subject to emergency calls to assist in the repair of various motors, etc.

Watchmen: Provided by the House, 22; by the Senate, 12. Lieutenants of watch: Provided by the House, 2; by the Senate, 1. As it will take 1 watchman 6 days to relieve every 4 men so as to give them a day off each week, it is figured that, in addition to needing 18 watchmen, there will have to be 4 men to act as reliefs. This is not considering leaves of absence, either sick or annual. It is considered absolutely necessary, on account of the valuable supplies in the building, which will be scattered from the subbasement to the third floor, consisting of stamped paper, postal cards, money-order forms, and blanks, in addition to all the general supplies used in the Postal Service, to have a watchman in the subbasement, which extends under the entire area of the building, the basement, 2 on the main floor, and 2 on the upper floors. It must not be lost sight of that this building will be open to the public 24 hours each day; that on account of the city post office, people on entering the building can not be interviewed; also, the mailing platform in the rear of the building will be open to the public more or less during the entire night. It was first proposed to ask for 4 lieutenants of the watch, but this number was subsequently reduced by the department to 2, with the idea in view that the captain of the watch, who has supervision over the watchmen in the Post Office Department building, as well as the city post-office building, could handle the force during the day and thus avoid the necessity for more than 2 lieutenants of the watch.

Laborers: Provided by the House, 15; by the Senate, 12. Laborers will be required to clean the corridors, the basement, and subbasement, with the exception of that portion in the vicinity of the machinery; assist in the handling of all the general supplies for the building, and in any movement of furniture, etc. In this building there is an unusual amount of finishings which it will be necessary to keep polished; keep clean the large number of windows, which in this building are not only on the outside, but face both sides of the corridors.

Charwomen: Provided by the House, 15; by the Senate, 12. They will be used for the purpose of cleaning daily all rooms, except the city post office, in the building. It is figured that with a force of 15 charwomen there will be approximately 4,050 square feet for each woman, not counting leave, either annual or sick. In the Post Office Department at the present time the average is about 3,000 square feet to the woman. The average area to be cleaned by each woman in the new building is exceptionally large, and even the force asked for may prove inadequate. It is the intention, however, to endeavor to use floor-scrubbing machines in the building, and in this way the department may be able to keep the building clean with such a small force. It is understood that in the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department the average area for each woman is less than 2,500 square feet, so it will be readily seen that the number of charwomen requested is very conservative.

If this force is reduced as contemplated by the Senate, in some instances, especially in that of oilers, it may be necessary to work 12 hours a day, which is contrary to the existing law.

While nothing is said with reference to the assistant plumber and the two female laborers, in view of the fact that the Senate amendment provides for these places, they are, however, urgently needed, and no action looking toward their elimination from the bill should be taken.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like two minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. I have been looking over the House hearings on this provision. The Senate took action on the bill, and I can readily understand why the Senate did not have any additional hearings. I do not know just what actuated the subcommittee or the committee in reporting out this large estimate, but when I read in the hearings the only statement that was made with regard to watchmen, "I can cut the watchmen safely down to 18," I do not know why we reported out 24. I think it was an oversight. I think the cut as made by the Senate was justifiable. They cut the number of assistant engineers from 4 to 3. The cut was slight all the way through, and when it came to the charwomen we provided for 15 charwomen and the Senate provided for 12.

Now, with regard to the elevator conductors, I submit that we have quite likely allowed more than will be necessary to do the business in the Post Office Department. I do not care how many elevators we have in the building; we may have too many, just as we have in the House Office Building. We may adopt the same policy that we adopted in the House Office Building, and not run them all. Let us make here a conservative appropriation. Let us not appropriate for men to run elevators that will never need to be run. We will run only enough elevators there to do the business of the department. I believe that we ought to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois and recede, and concur in the Senate amendment. I believe that the amount that is specified there is sufficient to run that office and to run it efficiently.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, there are some things we can know without getting expert information, and one is the number of oilers it takes to supply the machinery controlled and operated by a certain number of engineers. This bill as it passed the House provided for four assistant engineers and four oilers. We all know that machinery of to-day is constructed along lines that will reduce the number of oilers which have heretofore been necessary. Large cups are used and other devices are provided that make it unnecessary to oil the machinery often. To-day no piece of machinery is constructed without taking the precaution of providing it with self-oilers. The provision of the House bill has as many oilers as engineers. It is quite apparent that this is not necessary. We usually double up on engineers and slack down on oilers. The same thing is true when we come to electricians. We have as many electricians as we have engineers. It does not seem to be necessary. Electrical machinery, when you start it going, runs without very much care and attention. If the Senate amendment is adopted, it will mean a saving of about $15,000 per annum in the expense of running the new post office, and, to my mind, this can be done without crippling the service.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, just a word. The Postmaster General not only had service in this House but he had service on this particular committee; and I have never known a member of the Committee on Appropriations who contested more vigorously than the Postmaster General used to do the appropriations for help about the public buildings. Notwithstanding his long experience in providing appropriations for the public buildings in Washington and his constant insistence upon reducing the force, we are assured that he has cut this estimate to the bone. I think this amendment at least ought to go to conference, because the House Committee on Appropriations had evidence before it and the other committee had no evidence whatever. There must be between the two extremes in this case a happy mean, as there always is. I think, therefore, the proper thing to do is to vote down the motion of the gentleman from Illinois and send the amendment to conference.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to recede and concur.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 42.

So the motion to recede and concur was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the next amendment be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 212: Page 137 of the bill, after line 13, insert the following:

"Commercial attachés, Department of Commerce: For commercial attachés, to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, after examination to be held under his direction to determine their competency, and to be accredited through the State Department, whose duties shall be to investigate and report upon such conditions in the manufacturing industries and trade of foreign countries as may be of interest to the United States; and for one clerk to each of said commercial attachés to be paid a salary not to exceed $1,500 each; and for necessary traveling and subsistence expenses, rent, purchase of reports, travel to and from the United States, and all other necessary expenses not included in the foregoing; such commercial attachés shall serve directly under the Secretary of Commerce and shall report directly to him, $100,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 212 and concur in the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to recede from the House disagreement to Senate amendment No. 212 and concur in the same.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me to make a motion to amend the Senate amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. In what respect?

Mr. MANN. To strike out the provision as to how the commercial attachés shall be appointed, and to submit it to the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will withdraw my motion and let the gentleman offer his, if he desires to do that.

The SPEAKER. What is the motion of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MANN. I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, striking out all of the Senate amendment following the language after the word "attachés," as follows:

To be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, after examination to be held under his direction to determine their competency, and—

So that it will read:

Commercial attachés, Department of Commerce: For commercial attachés, to be accredited through the State Department—

And so forth.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Would not the failure of my motion still leave that before the House?

Mr. MANN. That would not give us a chance to get our question before the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Very well. I am willing. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MONDELL. I would like some time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to inquire about this. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] moved to recede and concur——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman withdrew his motion. Of course, if my motion is defeated, we will not recede at all.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Wait until we fix the time for debate.

Mr. MANN. We will take 15 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We will agree on 30 minutes if we can—15 minutes to a side—15 minutes to be controlled by myself and 15 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], at the end of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has 15 minutes and the gentleman from South Carolina has 15 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from South Carolina yield to a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time is running.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. To whom is it charged?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I support the modified motion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I do it not because I very much expect that the attachés to be appointed will aid very greatly in restoring our foreign commerce, but because of the fact that in the present deplorable condition of our foreign commerce every man who loves his country, every man who desires its prosperity, every man who hopes to stem the tide of growing loss of our foreign trade, must lend his aid to every proposition that holds out the slightest hope or promise of saving what is left of the foreign trade of the country.

One of the promises made and reiterated on other side of the Chamber in connection with the discussion of the Underwood tariff bill was that under it we were to have a "new freedom," under which the American manufacturers and American producers would go forth and capture the markets of the world. We have heard to-day from gentlemen on the other side glowing statements of the alleged prosperity of the country, but I noticed that none of the gentlemen have quoted any actual facts. They talked of alleged conditions in glittering generalities, but they did not quote facts.

I propose to call attention to a few unfortunate facts in regard to the foreign trade of the United States. In the last six months—that is, in the six months from December last to May, inclusive—the foreign trade of the United States was $130,000,000 less than it was for the corresponding six months of the year before. Not only did we suffer this great loss, but this loss in trade was progressive. In December last our loss in foreign trade, compared with the preceding December, was $17,000,000. At that rate it would take something more than a year to wipe out our foreign trade.

But the foreign trade of April last was $37,000,000 less than the foreign trade of the April of the year before, and if that percentage of loss were to continue we would lose every dollar of our foreign trade before the election in November.

That is the situation which confronts the country. That is the condition under which we are all persuaded to support any appropriation proposed from any quarter that holds out any hope whatever of aiding in retaining, not to mention increasing, our foreign trade.

For the benefit of those who may not have realized the alarming condition which confronts us, I shall insert in the RECORD some tables giving our exports and imports from December, 1913, to May, 1914, in comparison with our imports and exports for the months from December, 1912, to and including May, 1913. The first of these tables is as follows:

Imports, December, 1912	154,095,444
Increase of imports	30,030,127
Exports, December, 1912	250,315,807
Exports, December, 1913	233,195,628
Decrease of exports	17,120,179
Imports, January, 1913	163,063,438
Imports, January, 1914	154,742,923
Decrease of imports	9,320,515
Exports, January, 1913	227,032,930
Exports, January, 1914	204,066,603
Decrease of exports	22,966,327
Imports, February, 1913	149,913,918
Imports, February, 1914	148,044,776
Decrease of imports	1,869,142
Exports, February, 1913	193,996,942
Exports, February, 1914	173,920,145
Decrease of exports	20,076,797
Imports, March, 1914	182,744,304

Imports, April, 1913	146,194,461
Increase of imports	27,702,015
Exports, April, 1913	199,813,438
Exports, April, 1914	162,550,870
Decrease of exports	37,262,568
Imports in excess of exports $11,345,606.
Imports, May, 1914	163,637,386
Imports, May, 1913	133,723,713
Increase of imports	29,913,673
Exports, May, 1913	194,607,422
Exports, May, 1914	161,650,253
Decrease of exports	32,957,169
Imports in excess of exports $1,987,133.

From this table the alarming increase of imports, as well as our constantly diminishing foreign trade, is clearly indicated.

For convenience of reference I present the figures of imports and exports separately. They are as follows:

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Wyoming let me ask him a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I would be glad to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is the gentleman advised of the fact that the exports of this fiscal year amount to more than those of any fiscal year in the last decade, except for last year?

Mr. MONDELL. I am not so advised.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, if the gentleman will examine the statistics, he will find that that is the fact.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman is not entirely accurate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have just recently examined the facts, and I think the gentleman will find it so.

Mr. MONDELL. However that may be, I am making my comparison between the conditions under the bill which bears the honored name of my distinguished friend from Alabama and the conditions which existed under the bill which preceded it, and which was abused on that side of the House in unmeasured terms. Under Republican tariffs we had secured a great foreign trade. I am endeavoring to show how, under Democratic tariffs, we are losing it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Alabama includes six months under the Republican administration.

Mr. MONDELL. I have but a few minutes, and I wish to discuss a subject that is of interest to the gentleman from Alabama. I have demonstrated the fact that the loss of our foreign trade has not only been great, but it has been constantly progressive in an almost geometrical ratio; and if it continues at the present rate, we shall not have any foreign trade worth mentioning by the time the elections are held in the fall.

I regret I have not time to fully analyze these figures or to comment at length upon their alarming and significant features; but they speak for themselves, showing, as they do, that in the six months which have just passed compared with the corresponding six months of the previous year we have suffered a loss in our foreign trade of over $130,000,000, and this under an administration which promised the winning of the markets of the world.

No less significant, and even more alarming, is the increase of imports of over $105,000,000 in value during six months recently passed as compared with six months of a year before. No wonder mills and factories are idle or running on short time. No wonder multiplied thousands are out of employment. These increased importations are, in the main, in manufactured goods, and their importation has deprived American labor of employment. Naturally, this condition of affairs is causing uneasiness and unrest throughout the country. The President says the trouble is psychological.

Various Democratic officials have claimed that the depression was the result of a conspiracy. Such assertions do not prove anything. We are entitled to know the facts, and we were promised that we should know the facts if things went wrong under the Underwood tariff bill. That assurance was given us by the gentleman from Alabama himself toward the close of the discussion of the Underwood tariff bill, as follows:

> The statement has been made that this tariff will act on labor and affect the wages of laboring men. I give notice now that when the men from whom you bring these messages endeavor to grind labor in the interest of Republican policies there is a bureau of this Government that is going to ascertain the reason why.

The Secretary of Commerce, who presides over the bureau to which the gentleman referred, a few days later in remarks made by him before the National Association of Employing Lithographers said, in answer to their suggestion that under the Underwood tariff there was almost certain to be a reduction of wages—

> If what you have said is to be put into effect by you in substantial degree, it may become the duty of the Department of Commerce to inquire into your business methods.

My attention has just been called to a clipping under an Atlantic City (N. J.) date line, to the effect that 16 sheet-iron and tinplate plants will close down for an indefinite period on July 1. The plant owners told their employees they could not give them increased pay, declaring that a state of depression existed in the business. The men asserted, however, that they were entitled to an increase, and so, in this condition of disagreement, these plants are to be closed down. The dispatch I refer to reads in full as follows:

> SIXTEEN MILLS TO CLOSE—SHEET-IRON AND TINPLATE WORKERS UNABLE TO AGREE WITH EMPLOYERS.
> Sixteen sheet-iron and tinplate plants, employing more than 4,000 men, will close down for an indefinite period on July 1, it was announced here to-day, as a result of the failure of the Amalgamated Iron, Steel and Tin Plate Workers Association and the owners of the plants to agree on wage rates at the conference which closed to-day.
> The plant owners refused increased pay, declaring that a state of depression existed in their business. The men asserted, however, that the mill owners misrepresented the situation and that conditions are by no means as bad as they claimed.

Now, here is work, real work, for the Department of Commerce. Here is an opportunity for our friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to put into execution his—threat, shall I say?—his promise that if there was any threatened reduction of wages, if there was any dissatisfaction about wages under the bill which bears his name, it would be investigated; and if not justified by conditions, those who were responsible would be punished. Aye, more than that. He promised us that if under his bill any industry was injured, that injury would be inquired into and that full justice would be done.

I remember very well that promise of the gentleman from Alabama, for it was made in answer to some questions I asked him. He said:

> When the Department of Commerce report, after a careful, disinterested, and honest investigation, that an injustice has been done either to an industry of this country or to the labor employed in that industry, you may rest assured that this side of the House will rectify any wrong that has been done.

Now, here is a case directly in point. Here is a controversy over wages; here is a statement that mills are to be closed. This situation is not psychological; it is real; and I call on the gentleman from Alabama and the Secretary of Commerce to keep their joint and several promises and investigate this situation, and punish with the lash of publicity, if they have no other means at their command, any wrong which may be done or contemplated; or, on the other hand, failing to find any wrongdoing and discovering, as they probably will, that an injustice has been done by the passage of the Underwood bill, proceed to rectify the wrong, as they promised to do.

I do not, however, insist that the threat or promise of investigation made by the gentleman from Alabama and the Secretary of Commerce shall be made with regard to this particular industry. There is a wide range of industries—in steel, in iron, in pottery, in textiles, in general manufacturing—where wages and employment are threatened, which are closed down or running on short time, and all the administration is doing about it so far as to claim that it is the result of a conspiracy or is psychological. I call on the gentlemen to whom I have referred to make good their promises—investigate, report, and either proceed to punish the wrongdoing or to rectify the wrong which has been done.

The gentleman from Alabama excluded from his promise of reparation the sugar and the wool industries. But, otherwise, he assured us that justice would be done. Now, under the circumstances which exist in the country, why does not he proceed. There is the Baldwin Locomotive Works, for instance, ordinarily employing 18,000 or 19,000 men, now employing less than half that number. Why is not the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] investigating that situation, as he promised? And why is not the chief of the Department of Commerce making the investigations he assured us would be made? There are a lot of folks ready to prove that the Underwood bill has put their business on the blink. Why do not you folks bring on your investigators and give them a chance to do it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. REILLY of Connecticut). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, this Senate amendment which we are now discussing was in the House bill substantially in the form in which it now appears, and it went out of the House bill on a point of order which I made.

Later on I am going to offer an amendment of my own—after this one is disposed of—and I hope my amendment will be agreed to. The objection to this Senate amendment from my viewpoint is that it provides for the appointment of commercial attachés, limited only in number by the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce. They are to be appointed within the appropriation provided. They are to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, but they are, of course, to be accredited through the State Department. They are to make their reports to the Secretary of Commerce. This, in my judgment, gives a magnificent opportunity for duplication of work. If the Secretary of State finds that these attachés are needed abroad, the appointments ought not only to be made by him but they ought to make their reports to him. At the present time the information received by the Secretary of Commerce as to our foreign-trade relations comes through the State Department.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. These attachés are for the purpose of developing our commerce, and our Department of Commerce is charged with those activities. Does not the gentleman think they ought to come through that department?

Mr. RAINEY. No; I do not think so. I think in accordance with the method of selecting foreign representatives to promote our trade relations abroad, the method that has prevailed from the foundation of this Government, they ought to be selected by the Secretary of State, and they ought to report to him. Now, the Secretary of Commerce gets through the State Department, as he ought to get it, the information that he now obtains as to our foreign commerce, and they tell me that the State Department furnishes the Department of Commerce now with more data and information than that department can possibly use for any purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it not a fact that there is a bureau in the Department of Commerce now known as the Bureau of Domestic and Foreign Trade, that reports directly to the Secretary of Commerce?

Mr. RAINEY. I think the gentleman is correct about that, but they get their information so far as foreign trade conditions abroad are concerned through the Secretary of State.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I call the attention of the gentleman to what may be another duplication. In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Thursday there appears a Senate amendment to the trade-commission bill providing for another investigation. Shall I read it?

Mr. RAINEY. I will be very glad if the gentleman will do so in his own time.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I am asking the gentleman if that would not be another duplication?

Mr. RAINEY. I think it would be.

Mr. CULLOP. The office of the Secretary of State gets its information as to foreign trade and commerce through the Consular Service, does it not?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. And that is why it ought still to remain in the office of the Secretary of State.

Mr. RAINEY. Certainly. This is a part of our Consular Service. No matter what you call it, that is what it is. Now, if they are to be accredited by our State Department, but act under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce, we will have a number of attachés abroad collecting information that is also being collected by the State Department and reporting back to the Secretary of Commerce information that is also being reported to the State Department, and so you will have an absolute duplication of work. It is easy enough to prevent this simply by striking out the words "Secretary of Commerce," where they appear, and substitute the words "Secretary of State." Then, if the Secretary of State finds these employees are necessary abroad to supplement the force he already has engaged in gathering this same kind of information, he can use up this $100,000, or such portion of it as he may think proper, and there will be no duplication of work, and there will be no conflict between these two great departments of our Government. The Department of Commerce is a new department which has just started, and if this amendment is adopted in its present form the effect of it will be to permit this new department to usurp the functions of the Department of State in this respect to a very large degree. I see no objection to this clause just as it stands if the Secretary of State is permitted to make these appointments after the examination usually held in the office of the Secretary of State for the making of diplomatic appointments abroad. Then let them report, as they always have, and as officials of this sort should do, to the Secretary of State, and let the Secretary of State furnish the Department of Commerce with the information that that department may need. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that there is no disagreement between the State Department and the Department of Commerce over the naming of these commercial attachés.

I understand that these two great departments of the Government are in thorough accord not only over this proposition but all propositions the purposes of which are to advance the commercial, industrial, and manufacturing activities of this country and enlarge our trade in the foreign markets of the world.

I congratulate the Appropriations Committee on the liberality of their appropriation for the work of enlarging our foreign trade.

The increased appropriation in this bill—in the item for commercial agents—is a highly commendable one. The same is especially true of the item for commercial agents to be sent to South and Central American countries.

The provision, however, under discussion providing and appropriating for commercial attachés will, in my opinion, operate to the greatest possible value to our commercial and manufacturing interests.

This is a most opportune time for us to begin this excellent propaganda. The great business interests of this country have now almost and only in a short time will be completely divested of the artificial garb of protection and special privilege. The atmosphere that has so long surrounded them and made their future so hazy and uncertain will soon disappear and they will then be able to do business free from the uncertainties of artificialness, and with a vision clear and penetrating look for trade to all the markets of the world.

Under such circumstances we should therefore encourage and assist them in making their businesses more secure by extending the helping hand of the Government to further them as a whole what is hard and difficult for them to do independently.

It is our pride to aid the laboring men and farmers of this country. Every piece of reasonable legislation that is desired by them and thought wise by us we are always willing and anxious to assist in passing.

We have passed legislation to aid the farmer in preparing and marketing his crops, in obtaining from his land the highest standard of productivity, and in making rural life more attractive.

It is proper, therefore, that we should do for the industrial, commercial, and manufacturing interests of our people what we have always so ungrudgingly done for the farmers and laboring men of the country.

When we open up new markets for our manufacturers and tradesmen we necessarily thereby bring more prosperity and business activity to our people. Every increase of our foreign trade causes more gold to be brought to use, compels the employment of more laborers, and proportionately enriches our country. It is much desired that the value of our exports should exceed our imports, for then we are sure to receive more than we spend, and the continuance of such a condition will certainly make our Nation richer and greater.

With the ingenuity, energy, and wealth of the men of this country who comprise its commercial and manufacturing interests, together with our natural advantages and resources, there is no reason why we should not dominate in commerce and trade the markets of the world.

The system that your committee provides for in this bill and that has been recommended by the very efficient Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Redfield, is to my mind the beginning of a long and bright era in the industrial and commercial life of our people. No matter how optimistic we may feel about it I hardly think that opinion will fill the measure of good that is to come from it.

It has been contended in the discussion here that the consuls and consuls general in the Department of State are now performing the work that is proposed to be done by these commercial attachés, and that this work will be but a duplication of the work of the consuls and consuls general. The commercial attachés that are provided for in this bill will go much further and fill a much more important rôle than is now filled by the consuls and consuls general.

Under the present law and practice our consuls in foreign countries have many duties to perform, but duties that bring them strictly within the scope of the Department of State. For instance, the consuls ascertain and report to the Treasury Department the correct values of the foreign merchandise imported to this country; they safeguard the public health by watching and reporting the prevalence of disease in foreign countries; they perform duties by issuing bills of health to persons bound to American ports; by regular reports on sanitary conditions in their respective districts; by transmitting reports on crops, plant and insect pests, dry-farming methods, irrigation projects, pure-food legislation, forestry, and other subjects; by inquiring into and reporting upon immigration, labor conditions, rates of wages, unemployment and its causes, old-age pension systems and kindred subjects; by reporting on foreign postal conventions and on parcel post; by performing duties in connection with pensions paid Americans residing abroad and by dealing with applications for pensions and for patents; by reporting on such matters as education, mines and mining, reclamation projects, and conservation of natural resources; by furnishing information regarding rivers and harbors, lighthouses, wireless telegraph systems; by assisting in locating lost relatives and escaped criminals; by settling the estates of American citizens dying abroad; by investigating inheritances and rendering various other notarial and legal services; by supervising the shipping and discharge of American seamen and relieving destitute seamen.

These are but some of the duties imposed on our consuls in foreign countries, and it is safe to say, in the broader sense, that their duties are so large that they are charged with the duty of safeguarding and promoting American interests abroad of every kind.

The consuls general are charged with practically all the ordinary duties of the consul, and, in addition to those duties, with many others, such as supervising the consuls and commercial agencies, seeing that the provisions of laws and regulations are complied with and that the consular correspondence of every kind is in due form.

The duties of the consuls and consuls general bring them properly within the functions of the State Department, and prevent them, because of the magnitude of their work, from giving the subjects that are assigned them that thought and time that they deserve and which they doubtless desire to give; at least, their duties are so cumbersome and so many and so technical that they are prevented by them from giving that time and attention that the circumstances would demand in doing the work of commercial attachés and the promotion of commerce and trade in those countries.

Now, I want to discuss just briefly what it is intended the commercial attachés should do. If I understand the functions that it is proposed they should perform, they are not of a diplomatic nature at all, nor would they be concerned with legalizing documents or similar functions. It will be their duty to study the commerce and industries of the countries to which they are sent and study the amount and character of business done with those countries by other foreign powers, and to so qualify and advise themselves that they can suggest and aid in promoting in every practical way the commerce and trade of the United States in those countries.

It is a strange yet true condition that there is now no officer of the United States Government abroad whose sole duty it is to promote our foreign trade.

Germany, France, England, and other countries appropriate large sums for this purpose. The result of their work is shown in their large export trade.

These commercial attachés will be a coordinating force that will make the work of the consuls not the less valuable but the more valuable.

The qualifications of the men who are now in the Consular Service might or might not fit them for the peculiar work of the commercial attachés, because I am quite sure that the men who are to be appointed to these trade places are to measure up in the mind of the present Secretary of Commerce as peculiarly fitted for that particular kind of work.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that there is no man in the United States who is better qualified to choose men who are qualified for this kind of work than the Secretary of Commerce. I go further and say that no man in the United States understands better the necessity for this service and the benefit that will be derived from this service than the present Secretary of Commerce.

I want to here quote what Secretary Redfield says about the commercial attaché and the importance of building up our trade in foreign countries. I read from his annual report of 1913:

Under the caption "Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce" will be found a plan for the reorganization of that bureau, which has already met with your approval and which forms a portion of the estimates for the coming year. Our foreign commerce has grown by leaps and bounds until during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1913, it reached the great total of $4,279,000,000 in value. Of this great sum $2,466,000,000 were exports and $1,813,000,000 were imports, showing a trade balance on these transactions in our favor of $653,000,000. Quite as important as the aggregate, however, are some of the details that go to make up the totals. Our exports of domestic manufactured goods of all kinds amounted to $1,507,000,000, or 63 per cent of our total domestic exports. Again, it will be noted with special interest that out of this total of sales of manufactures that particular portion which represents the sales of fully finished manufactures was $778,000,000 in value, or 50 per cent of the total exports of manufactures. To state it differently, our exports of crude foodstuffs and of crude materials of other kinds have fallen to a minor place, and the largest element in the greatest aggregate of foreign sales ever made is that of manufactured goods, and among these manufactured goods the item of fully finished manufactures is the largest. It is also that which has been growing most rapidly.

It certainly can not be said that the Government has done much to foster this great and growing trade. The entire appropriation for the promotion of our foreign commerce has been $60,000, much less than is annually spent for advertising by many a large retail establishment, nor has the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, which is supposed to have had this great trade under its fostering care, been equipped either with men or means or organization adequate for the work.

In the estimates for the coming fiscal year, therefore, a sum has been included which will provide for the reorganization of the bureau into such form as will make it the basis for productive effort in developing American industries in every field which is normal to them at home and abroad. It is not suggested that in the plans which have been submitted for the approval of Congress there is aught that is original. They simply follow in general the organization which our commercial and industrial competitors have already in active service. They aim to provide a threefold organization abroad containing those elements of permanence and flexibility essential to efficient work, and furnishing the general and the local inquiry essential to any thorough grasp of foreign markets.

Briefly stated, the proposed organization provides for—

Commercial attachés: These are officers to be located at each of 14 capitals as hereinafter described, accredited to our embassies there by the Department of State, but reporting directly to the Department of Commerce. Each of these officers will be provided with a clerk and allowance will be made for traveling expenses within the limits of the country to which he is sent. Their purpose will be to study the commerce and industries of the nations where they reside. They will have no other duties. They will collaborate with the consuls, having the advantage of the larger view and of the freedom from other cares.

Consular Service: It is recommended that the consuls shall on purely commercial matters report directly to the Department of Commerce and that they shall cooperate with the commercial attachés in presenting between them a complete and unified knowledge of the commerce and industries of our great competitors. These two forces should normally supplement each other—the attaché has the general field, the consul the particular field. The one collects; the other coordinates. Each supplies with the other that which without him we could not have. Each is at once a corrective and an incentive to the other.

Commercial agents: It is intended to enlarge this force, which is composed of special investigators trained in their separate lines of study, each pursuing some special theme and for that purpose traveling from country to country wherever information on that subject can be had. A force of from 12 to 16 men has been employed in this work with excellent results, but obviously that force is quite insufficient, and it is hoped substantially to double it. For this purpose a special appropriation of $100,000 is asked for the study of commercial conditions in South America, and the former sum of $60,000 for the whole world is, in addition to the above, increased to $100,000.

The organization of the bureau is changed as described herein to provide for the proper direction and control of these forces and funds and to permit following out the duty heretofore imposed by Congress on that bureau of inquiring into the cost of production at home and abroad, for which purpose a special sum of $100,000 is also asked.

* * * * * * *

The personnel of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce during the fiscal year 1914 is about 119 employees. Under the plan contemplated in the estimates for 1915 it is estimated that 200 persons will be employed, or an increase of 81.

It is my belief that the above marks a turning point in American policy toward the great world of commerce and industry abroad and that it must be reflected in increased prosperity to our capital and labor at home.

Our foreign trade, to which, in substance, the work of the bureau under the present law is confined, has expanded during the past fiscal year at a rate in excess of $1,000,000 per day.

Imports:
1913	$1,813,008,234
1912	1,653,264,934
Increase imports, 1913 over 1912		$159,743,300
Exports:
1913	2,465,884,149
1912	2,204,322,409
Increase exports, 1913 over 1912		261,561,740
Increase total trade, 1913 over 1912		421,305,040

The relation of this enormous trade to the prosperity of our people is so obvious as to need no comment.

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, which has this work in charge, has not received the financial support to which the dignity and necessity of its work entitles it. * * *

Being familiar, in a general way, with the operations of this bureau before assuming office, I gave the subject of its reorganization careful thought for some weeks after it came under my charge as Secretary of Commerce. I then requested the chief of the bureau to prepare a written statement of what, in his judgment, should be done to develop the work under his care. When this was done and statements from other departmental sources on the same subject were prepared, I requested a committee of experienced officers in my own office to go over these papers and to submit a plan for reorganization based upon the facts thus laid before them and on their own experience. This plan I have myself carefully revised, in consultation with the said committee, and it is presented below.

The proposed organization, consisting of five units, divides the work of the bureau into four classes, namely, (1) promotion work under the immediate supervision of the chief, (2) collection of information, (3) distribution of information, and (4) administration. This plan provides for a chief and two assistant chiefs. One of the assistant chiefs should be placed in charge of investigations to be made under the law which transfers to the bureau certain duties formerly under the present Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, and of a section dealing with tariffs and tariff relations; the other should be in charge of that part of the work which relates to the collection and compilation of statistics, the work performed by commercial attachés, commercial agents, and consuls, in so far as the work of the latter relates to the Department of Commerce.

Commercial attachés: It is believed that Congress should authorize the employment by the department of 14 commercial attachés, to be resident in various foreign countries, these attachés to be each supplied with a clerk whose compensation should be $1,500 per annum. The attachés should be divided into three groups as regards salaries, viz, 3 at $5,000 per annum, 4 at $4,500 per annum, and 7 at $4,000 per annum. The countries to which these attachés should be accredited, and their headquarters, are given in the table on the following page, which also gives the total area of the countries represented, population, and total trade with the United States in 1912.

The attachés should be men of demonstrated commercial ability and experience, speaking the language of the country to which they are accredited or a language current in commercial circles therein. Preference would be given officers of the Consular Service and the Department of Commerce or other branches of the executive service who have unblemished records and who have shown marked ability in commercial promotion.

Suggested organization of a corps of commercial attachés showing territory to be covered by each attaché, salary, headquarters, area, population, and trade with the United States in the fiscal year 1913.

Mr. Speaker, the importance of this service to the commercial interests of this country is very strongly evidenced by the general demand for it all over the country. The work that has already been done by the Bureau of Domestic and Foreign Trade in the Department of Commerce has been of such high value that it is keenly appreciated by the business people of the country, and a more enlarged work is universally demanded.

So great is the sentiment for this service that when the proposition was advanced by Secretary Redfield in organizing this work it was proposed to be voted on by a referendum vote to the various commercial bodies throughout the United States, and it was approved by a vote of 624 to 3, and at a meeting of the National Foreign Trade Convention held in Washington on the 27th of March, this year, the following resolution was passed by that very important convention:

Whereas the export trade of the United States has during the year 1913 reached the total of $2,484,000,000; and
Whereas the entire Government appropriation for the current year for promoting this trade through the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has been only $60,000, a sum which is wholly inadequate in view of the organization and expenditures of other Governments for similar purposes, and of the importance of expanding our export trade for the benefit of American producers, manufacturers, and workmen: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the National Foreign Trade Convention, assembled in Washington, D. C., May 27–28, 1914, representing upward of 100 of the leading commercial associations, boards of trade, and chambers of commerce throughout the United States, whose names are appended hereto, That we heartily commend the Secretary of Commerce of the United States for his wise appreciation of the duty and opportunity confronting the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce; and

That we indorse his plan to reorganize the bureau and to create a staff of commercial attachés accredited to our foreign embassies and legations, but reporting to the Department of Commerce; to increase the usefulness of the Consular Service by keeping a record of the commercial efficiency of the consuls; and to increase the number of commercial agents to investigate special commercial conditions in foreign markets.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I may say that I would like to see our merchant marine occupy that high place among the nations of the world that it once held, and I would like to see the commercial, industrial, and manufacturing interests of this country supplying their goods and carrying on their business with all the nations of the world, and I know of no propaganda that would be more influential in bringing it about, making our industries hum with the music of prosperity, our seaports aglow with our flag at the mastheads of our vessels, than to inaugurate this system and to enlarge upon it year by year.

I sincerely hope that the report of the conference committee with the Senate amendment attached will be agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this amendment or any other movement that looks to the development of our foreign commerce. I think most people are agreed that our country ought to develop a market beyond the seas. It is one of the fields that this Nation has tried to enter—and the magnificent balance of trade of over $600,000,000 under Republican rule shows our ability—and it is one of the things that legislation ought to favor, to increase our export trade. Legislation should look to our ability to produce not only for our home consumption, but to find a market abroad as well. I do not know whether this is the best method. I think it is one good method.

I want specially to call your attention to the remarkable statement of a fact made by the distinguished leader of the majority [Mr. UNDERWOOD] this afternoon in reference to the increase of customs dues. He said while the income tax had fallen below estimates, the revenue from customs had exceeded the estimates by $22,000,000. If the new tariff bill had not increased the customs duties, I should think everybody would have been greatly surprised, whether they had been favorable or unfavorable to the Underwood bill, because the lowering of the duty upon any goods coming into the country, other things being equal, would certainly increase the amount of the goods to be imported sufficiently to make up the loss as a result of the lowering of the duty. A duty may be so high as to be prohibitive. If a duty prevents goods coming in, lowering it will stimulate imports and will likely increase amount of duties. But this is the thing that is serious with me—the piling up of imports of foreign goods as revealed by the gentleman's statement. It is not because I am a Republican, but it is serious with me because of the facts that stare us in the face. I refer to the remarkable increase of imports which has produced this increase of customs dues, and upon a basis of lower duties than before in vogue. This fact, from the standpoint of our own production here at home, is certainly a dangerous thing.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman state how much the percentage of increase has been in comparison to the American consumption of the article?

Mr. FESS. I will say to the distinguished gentleman that I have not gone into that feature of the situation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Would the gentleman consider it a serious menace if the average was less than 1 per cent?

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I will not be withdrawn from my thought here. Lower duties have increased in an amazing degree the imports from foreign countries. It is the principle that is significant rather than the degree or comparison of imports to home production.

A statistician gives the following percentages of increase of imports under the new law:

In December, 1913, 54 per cent; in January, 1914, 58 per cent; in February, 64 per cent; in March, 71 per cent; in April, 129 per cent. The increase for May is expected to show 150 per cent.

You are increasing the importation from foreign countries of the goods we use, and in the degree that you do it you displace the products of the same kind of goods in our own country. The question with me is whether it is a good policy to legislate for the producers of Europe instead of the producers of our own country.

Now, I do not mean to say that the gentleman from Alabama is unfair, but I do not think it is quite fair to state that we can increase the importations and at the same time help the producers in this country. I do not believe that is a true statement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does not the gentleman believe that a reasonable amount of competition is desirable?

Mr. FESS. I believe in a reasonable competition on conditions that are equal, but I do not believe in putting our labor in competition with the cheaper labor of Europe until Europe brings her rate of compensation for labor up to ours. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman knows that we must get revenue of the customhouse, and does the gentleman think that an importation of 1 per cent in comparison with the amount of American consumption is more than a reasonable competition?

Mr. FESS. I will say to the distinguished leader that you can levy a duty upon goods with specific reference to the promulgation of production of these goods here and provide a protection of our own industries and stimulate them and at the same time produce a revenue for the Government. The trouble is the gentleman is looking simply at the revenue collected upon goods which are ultimately to displace our own production, and I do not think that is a wise course for this Nation to pursue.

This is the chief difference between the Republican and Democratic policies. The Republican policy is to place a duty in such a way that while it produces the revenue it also stimulates home production by affording a degree of protection against the cheap labor of the foreign producer. We have no trouble about revenue to run the Government, while the Democratic idea is to place the duty where it will increase imports, with no or little regard of the effect it will have upon the producer at home and the employer of labor at home. No legislation can lose sight of the producer without seriously crippling the ability of the consumer. The one is so articulated to the other that injury of the one is injury of both.

The situation of the country now is due very largely to the wide disturbance of the business ability to maintain the industrial integrity of the country. A law that is partial to the foreign producer, as the great increase of our imports and decrease of our exports show the tariff measure to be, must prove hurtful to not only the producer but to the consumer of our country.

There is no way to evade the situation. It can not be done by brilliant paraphrasing. It can not be explained upon a mere psychological basis. It is no explanation to charge conspiracy of business.

Men whose fortunes are at stake will not from mere petulance go into bankruptcy or allow their business to go into the hands of receivers. I note the reluctance with which Democratic Members will admit the existence of depression. If it is in northern Michigan, their only reply is, "Oh, that is in the iron country." If it is in Youngstown, Ohio, or Pittsburgh, the reply comes that it is in the steel country. When we speak of the hundreds of letters which come from our people declaring that business "is dazed and bewildered" and business men do not know what to do except to plead that we give business a rest, they are charged with intent of conspiracy.

While the President was addressing the editors, assuring them that the future held great prosperity for the country, only awaiting the completion of his program, business men were consulting how to forestall the failure of a great concern.

The same papers that ran the President's address of optimism carried in parallel columns startling facts of business reverses, such as the passing of the Pan Handle dividend, the receivership of the Claflin dry goods concern, the largest of its kind in the world.

True, the propaganda became busy at once to assure the country that the tariff had nothing to do with the failure. Those interested in the Wilson policies, including the head of the firm, attempted to separate the disaster from Democratic administration.

But I want to say again that the Claflin failure may be hooted at from the floor of the House as having no reference whatever to the tariff issue. I know that will be asserted. Mr. Claflin himself has been a free trader; he is a large importer, he is a supporter of the Underwood bill. Nevertheless it matters little what they say. I assert that this is one of the most remarkable barometers of the business conditions in this country of any single instance in the last 10 months. It is but another symptom of what we must expect as a result of the attack upon enterprise. In the last 14 months 10 railroads of this country have passed their dividends. Is that a conspiracy on the part of the railroads to hurt themselves? In the last few months 118 trains have been taken off by one of the great railroads of this country. Does that mean that a railroad is guilty of crippling itself simply for political capital, as asserted by some men? I do not think there is anything in that at all, or that any serious mind would allege it as a fact.

It is estimated that only 25 per cent of the labor employed in the sawmills of the country are employed.

It is claimed that 27 per cent of those employed in the woolen mills are out of work. This is a fair index of the manufacturing situation. While it has not yet so injuriously affected the farmer, it will reach him sooner or later. His home market is already invaded. Foodstuffs are coming from abroad to displace his. His purchaser, the man employed in American enterprise, is rapidly losing his purchasing power. How long will he be able to withstand the competition with the foreign producer in a market rapidly depleting by a policy that is driving the consumer out of work. The tariff might not have had a direct effect upon the Claflin enterprise, but it certainly did affect the thousands of purchasers who could not meet their obligations and whose failure sent the firm into a receivership with assets beyond their liabilities.

My fears are what has happened in this case will happen in many others if there is not relief from this serious attack upon our industries. This can not be a mere state of mind.

The New York Press states the case editorially as follows:

Can the administration of Woodrow Wilson comprehend the difference between live business and dead business, assets and liabilities, solvency and bankruptcy?

Here yesterday was the crash of the Claflin Co., unprecedented in commercial history because of the vast sum involved, together with the almost limitless range of its consequences.

Forty-odd millions of money. Cities directly concerned from one end of the country to the other. Great mercantile houses hit in nearly all centers of population. Tens of thousands of breadwinners endangered. Hundreds of banks suddenly holding dishonored paper which not many months ago was eagerly sought by them as gilt-edged. An industrial, commercial, and financial shock to the whole Nation.

And on the same day President Wilson, ignoring the most extraordinary business collapse ever known in America, was still talking his psychological business depression. With the Nation quaking over the Claflin failure, he was telling some southern editors how he was creating a new constitution of freedom for business. With all the world stunned by this Claflin failure, he had nothing else to say.

Too grave a thing for the United States is this huge Claflin wreck to be made a light jest against the Wilson administration. But whether the Claflin people were better or worse business men, measured against their competitors, can this tremendous fail be called under any really sane theory—as Mr. Wilson persists all such must be called—just a state of mind?

Could the United States Government send to the fallen house thirty or forty millions of relief in a psychological form, instead of hard cash, and lift it from its ruins?

President Wilson must stop talking—and acting, too—what to ordinary business intelligence is almost criminal nonsense, or this whole country, big as it is and strong as it is, will be threatened with a Claflin collapse.

This is strong language; but in a time when we seem to be heading straight to the precipice and our responsible heads seem so infatuated with the infallibility of judgment and position, it requires strong language to induce us to "stop, look, listen." That is what the country demands now.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HAWLEY. I see in the proposed amendment that there is no amount for the compensation of the commercial attachés. Is that provided for in any other place?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; it is not provided for by law. The testimony before the committee was that the compensation of no one person would exceed $5,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is fixed by law?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is the intention of the department out of the lump sum to employ a number of people no one of whom shall receive more than $5,000. Possibly some may receive a good deal less.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does not the gentleman think that Congress ought to determine the amount of the salary to be paid instead of leaving it an indeterminate amount to be fixed by some executive officer?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I would say that ordinarily I believe in the fixing of salaries by Congress; but this is a new departure in our effort to secure foreign trade. We have made a lump-sum appropriation in order that the Secretary of Commerce may employ business men and send them into Central and South America and other countries for that purpose. After they have had one or two years' experience and reached a conclusion as to how many people they want, and about what kind of people would be required, Congress can fix the number to be employed and fix their compensation.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is a good proposition. It was in the bill as we brought it into the House, but it went out on a point of order. The Senate has restored it. Practically every chamber of commerce in the United States has indorsed it, and I intend to move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment. The matter pending before the House is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to take the proposed employees from the examination provided for by the Secretary of Commerce, something like the examination we have for consular officers, and put them under the Civil Service Commission. It is not necessary to say to the membership of the House that the ordinary civil-service examination would not be a proper examination for the selection of business men to go into Central and South America and aid in building up our trade. There will be an examination, but it will be a non-competitive examination, conducted by the Secretary of Commerce, for the purpose of securing men specially fitted for this particular work. I hope the motion of the gentleman from Illinois will be voted down.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to recede and concur with an amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 25, noes 42.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman from South Carolina allow me to make a motion to recede and concur with an amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment striking out, in line 16, page 137, the word "commerce" and substitute the word "State," and in line 3, of page 138, to strike out the word "commerce" and substitute the word "State."

The object in proposing this amendment is, as I attempted to explain a while ago, to prevent a duplication of work. The Department of Commerce is a new department splendidly conducted, it is true; but as the Senate amendment stands it permits the Department of Commerce to usurp a large portion of the functions of the State Department.

The Department of State is asked by this Senate amendment to accredit certain foreign attachés who are to be attached to the establishments of the representatives of the Department of State abroad. It is a force supplementary to the force the Secretary of State already has, to make the same kind of reports that the consular officials are already making. The same information is already being sent by the Secretary of State to the Secretary of Commerce. The change I suggest simply authorizes the Secretary of State to appoint, after the usual examination he conducts now, these additions to our foreign establishments, and the amendment I make will require them to report just as they do now to the Secretary of State, and he can transmit their reports to the Secretary of Commerce after consultation with the Secretary of Commerce as to what he wants.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman understands that the commercial attachés are not going to be confined to any particular area?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; and the activities of our consular officials are not confined to any particular area. Their activities are confined only by the limits of the known world.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But our consuls have some duties which do not attach to these people. They have some duties that are in a sense diplomatic.

Mr. RAINEY. Our consuls are not diplomatic functionaries. They are trade officials abroad.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understand; but they have some duties that pertain to the field of diplomacy in some cases. They are under the State Department.

Mr. RAINEY. They are merely nominal duties they perform in that direction. Their principal duty is to look after our trade relations abroad, and that is what they do, and that is what these attachés are going to do.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Theoretically the gentleman is absolutely correct. The supposed duties of the consular officials are as he states; but I want to direct his recollection to some testimony that came before us when we were working on the administrative features of the tariff bill. If he will recall, the gentleman who examined into the matter stated that we could not rely on the consular officials looking after these invoices and trade imports, because the result of their work was purely to rubber stamp these questions, and that their time was largely taken up in other matters involving looking after the citizens of the country and carrying out the orders of the minister in the country.

Mr. RAINEY. They do discharge those duties, but all the information that we used in compiling our tariff bill, no matter from what source we obtained the information as to conditions abroad, was obtained by our State Department, no matter how it reached us. If it is true that our consular officials are so busy with the routine work of their office that they can not do as much work as they ought to do in order to properly and sufficiently promote our trade relations, then the amendment I propose simply adds to their force—to their opportunities for usefulness. It adds to their clerical force as much as they may need, and absolutely prevents the duplication of work that will occur and rise up to plague us in the future if this particular Senate amendment is adopted without the changes provided in the amendment I have just offered.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's amendment, as I understand it, is to strike out the word "commerce" where it appears and insert the word "State."

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; to put these commercial attachés under the State Department instead of under the Department of Commerce.

Mr. MANN. And to prevent the unnecessary duplication of work?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I thought when this matter was up in the House before the gentleman was opposed to having these attachés accredited through the State Department.

Mr. RAINEY. I made the point of order, and it went out on the point of order, and I am opposed to accrediting them through the State Department if they are to be appointed by and report to the Secretary of Commerce; there is, however, no other recognized way of accrediting foreign representatives than through the State Department. From my viewpoint they should, as is customary, be appointed by the Secretary of State and report to him. The amendments which I offer have the effect of providing that they be accredited through the State Department and appointed by that department, after such examinations as are now held by the State Department, and that they shall report to the State Department, and thus prevent the duplication of work, to the possibilities of which I have called attention.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman considered the question of having these people accredited through the State Department and giving the State Department no control or responsibility over them?

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I have considered that, and that is one of the reasons why I think my amendment ought to be adopted. As my colleague suggests, if this Senate amendment goes through just as it stands, they are to be accredited by the State Department, but have no responsibilities to the department which has accredited them as our agents abroad.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The parliamentary situation is this: Unless the gentleman from South Carolina withdraws his motion, the House can not vote on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I am willing to withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment 212, page 137, in line 16, strike out the word "commerce" and substitute the word "State"; and on page 138, in line 3, strike out the word "commerce" and substitute the word "State."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we also strike out the word "commerce" and substitute the word "State" in line 14.

Mr. RAINEY. Yes, Mr. Speaker; I ask that that be added to my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 14, strike out the word "commerce" and substitute the word "State."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] to recede from House disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the same with the amendment which has just been reported.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAINEY) there were—ayes 34, noes 33.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; it goes to conference.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist upon tellers?

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCOY. As the matter now stands, does this go back to conference?

The SPEAKER. Of course it does.

Mr. MANN. It does if we ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair assumes the House will ask for a conference; if not, we will not have any bill. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 218: Amend, page 147, in line 21, by inserting after the word "quarters" the words "including water-cooling plant."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 219. In line 22, page 147, strike out "$17,500" and insert "$20,059."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 220: Page 148, line 5, strike out the figures "35" and insert the figures "37½."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, this is to increase the rate of rental to be paid for the addition to the Department of Commerce Building from 35 cents per square foot to 37½ cents.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. This is a provision in which the Senate has increased the amount from 35 to 37½ cents.

Mr. MANN. When this provision was reported in the bill in the House it was, of course, subject to a point of order, but a point of order was not made, and it was then recommended that we authorize a lease to be made at 35 cents per square foot. Did the committee at that time have information before it as to the amount of rental which ought to be paid or which it thought was proper to be paid?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Did the committee have any information before it at the time in reference to the proper rental or what they thought we ought to pay?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The committee had information to the effect that the owners of the building wanted 40 cents; but in view of the fact that we were renting about $70,000 worth of space for a period of five years, we thought that 35 cents per foot was a proper compensation, and we placed a limitation upon the amount which should be paid for the additional space. It seems that the Senate agreed with the House committee in part on that proposition, because the Senate put it at 37½ cents instead of 40.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any other building under rental to the Government for which it pays as high a rental as this proposes?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; I believe there are some buildings where the rental is more per square foot than in this building, but those are buildings in which certain other services are rendered such as janitor, elevator service, and so on.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there another instance of a building rented to the Government and devoted exclusively to the use of the Government, distant as this is from the business section of the city, where the rental is so high?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not know of any building in the city where the Government rents so much space where the Government pays such a large sum.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course the gentleman recognizes that this building is distant from the business section of the city. For instance, the Interstate Commerce offices are located in the heart of the city and naturally would be subject to a higher rate of charge. Again, the Geological Survey is down on F Street and I suppose the rental there may be a little higher, which I can understand because it is in the center of the business district, whereas this building is located far from the business district and naturally should not command as high a rental. I would like to ask the gentleman this question——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I would like to answer some one of the questions the gentleman has already asked. I am not familiar with the price of real estate in Washington, I do not know the value of real estate in the section where this building is, but I do know that it is a modern office building just recently constructed and well adapted for the purposes for which it is to be used. Congress authorized in the first instance under the last administration the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to enter into a contract for the erection of a building and when that building was completed to enter into a five years' lease at 40 cents per foot.

Mr. STAFFORD. There was a provision as to the rental in the authorization of last year.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; that was provided by law before the building was ever erected—that when it was erected the Government would take it for five years at 40 cents a foot, and after that building was completed the Secretary of Commerce desired to move the Census Bureau into the same building so as to have his entire force as nearly assembled as possible. Thereupon the owner of the building enlarged the old building and it was that part of the building, the new part of the building, that has the limit of rental to 35 cents per square foot and a lease was authorized for five years at that rate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any contractual obligation on the part of the Government to pay 40 cents a foot for this new additional space?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have seen no such contract.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, the Government is not obligated in any way under this contract and they can continue the present rental of the present census quarters at the rate of 16 cents per square foot in case the owner of the building should attempt, in the judgment of the committee, to "hold up" the Government.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There is no authority to rent additional space at any price until this bill becomes a law.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me three or four minutes?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this provision is to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to enter into a lease for the building to be attached to the present Department of Commerce Building for the use of the Census Office.

As it passed the House it provided for 35 cents a square foot. After the provision had passed the House, it being subject to a point of order at the time it first came before the House, I received information and called it to the attention of the House that the private secretary of the Secretary of Commerce, and I believe the chief clerk of the Secretary of Commerce, and some other of the high officials of the department were interested in business with the person who was to put up the building. The building is now under construction, apparently with very certain assurance that the lease will be entered into, although the authority has not yet been granted by Congress. Having passed the House at 35 cents a square foot, they succeeded in getting the Senate to raise the amount to 37½ cents a square foot. I have no doubt that some of these officials under the Secretary of Commerce, influenced possibly and probably by their business relations with the owner of the building, are very desirous of having this building rented by the Department of Commerce for five years at just as high a rate as they can get Congress to allow. And I think the Secretary of Commerce, in whose honesty I have perfect faith, should investigate the gentlemen in his own office who have gotten him to agree in advance that he would make a lease of this building, they being actuated by their business relations with the proposed owner and constructor of the building.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to ask a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. HAWLEY. The question of the rent paid by the Government to private parties in the District of Columbia for the buildings it occupies is becoming a very important one because of the amount of rent paid in all. It was called to the attention of the Agricultural Committee when we were preparing our bill, as the Agricultural Department rents a considerable space in the District, that buildings in various portions of the city could be rented at certain figures, and it seemed to me there was a great disparity between the prices charged in one place and the prices charged in another place for the same accommodations. Now, with the buildings rented by the Government and scattered all through the city, it seems to me there should be some general plan or agreement as to the prices to be paid by the Government for buildings, and that the appropriation committees might cooperate—by a joint committee, for instance—in determining what would be a fair rate of compensation, and not subject any particular contract to the criticism of being exorbitant in the amount given to the renter of the building. And I would like to know, for the benefit of the record here and for future consideration, if this 35 cents a square foot provides for any service to the Government other than just the bare walls of the building?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No, sir. The Government would furnish its own janitor and elevator service under its contract.

Mr. HAWLEY. Are water and heat furnished under this 35 cents?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They furnish the necessary machinery to produce the heat—the boilers and dynamos and all that sort of thing—but the Government must operate those plants.

Mr. HAWLEY. And the Government would furnish the fuel for them?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Oh, I think so.

Mr. HAWLEY. And will the Government pay for the water; or is the water furnished free with the buildings?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir; the Government would pay for the water used.

Mr. MANN. I do not think we pay for water at all.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I have one more minute?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield one more minute to the gentleman.

Mr. HAWLEY. Continuing along the line of the remarks I was making a moment ago, we have had occasion on the Agricultural Committee for several years to investigate the question of rent; and I was looking over the statements not long since of the total amount paid in the District by the Government for rent, and it was estimated that if it were capitalized at 4 per cent or 5 per cent it would amount to many millions of dollars. But there is a growing feeling among a number of the Members of the House that the rents ought to be in some manner placed on a uniform basis; that as far as practicable there should be a uniform schedule of rent, so that no abuse could arise in this matter of renting buildings for the public service, and so that one man, by a little skillful manipulation, could not get a higher rate of rental for his building, which was no better equipped or no better located for the service, than another man who is not quite so skillful. We ought to rent on a business basis and for a reasonable sum, fair to the renter and fair to the Government, so that no more will be paid in rent than will be absolutely necessary to be paid to house the public service. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin, and then I hope we may have a vote.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this proposition of the transfer of the Census Bureau from its present location to a new office building located near Nineteenth Street in the northwestern section of the city to my mind is not a business proposition. The present quarters, which are very suitably adapted for census purposes, could have been rented for a period of five years at the rate of 16 cents per square foot for the area used, whereas this new building that has been erected is not as well designed, in my opinion, for the purposes of the Census Office as the present quarters.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has explained one of the reasons why the Department of Commerce is so very solicitous about having the Bureau of the Census transferred from its present quarters to this new building. No one who is acquainted with the work of the Census Bureau will deny that the present arrangement, with one or two floors in the present building, is much better situated for this work, which is partly mechanical, than this new building with its low ceilings and many floors.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that by this change of location the Secretary of Commerce was able to cut down his force in the Census Office in the way of reducing the number of charwomen and laborers and people of that kind to the extent of $19,000 a year?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, that is merely a saving on a piece of paper. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has admitted already that the Government is going to undertake all that expense of this building, and the gentleman knows it is nothing more than a sham in disguise.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Has the gentleman read the letters——

Mr. STAFFORD. I have read the letters before this matter came up, and I find that there is a great deal of extra rental occasioned by this removal, and there is really no saving. The argument advanced by the Secretary of Commerce that it would be more economical for him to have his force consolidated in one building is nothing more nor less than a ruse to have the Director of the Census and some of his subordinates move into some nice offices.

Mr BYRNS of Tennessee. The bill on its face carries a reduction of force.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is another fine argument. It carries a reduction on its face. It is well known that the Census Office force is not being used to its full capacity now, because the census is not being taken. There is no saving of office force or help about the building by reason of the change of quarters.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman wishes to be fair, and——

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly I want to be fair. I will ask this question of the gentleman, if there would not be a distinct saving to the Government by remaining in the present quarters instead of removing to new quarters?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The reduction referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] was arranged for before the estimates were sent in, and this reduction of 29 people gives that many less than the estimates called for by reason of the fact that it requires a less number of laborers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Just as much floor space will be used, and the argument is that with the same floor space he can get along with less help. I am laying a foundation here for a demonstration that a two-story building is much more suitable than this many floor building that is being erected in the northwest part of the city, distant from the business center.

This 37½-cent proposition I regard as an extravagant price. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has intimated why the price is so high, and I think the conferees should insist that under no circumstances will more than 35 cents per square foot be paid. It would have been an economy if the Committee on Appropriations had accepted the contract offered by the owners of the present quarters at the very reasonable terms of 16 cents per square foot. There is no other building in the city where the Government is getting so good a contract for that character of a building than that of the present Census Bureau building.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I noticed by the papers this morning or yesterday morning that a new hotel and office building is to be erected on the old Arlington site, in connection with which there is to be a theater on the H Street frontage and that on the I Street frontage a large part of the building is to be rented to the United States Government and used by the Judiciary Department.

On reading that it occurred to me that the construction of buildings by corporations or by private individuals and the renting of all or of portions of such buildings to the United States Government is an active, persistent, and well-organized industry in this city. The Government pays about $600,000 a year in rentals in Washington to private property owners. That is equivalent to 3 per cent on $20,000,000. The Government can borrow at 3 per cent or less.

Now, some years ago we appropriated money to buy—and the money was used to purchase—the block on which stands the Poli Theater and the blocks to the south, between I and the Mall. For several years the title to all that property has been in the United States Government. It was bought for the express purpose of erecting, first, a building to be the home of the Judiciary Department; second, a building to be the home of the Department of the Interior; and, third, a building for the State Department, all of which proposed new buildings were and still are very greatly needed.

Magnificent plans were submitted by some of the foremost architects in the United States, and in due time plans and designs for a building for each of those departments was selected. But, lo and behold, after all this had been done, after the urgent need of these structures had been made evident to everybody, after it had been demonstrated that only about $8,000,000 was required to house all of those departments in new Government-owned buildings, and thus to save a large part of this 3 per cent on $20,000,000—after all this, suddenly it was discovered that a 10-year contract had been entered into, under which contract private persons have erected a building upon the corner of Nineteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue and the Government has sent the Department of Commerce up there to occupy it. It is said that that contract was entered into and everything arranged before a spade was put into the earth to dig the foundation.

Now, it appears, if rumors in the newspapers are true, that another such contract has been made and that already somebody has agreed that the United States shall pay rental to a private corporation for the housing of the Judiciary Department, notwithstanding the fact that for years the Government has owned a most admirable site immediately west of the District of Columbia Building, which site it bought for the express and only purpose of erecting a building for the Judiciary Department.

The plan for the building was long since adopted, as were also the plans for the other two department buildings to be erected on the sites to the south. These three great structures were to cost only about $8,000,000 and would have enabled the Government to save a large part of the $600,000 paid every year for rent in this city.

But here we have these new long-time contracts binding the Government to continue to pay rent. For what purpose did we purchase those sites? What influence induces the Government to enter into 10-year contracts in that sort of way, when it owns sites and ought to own buildings on them and save a large part of the 3 per cent on $20,000,000 now going annually into the pockets of private property owners in this city?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] further to insist on the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken.

Mr. MANN. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes none.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I ask that the next amendment be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 234: Page 160, strike out all of section 5, beginning with line 4, ending with line 12, and substitute the following:

"SEC. 5. No appropriation made in this or any other act shall be available for the purchase of any motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle for the service of any of the executive departments or other Government establishments, or any branch of the Government service, unless specific authority is given therefor, and after the close of the fiscal year 1915 there shall not be expended out of any appropriation made by Congress any sum for purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for any branch of the public service of the United States unless the same is specifically authorized by law, and in the estimates for the fiscal year 1916 and subsequent fiscal years there shall be submitted in detail estimates for such necessary appropriations as are intended to be used for purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of all motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, specifying the sums required, the public purposes for which said vehicles are intended, and the officials or employes by whom the same are to be used."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. MANN. I offer a preferential motion. I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist, and the gentleman from Illinois moves that the House recede and concur. The vote comes first on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Does the gentleman from Illinois want any time?

Mr. MANN. I do not think I shall need more than five or six minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I believe the House conferees will agree to the Senate amendment, but I want the privilege of examining the language.

Mr. MANN. That is the reason I made my motion.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois six minutes.

Mr. MANN. I moved to recede and concur, but I am not in favor of my own motion. I made my motion because that was the only way I could have a vote in the House that would mean anything. I was satisfied that the conferees intended to recede in conference. Of course, when they move that the House further insist upon its disagreement, while that is done in good faith and is the ordinary process, it is entirely contrary to their motives. They are not in favor of further insisting. They are in favor of the motion which I make. I am opposed to the motion which I make. Whether they will vote for my motion I do not know. I suppose they will not; but they want to accomplish the same purpose in conference.

Now, what is the effect of this amendment? Of course I shall not quarrel with the action of the House, whatever it is.

The Senate amendment provides in effect that no motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle shall be used by anybody in the Government service unless the same is specifically authorized by law. For instance, there was in this bill amendment No. 188, which was stricken out, which provided for horse-drawn vehicles for the use of the Secretary of the Interior. Would a provision for horse-drawn vehicles be sufficient authorization of law under this amendment for a vehicle that was used for passenger service, when you say that no horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle shall be used unless specifically authorized by law? I take it that the purpose of the Senate amendment is absolutely to prevent the use of any private vehicle by any department of the Government unless specifically authorized by law. I do not know what the Comptroller of the Treasury may rule. He may rule that a provision for an automobile is sufficient authority for a passenger-carrying automobile, although an automobile may be used merely for freight service, and we might authorize an automobile and not intend to have it a passenger-carrying automobile. There is no place in any of the appropriation bills or any of the laws where we make any specific appropriation, as provided by this amendment, for either motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles. We do not do that for the President of the United States. We provide an automobile or automobiles for him, but it may be that he needs them for freight purposes. I do not know. And unless the language of this amendment is changed, if the comptroller rules honestly on the subject, he will rule that a provision for an automobile is not a sufficient authorization for a passenger-carrying automobile.

Now, I am not in favor of the general proposition. I do not believe we should take away from the Cabinet officers what they now have in the way of passenger-carrying vehicles, usually a team or teams, and a carriage of some kind. These have been practically a part of the compensation of the Cabinet officers for many years. They are not used purely for official purposes. They are used largely for social purposes.

They are used largely by the wives and daughters of the Cabinet officers, and I think are properly so used. We require certain duties of the families of these officials. They must perform those functions. If they did not, we ourselves would probably be up in arms, and certainly a large share of the people would be. And when we require this, I think we ought to furnish them what they have been accustomed to receive in the past—the proper passenger-carrying vehicles—both for the use of the Secretaries and for the use of their families. As I understand this provision, it is intended to deprive all of these officials of these vehicles because, forsooth, they are no better than Members of the House, no better than Members of the Senate; and as we see them ride by, not making such provision for ourselves, we become envious with the little envy that actuates a great many men in this world, some of them high-minded men, and we say, "We will take these vehicles away from these Cabinet officers." I suppose if there were four or five hundred Cabinet officers we would not provide for them. There are not so many. There is some distinction in being a Cabinet officer. Even the title confers some distinction. Sometimes that is the only distinction the men who occupy the places have—the distinction conferred upon them by the title.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman for some information in regard to his construction of the amendment. As I read the amendment, it simply provides that no appropriation in this bill shall be used for the purchase of any motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, and that after the ensuing fiscal year no appropriation shall be used for the maintenance or purchase of any such vehicles unless specifically provided for?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it only applies to this appropriation?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; what I intended to say was that, as I understand this amendment, it provides that no appropriation carried in this bill shall be used for the purchase of any motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle unless specifically authorized, and that after the next fiscal year no appropriation which is made shall be used for the maintenance or purchase of any such vehicle unless specifically authorized.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is partly right and partly in error. The provision is that no appropriation in this or any other act shall be used for the purchase of an automobile. It is not confined to the appropriations in this act.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understand it is a general law which applies to appropriations this year, so far as the purchase of any vehicle is concerned, but it does not prevent the use of appropriations for the maintenance of vehicles.

Mr. MANN. Not for the next fiscal year, but it does thereafter unless specifically authorized.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And estimated for.

Mr. MANN. Yes; specifically authorized and estimated for. Now, if the purpose is to prevent these things being done, what is the object in waiting for a year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. For the simple reason, I take it, that vehicles are now owned by the Government and are being used by officials, and it was not the purpose of the committee or of the Senate to cut off appropriations providing for the maintenance of these vehicles for the next fiscal year. It was to give the department an opportunity to make proper estimates showing Congress next year what amount of money would be needed for such purposes.

Mr. MANN. I think the purpose is to cut off the things entirely in the future. I understand that to be the purpose of it. Does the gentleman understand that that is not the purpose of it?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not so understand from the reading of the amendment; that is all I know about it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield me two minutes?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas two minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, before the chairman of the committee closes this bill I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the House conferees have agreed to Senate amendment No. 235, which I think is probably as fortunate a circumstance as could possibly happen connected with this bill.

The House will remember that when this bill was originally under consideration in the House, after a long contest in which a roll call was involved, the House added to the bill this section:

SEC. 6. That all laws or parts of laws to the extent they are inconsistent with rates of salaries or compensation appropriated by this act are repealed, and the rates of salaries or compensation of officers or employees herein appropriated shall constitute the rate of salary or compensation of such officers or employees, respectively, until otherwise fixed by annual rate of appropriation or other law.

In other words, the House adopted the amendment to the bill which took out of the reach of individual Members of the House the right to challenge changes of law in the pending bill. When that amendment which was adopted by the House, which should not have been adopted by the House, by a majority vote—the Senate struck it out, and I understand the conferees on the part of the House, very properly, agreed to the Senate amendment, and I congratulate the Senate and the conferees of the House for their action.

Mr. FOSTER. But the Senate receded from that amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman from Kansas is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. The Senate receded from the amendment 235.

Mr. MURDOCK. Then I commiserate the Senate and the conferees.

Mr. MANN. And I congratulate the conferees. The amendment 235 struck out the paragraph. The House conferees insisted and the Senate receded.

Mr. MURDOCK. More is the pity for the House conferees.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to recede and concur.

The question was taken, and the motion was lost.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to further insist on the disagreement to the Senate amendment 234.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House agree to the further conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, and Mr. GOOD.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15762) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

On June 22, 1914:

S. 4053. An act for the relief of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co.

On June 23, 1914:

S. J. Res. 160. Joint resolution providing for the procurement of title to land at Cape Henry, in the State of Virginia, for works for fortification and coast-defense purposes.

On June 24, 1914:

S. 533. An act to consolidate certain forest lands in the Ochoco National Forest, Oreg.;

S. 4377. An act to provide for the construction of two revenue cutters; and

S. 5147. An act to authorize and direct Col. George W. Goethals, governor of the Canal Zone and formerly chairman and chief engineer of the Isthmian Canal Commission, to investigate certain claims of the McClintic-Marshall Construction Co.

On June 25, 1914:

S. 2576. An act for the relief of John Q. Adams; and

S. 661. An act for the relief of the widow of Thomas B. McClintic, deceased.

HOUSE BILL WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, House bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

H. R. 12579. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 13153. An act for the relief of Pete Jelovac;

H. R. 12045. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 12792. An act for the relief of Mrs. Thomas G. Prioleau, widow of Thomas G. Prioleau.

ORDER OF BUSINESS NEXT MONDAY.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Monday next having been set apart, in a way, to make motions to suspend the rules, in order, will that affect the calling up of a conference report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think, without ruling upon it, that it was the intention of everybody concerned to devote next Monday to motions to suspend the rules.

Mr. MANN. Was it intended to give the order any higher effect than if it had been suspension day?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama and the gentleman from Illinois got up the arrangement, and they ought to know. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I think it would be in order to call up the conference report on Monday.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to think that it would not give it any higher privilege than under the general rule; but I hope that gentlemen in charge of the conference report will let the House generally have the day.

Mr. MANN. I think we ought to do so, so far as we can; but probably the conference report will not take much time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think it would interfere with the general rule of the House; but I think it was the intention of the gentleman from Illinois and myself and the Speaker and those who concurred in the order to give the House the day for suspension of the rules.

Mr. MANN. I was an unwilling victim.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday morning, so that we may have an additional hour for suspension.

Mr. MANN. I object to that, Mr. Speaker, and I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope the gentleman will withhold that for a few minutes.

Mr. MANN. I will withhold it.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Indian appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object; and I ask that the bill be referred to the committee under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The bill is referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BOWDLE, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for two days, on account of business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I believe under the order of the House——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I have accomplished my purpose; I have been recognized for calling up the general dam bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has not been recognized.

The SPEAKER. He will be as soon as it is in order.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman from Illinois will withhold that for a moment, I will be glad to tell him what I was going to do.

Mr. MANN. But I desire to hear the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, at this hour on Saturday night, if I may be permitted to proceed for a moment, I do not desire to make a motion for a call of the House. There are some bills here that I would like very much to see the House stay and consider and get through with. There is the general dam bill, the conservation bill, and while I intend to move to adjourn now, having concluded with the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill, I desire to state that next week, if the point of order be made after the consideration of the appropriation bills, I shall insist upon a quorum coming here, and if the House agrees with me I will see to it that the Sergeant at Arms produces a quorum.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, what was the arrangement made about the recess over the Fourth of July?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That has already been agreed upon, that when the House adjourns on Friday next it will adjourn until the following Monday.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman any idea in case a quorum should not develop later in July what his plan would be as to these measures or as to the legislation in the House?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, there are about a dozen bills—the general dam bill, the bill for irrigating western lands, the bill in reference to extending the time for payment on irrigation lands, the bill in reference to leasing in Alaska, and the bill in reference to leasing Government lands in the United States, the coast-guard bill, and the bill in reference to the post office——

Mr. MANN. And two or three hundred other bills that ought to receive attention, and I hope we will have a quorum present if we are to do business, and I expect to see to it that one is here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think that there are 300 bills.

Mr. MANN. Oh, there are; I have counted them.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think there are about a dozen bills. Some of them I do not agree with; but I think they are of sufficient merit to demand the attention of the House. One or two of them I shall probably vote against. They are bills of sufficient public importance, however, to be considered, and if we are going to stay here——

Mr. MANN. And we are——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. When the Senate is considering other legislation, I think we ought to have a quorum present.

Mr. MANN. I think the Democratic side of the House ought to see to it that there is a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Illinois is entirely correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, I understand the gentleman is going to insist that a quorum be present, if these bills are to be considered at all?

Mr. MURDOCK. Are there any bills on the calendar that are to be taken up under special order?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is nothing on the calendar under special rule now, but there are some for which special rule has been authorized, but not yet presented to the House.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD (at 4 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until to-morrow, Sunday, June 28, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 17267) to authorize Frank A. Gardiner to construct a bridge across the waters of Pistakee Lake and Nippersink Lake at or near their point of intersection, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 907), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. PARK: A bill (H. R. 17541) to make it unlawful to appoint as commissioned or noncommissioned officers in the Army or Navy of the United States any person of the negro race; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KEATING: A bill (H. R. 17542) to amend the pure-food and drugs act of June 30, 1906; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. EDMONDS: A bill (H. R. 17543) to provide a harbor-improvement tax on all vessels engaged in foreign commerce of the United States; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WATKINS (by request): A bill (H. R. 17544) providing for an increase of salaries of the United States attorney and the United States marshal for the western district of Louisiana; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CARY: A bill (H. R. 17545) prohibiting the sale or keeping for sale in the District of Columbia of undrawn cold-storage poultry or undrawn fresh poultry; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. KEY of Ohio: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 287) providing for payment of surgeons making examination at claimant's home in connection with claim pending in the Bureau of Pensions; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 288) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war," approved May 2, 1914; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DALE: A bill (H. R. 17546) granting a pension to Christopher P. Crumiell; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17547) granting a pension to Bella Doyle; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DOOLITTLE: A bill (H. R. 17548) granting an increase of pension to David E. Brown; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FALCONER: A bill (H. R. 17549) granting a pension to Timothy O'Neill; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FERRIS: A bill (H. R. 17550) to renew and extend certain letters patent; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. HOWARD: A bill (H. R. 17551) for the relief of the heirs of Nathan Massey; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KEATING: A bill (H. R. 17552) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Mahoney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KEISTER: A bill (H. R. 17553) granting a pension to Jennie May Heasley; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KORBLY: A bill (H. R. 17554) granting a pension to Curtis O. Hayes; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17555) granting an increase of pension to James Shaffer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAFFERTY: A bill (H. R. 17556) to correct the naval record to Augustin McDonald, alias Augustin McDonnel; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SIMS: A bill (H. R. 17557) for the relief of estate of James C. Parker, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STEVENS of New Hampshire: A bill (H. R. 17558) granting a pension to Mary F. Collins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petitions signed by E. C. Crow and other citizens of Alabama; also by pastors of certain churches at Hadley, Pa., and Wheeling, W. Va., protesting against the practice of polygamy in the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), resolutions passed by the United German Societies of the District of Columbia, urging the adoption of the provision to open the Washington Monument to the public on Sundays and legal holidays; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also (by request), petition signed by C. P. Loomis and other citizens of the State of Connecticut, urging the adoption of the Hobson prohibition amendment; to the Committee on Rules.

Also (by request), resolution of the North American Skat League, protesting against the adoption of the Hobson prohibition amendment; to the Committee on Rules.

Also, petitions signed by A. J. Brink and others of Berger, Mo., and St. Louis, Mo., protesting against the adoption of the Hobson prohibition amendment; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. AIKEN: Petition of R. W. Powell, of Seneca, S. C., protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. AINEY: Petition of sundry citizens of Great Bend, Pa., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. BEAKES: Petitions of 25 voters of Chelsea, 2 voters of Grass Lake, and 3 voters of Jackson, all of the State of Michigan, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. BELL of California: Memorial of the Seattle Commercial Club, favoring water-power legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, memorial of A. E. Pulling and 24 others, of Los Angeles, Cal., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, June 28, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. LINTHICUM.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

How wonderful are Thy works, O God, how inscrutable are Thy ways; who can comprehend Thy wisdom; who can understand Thy power. Thou art almighty, yet we are not dismayed, for Thou hast revealed Thyself in the heart of the Christ as the Father of all souls. Thy love is reflected in the overruling of Thy providence, in the sacrifices of the patriot, the scientist, the philanthropist, in the love of parents for their offspring, in the sublime sacrifice of Calvary. We are here today in memory of one who made himself a place in the hearts of his countrymen by the heroism displayed in the common daily duties of life; in his struggles for the betterment of his fellows; the love of his country, his splendid devotion to father, mother, wife, and children. With a host of admirers and the overwhelming sorrow of those who are near and dear we mourn him, but not without hope, for Thou hast woven into our being a part of Thy substance which shall survive the wreck of time and live on with Thee forever. By this thought comfort us, by this truth solace the bereaved wife and children. And songs of praises we will ever give to Thee in the spirit of Him who taught us faith, hope, love. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the Journal. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE GEORGE KONIG.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the special order for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. COADY, by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That Sunday, June 28, 1914, be set apart for addresses upon the life, character, and public services of Hon. GEORGE KONIG, late a Representative from the State of Maryland.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 556.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. GEORGE KONIG, late a Member of this House from the State of Maryland.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of these exercises, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Speaker, we are gathered here to-day in this historic Chamber, the meeting place of the lower branch of the greatest legislative body in the world, to pay tribute to the memory of one who rose from the humble station of laborer to a place in this great body, sitting here as a Representative of the city of Baltimore.

Few men accomplish so much as this in their lifetimes, and such as do are remarkable men. GEORGE KONIG was a remarkable man.

We are told that he was born at North Point, Baltimore County, Md., near the famous battleground where, in 1812, the raw militia from Baltimore drove back and defeated the trained and seasoned British soldiers, killing their commander, Gen. Ross, and saving the Monumental City from the threatened English occupation.

In his early youth his father moved to Baltimore, where young George obtained a position in a packing house, which required him to run errands and perform light laboring work. Subsequently he worked in a shipyard, then on a fishing boat, and later he became apprenticed to a shipbuilding concern, where he learned the trade of calking, which he followed for some time thereafter.

From these humble places in life he rose to be superintendent of the Baltimore Pulverizing Works; member of the first branch city council of Baltimore, which he held for four years; member of the second branch city council, which he held for a like period; and then to the House of Representatives, being first elected in 1910, and reelected in 1912.

When we stop and think that he could not read or write until he reached early manhood, we can truthfully repeat that GEORGE KONIG was a remarkable man.

Let me read to you an autobiography of Mr. KONIG, prepared and furnished by himself to the Baltimore papers:

Yes, I was a calker—

He said after his rise to a seat in Congress—

I was a calker and a good one. But as I grew older there came a crisis in my life. I was one of those careless fellows intent only upon drawing my pay envelope on Saturday night and just seeing how fast I could spend my money. I was always out for a good time.

I joined the union and went to the meetings, and finally came to the conclusion that the president and other officers of the union were substantial men, men who did not carouse and drink and who were certain in their work. I saw myself as simply a follower of those better men. This put me to thinking, and I said to myself: GEORGE KONIG, which are you going to be—a leader or a follower? Why can't you be one of those substantial men instead of one of the bunch?

Right there I made my choice. I bought a primer and an arithmetic and several other books to start on, and started for home. "Hey, George, where are you going?" some of my friends yelled at me. "Come with us." "I am going home," I answered; and although they jeered at me when they found out I had bought the books, I went home and started plugging. I studied every night and wrestled with those books, first learning the letters and piecing out the words slowly. Hard work? It was the hardest job I have tackled. It was worse than pulling in those nets, but I plugged along and made some headway.

In time I became head of my union by a majority of just one vote. The next year my election was unanimous. You see, the boys learned that I was making good and gave me their confidence. Since then I have prospered. I try to be on the level and square and to stick to my friends. When a man does that, he is going to get along.

As a member of the city council of Baltimore, he was regular in attendance at its sessions, painstaking in his work, and at all times diligent in looking after the interests of the people he represented. He had the courage of his convictions. Once he determined a line of action to be right, he couldn't be swerved by influence of any kind, political or otherwise. This was demonstrated during the stirring times in the council that followed the great Baltimore conflagration of the year 1904, when his vote and influence was vainly sought in support of measures that Mr. KONIG's conscience told him were wrong.

He discharged the important duties that were imposed upon him by reason of his membership in this House with credit and fidelity to his constituents, and received during his first term designations on two of the big and important committees of the House, the District of Columbia and Immigration, an unusual compliment to a new Member.

He was a most useful member of both of those committees. His eight years' service in the city council of Baltimore had familiarized him with many and important municipal problems, so that when he secured a place on the District Committee his experience as a city legislator proved to be a valuable asset to that committee.

He sought membership on the Immigration Committee because he believed this place would enable him to serve the large foreign-born population in his district. He had great sympathy for these people, and served them well, and in return they had the highest regard and admiration for him.

He was devoted to his friends. Busy as he was performing his congressional duties, and looking after his business interests when he could, he never forgot those whom he knew well and associated with before success and prominence came to him.

We learn that frequently and regularly he would visit all the political and social organizations in his district, where his old-time friends were accustomed to gather, and there meet them, fraternize with them, and talk over with them some of the incidents and happenings of the days when they and he were struggling hard to gain an existence.

GEORGE KONIG was a charitable man. He gave liberally of his means to the needy and afflicted, and no man seeking alms ever came away from him empty-handed.

I believe he was more liberal than he could afford to be, but his heart was so big and he had so much sympathy for the distressed that he just simply could not resist an appeal to his generosity.

I attended Mr. KONIG's funeral, held in the city of Baltimore. A great concourse of people assembled in the vicinity of his home the morning he was buried; the church where the last sad rites were performed was crowded to the doors, hundreds being unable to gain admission; and at the cemetery thousands gathered and stood with bared heads as all that was mortal of GEORGE KONIG was committed to the ground. It was a remarkable tribute to a remarkable man. It was a mark of affection for a man who loved the people and who in turn loved and trusted him.

Mr. COADY took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, these services in memory of our late colleague from Maryland vividly recall a similar service held in this hall one Sunday a little more than a year ago in which Congressman KONIG was himself a participant. I remember distinctly that on that Sabbath morning when he arose to speak in memory of the late Senator Rayner we all listened with keen interest because we had learned that though Congressman KONIG was not fond of public speaking whenever he did speak he had something to say and a manner of saying it which made it well worth hearing. We were not disappointed on that occasion, and I yet think of one paragraph in his address which impressed me at the time as expressing the philosophy of human life. He said:

But, taking ourselves as we find ourselves, there is no man with an ambition to attain anything who does not as soon as he attains it find himself possessed of an ambition to attain something else above and beyond it, and the which if he does not attain leaves him as much unsatisfied as if his first ambition had not been realized. Such is the nature of human effort and ambition; perhaps it is well that it is so.

How well the speaker's life typified that statement many here present know. The hand of death has stilled the voice which spoke those words, but he who ponders them can not but be convinced that they were uttered by one whose habits of thought placed within his grasp an intimate knowledge of human nature. And the man who uttered these words, whose reflections brought him to this conclusion, was spoken of as "uneducated." Perhaps he lacked the kind of education which is the only brand some people recognize. True, he could point to no college diploma. His alma mater was the rough school of life and experience, and from that body he graduated at the head of his class. He learned the cardinal virtues, sincerity, honesty, and energy. Possessing these essentials of success, he was successful. With an aversion to literary tasks begotten by infrequent use of the pen, doubtless it would have been an effort for him to write an essay on "Charity." He would have been equally as reluctant to express his views in a speech on that subject. But when it came to "doing" charity the act was a natural part of himself. His deeds proclaimed him more eloquently than did the writings or public addresses of others.

The big heart in his bosom beat warmly for his fellow man, and that sympathy was outwardly expressed in countless acts of kindness. These acts, performed so naturally, so gracefully, were often known to no one but the doer. Those who know of some of them never fail to recall them but with increased admiration for the man. I was told of an incident which occurred after Congressman KONIG began his services in this House. Upon returning to Baltimore one evening, after finishing his daily duties in Washington, he found an old lady, an invalid, sitting in a wheel chair in the depot. She was pathetically excited, her distress being evident to all who observed her. Pausing to learn the cause of her discomforture, Congressman KONIG inquired in that kindly, sympathetic manner which ever distinguished him, and was told that she had returned to Baltimore from a visit, and it had been arranged that some of her relatives were to meet her at the station to take her home. She had arrived and had been waiting for an hour or more, but none of her family had appeared.

The Congressman inquired her address, and when it was told him volunteered to wheel her home himself. When he got her home she explained with much gratitude that she was without funds to compensate him for his trouble, but asked his name, telling him that she would remember him in her prayers and pray for a blessing upon him. I need not attempt to describe the surprise of the good lady when her benefactor modestly told his name and admitted that he was the man who represented her part of the city in the Congress of the United States. Innumerable acts of kindness like this established Congressman KONIG in the affection and estimation of those who knew him.

Congressman KONIG was not a fluent speaker. Perhaps he was often silent because he was conscious of his limitations in speech. I would not have you think he was unable to express himself, for when the occasion demanded, or the spirit of the moment roused him, he was capable of delivering himself in English terse and expressive. But, as a rule, he did not rush into words. He thought, he analyzed, he revolved the proposition in his own mind carefully, and when he spoke what he said was worth hearing. Perhaps the thought was not set forth strictly according to the rules in the "little blue grammar" of Kerl and McGuffey, but it was pictured in words that adequately conveyed the views of the speaker, and these views were generally popularly indorsed as "practical common sense."

When GEORGE KONIG was elected a Member of this House there were many people who smiled; who wondered the kind of Representative his limited educational qualifications would enable him to make; who waited with curiosity his advent in the councils of our Nation. For these there was in store a surprise. How great was that surprise I can best describe by reading from an editorial in the New York Sun of June 3, 1911, inspired by Congressman KONIG'S first speech in Congress. Permit me to remind you that the first effort of every new Congressman is not discussed in the editorial columns of this great metropolitan daily. The Sun saw in Congressman KONIG'S effort subject of interesting speculation, and its verdict on that effort was as follows:

The Hon. GEORGE KONIG, of Baltimore, in an autobiographical sketch in the Congressional Directory, says that he "was denied the opportunity of acquiring a school education, and it was not until quite advanced in years that he taught himself, under great difficulties, reading and writing." The maiden speech of such a man in the House is therefore of more than ordinary interest, especially when, as in the case of Hon. GEORGE KONIG, there is a tendency in some quarters to decry his merits and regard him as a breezy and amusing character who got into Congress by a fluke. But the self-made who push their way to greatness, careless of the susceptibilities they tread on, are seldom judged fairly.

Probably the Hon. GEORGE KONIG, who calked ships for 10 years and rose to be the manager of a pulverizing company and a lawmaker in Congress, is not sensitive to the flippant criticism of the less successful. They expected GEORGE KONIG to make a laughingstock of himself when he spoke his first piece in Congress. We are inclined to think that it was rather a creditable effort of the calker who taught himself to read and write. At any rate, many worse speeches have been made by more imposing persons who were never calkers. Mr. KONIG talked about the bill to admit New Mexico and Arizona as States and took up only a minute or two of the House's time. He had decided to vote for the bill in spite of the provision for the recall of judges in the Arizona constitution, of which he did not approve. "Anyway, my friends, it is Arizona's funeral, not ours," said Mr. KONIG, holding that the Arizonans, if they made a mistake in the constitution they wanted, would discover and correct it. What the ex-calker thought of the recall of judge has not always been better said.

It will be seen that the Hon. GEORGE KONIG is no orator, but just a plain man with a well-developed bump of common sense and a modest gift of idiomatic English. And he has no mean turn for epigram, too.

Congressman KONIG, as stated by my colleague, was born in 1866 near North Point, Md., where was fought the memorable battle of that name in our War of 1812. At an early age he moved to Baltimore, where was spent practically his entire life. His father was a farmer whose share of the world's goods did not permit him to offer his son George those opportunities for gaining an education which are extended the average American youth. It is said that so meager was the instruction young KONIG received that it was not until he reached his majority that he learned to read or write. But though he did not possess the average scholastic education enjoyed by the youth of our land, he was generously endowed with what is termed "good common sense," the intelligent application of which was directed by a mind and heart that acted warmly in unison for the betterment of his fellow men.

No one in distress or want ever appealed in vain to GEORGE KONIG. Soon he became known as the friend of the poor, and from their aid and assistant he became their counselor and father confessor. When a representative from his section of the city was needed in the city council, and it became known that GEORGE KONIG would esteem that distinction, the honor was thrust upon him willingly and eagerly.

It had ever been the practice of KONIG to do well and thoroughly every task to which he applied himself, and when he became the representative of his people in the city council he gave to his new duty the same undivided attention and unfaltering devotion he had brought to bear on the work of his daily trade. The ship calker made good. His colleagues in the city council soon found that what he lacked in acquired knowledge he more than made up in those natural qualifications born with him. They learned to regard his judgment with respect and to rely upon his unerring intuition.

He left the city council to become a Member of Congress, and in this body and in this larger field he made new conquests of friends and established his views in the respectful attention of his fellow workers. He followed out the principles and precepts of his party at all times and under all circumstances. He looked upon the platform of his party as a contract entered into with the people, and carried out that contract to the letter.

Few men have come to this House more dearly loved by their constituents. Members of this Chamber who composed the party who traveled to Baltimore to attend the funeral of Congressman KONIG witnessed a touching demonstration of this affection in the crowds that flocked to his home, who lined the streets, surrounded the church, and followed his body to the grave.

The lives of many public men are pointed out for the youth of our country as proof that to the boy who is ambitious there is no position not within his reach. As a rule, the examples used to illustrate this statement are the lives of men raised in the country, whose young days were spent amid rural surroundings. The instances of city boys, reared under circumstances so humble as to closely approach poverty, but rising through sheer personal worth, are not so numerous.

Fortunately, whether a boy is born in the country or in the city, if he is ambitious, if he possess those virtues and those traits of character which establish him in the esteem and confidence of his neighbors, there is no position of honor and trust to which he may not aspire with the probability of some day witnessing the realization of his dreams.

The city boy who reads the life of Congressman KONIG, who observes his career upward to a place in the councils of our Nation, will see that his chances for gratifying his life ambition have been made clear, because the upward trail has been already hewn. The life of this Representative from Maryland will, therefore, prove an inspiration to every city boy in the land, an inspiration that will reach down in every side street, that will grip the imagination of the youth of our most crowded tenements. The lesson it teaches is that the goal of achievement is within the reach of every American boy possessed of the courage and resolution to make the effort.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I, too, enjoyed the friendship of the late Hon. GEORGE KONIG, although it began only with our common service in this body and ceased too soon for me, as well as all of us.

What is a man? His first attribute will be the qualification he may possess to make him understood by his fellows and to understand his fellows. In that respect our late colleague was a man indeed. He was easily understood, because of that simplicity of character which is always the characteristic of great men. For even though its presence may not necessarily denote the great man, simplicity is always a qualification of greatness. It was doubtless due to this simplicity of character, as well as his sympathy for human beings, and the uncommon common sense, which has just been referred to by one of the speakers, that he owed the very great distinction which had come to him under the most difficult and discouraging circumstances of life imaginable.

His life story should be of value in one most important direction. There are none who are blind to the glamour of public distinction, but there are many among the poor and the plain people of our land in whom the assurance of success and achievement has been suppressed by a spirit of resignation begotten by generations of denial of opportunity in the Old World. Let their children lift their heads. This Republic was ordained for them, and by energy, honesty, and high patriotic purpose they can really open and enter every door in its incomparable temple of fame and honor.

Mr. LINTHICUM resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Members may have five legislative days in which to print and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COADY] asks unanimous consent that Members may have five legislative days in which to print and extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In accordance with the resolution previously adopted, the House will now stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, June 29, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, June 29, 1914.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thy kingdom is an everlasting kingdom and Thy righteousness extendeth in its revelations to all mankind. Thou hast revealed to men Thy plan concerning human life. We are amazed and perplexed by all the evil influences which are about us. We cry in our hearts, "Who is sufficient for these things?" We look to Thee for guidance that we may face the difficult problems of our day; that we may work out a plan of life and construct a form of civilization that will be in conformity to Thy will and produce as its final result the peace, prosperity, and happiness of all the people. We ask Thy guidance this day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15762) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 33 and 101 and agrees to the same; recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 and agrees to the same with an amendment, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate; recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 212 and agrees to the same with an amendment, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate; further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 20, 28, 29, 30, 43, 47, 48, 52, 76, 78, 79, 85, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 168, 169, 176, 177, 195, 218, 219, 220, and 234; agrees to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, and Mr. GOOD managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 17482. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. J. Res. 286. Joint resolution extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia under certain contingencies.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House has signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

Mr. GALLINGER. I present a letter in the form of a petition from Dr. C. P. Bancroft, superintendent of the New Hampshire State Hospital, Concord, N. H., favoring Senate bill 5763, providing for the division of mental hygiene in the Public Health Service. This letter is brief and is upon a subject of great importance, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[State of New Hampshire. New Hampshire State Hospital, C. P. Bancroft, M. D., superintendent.]

CONCORD, N. H., June 24, 1914.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR GALLINGER: May I be permitted, as a brother physician and through your well-known interest in all matters pertaining to public health, to call your attention to Senate bill No. 5763, introduced into the Senate by Hon. JAMES E. RANSDELL on June 5, 1914, providing for a division of mental hygiene in the United States Public Health Service?

This is a measure in which I am greatly interested. In 1908 I had the honor of being president of the American Medico Psychological Association, which held its annual meeting in Cincinnati, Ohio. In my presidential address I especially emphasized the importance of prevention in the matter of mental diseases, and suggested the advisability of more thorough and efficient mental examination of defective immigrants landing in this country. When one considers the increasing numbers of insane persons throughout our country and the fixed and chronic character of mental alienation when once established, the necessity of active measures for prevention becomes obvious. Heredity, alcohol, syphilis, and the landing of defective immigrants appear among the most prominent causative factors in the great increase in insanity. Alcohol, syphilis, and mentally defective immigration are directly preventable causes; while heredity is less definitely preventable, it is evident that greater intelligence in entering upon the marriage relation would ultimately be of marked assistance in diminishing the prevalence of insanity.

It is my firm conviction that the increase of insanity in this country is of such importance that the Government should include mental hygiene among the divisions of its health service. I believe that in insanity we are confronted with a disease condition which is a distinct menace to our country. Mental integrity is the greatest asset a nation can possess. May I ask you, then, to use your influence in advocating the passage of this bill?

Very sincerely, yours, C. P. BANCROFT.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Concord, N. H., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $12,000 for aids to navigation in Tampa Bay, Fla., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $75,000 for aids to navigation in the Florida reefs, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $66,000 for aids to navigation in St. Johns River, Fla., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for inquiry respecting food fishes from $45,000 to $50,000, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WHITE submitted an amendment providing that the exterior of the post office at Mobile, Ala., shall be constructed of Alabama marble, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

TREATY WITH COSTA RICA.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 400), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas the Government of the United States has at all times, both by treaty, legislative and executive action, touching all its negotiations for the acquisition of a territorial right of way for the construction of a ship canal between the two oceans via the Lake of Nicaragua and the River San Juan, recognized the Republic of Costa Rica as the exclusive owner of an essential part of said territory, and in view of that relation entered into separate treaty negotiation with her to obtain the same for the uses of the said canal on the same ratio of compensation as that to be given to Nicaragua for her separate interest therein, as is evidenced in a large degree by the protocols of "an agreement between the Government of the United States and of Nicaragua" and "the Government of the United States and of Costa Rica" in regard to future negotiations for the construction of an interoceanic canal by way of Lake Nicaragua, bearing the even date of December 1, 1900, and by the fourth section of the act of June 28, 1902, entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans"; and

Whereas the official reports of the American engineers authorized by the Government of the United States to examine, survey, and report upon the geographical lines of said right of way and its feasibility for the purposes aforesaid have acknowledged and confirmed the said rights of Costa Rica in and to said right of way as territory necessary and indispensable to and for the "perpetual maintenance, operation, and protection of said canal"; and

Whereas the Government and people of the United States and the Government and the people of the Republic of Costa Rica have ever been and are now on terms of mutual friendship and good will, upon the strength of which American citizens have gone there to share in their prosperity and build up within her borders extensive commercial, agricultural, and mining enterprises involving the permanent investment of large amounts of capital and the employment of large numbers of Americans and thousands of laborers from among the people of Costa Rica; and

Whereas one of the declared purposes of the treaty with Nicaragua now pending before the Senate for ratification is to gain control of said canal route through concessions made by Nicaragua alone, without taking into consideration and providing for the concurrent, legal, and equitable rights of Costa Rica in said route as an entirety, the basis of negotiation heretofore recognized by the Government as the just measure of its value by whomsoever controlled, owned, or used, and which, if consummated by the Senate, might be construed by the people of Costa Rica as an act of injustice on the part of the United States toward a friendly sister nation and tend to impair the amicable relations now existing between that people and this Nation, upon whose good will the said American interests already established there depend for the labor necessary to their continual prosperity: Now, therefore, in order that no injustice may be done the people of Costa Rica in said matter, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which has been referred the said pending treaty for their consideration and report, are hereby authorized and directed to carefully investigate the question of the rights and interest of Costa Rica in and to said route and what bearing the said pending treaty has or will have upon such rights and how the value thereof may be affected thereby, in order that the same may be kept in sight and properly guarded in whatever consideration may be given and whatever determination may be reached by the Senate upon the merits of said pending treaty.

Mr. GALLINGER. I also ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD in connection with the resolution a letter from Mr. J. N. Popham, well known to many Senators.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BUCKINGHAM HOTEL,
Washington, D. C., June 24, 1914.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Recognizing your familiarity with the negotiations and legislation connected with the once contemplated acquisition of the Nicaragua and Costa Rica Canal route, as well as the Panama route already acquired, I take the liberty to call your attention to that feature of the pending treaty with Nicaragua, which seeks to obtain control of that route in the interest of our Government, and the relations which the people of Costa Rica sustain toward the same. But permit me in advance to acquaint you with the standpoint from which I have acquired an intimate knowledge of the situation there as it now exists.

I was appointed to the office of United States special Treasury agent at the Isthmus of Panama in 1889, and held that position for about four years, when I resigned it to engage in the business of developing the mineral resources in the Department of Panama, Republic of Colombia, now the Republic of Panama, but to a larger extent in the Republic of Costa Rica.

In the Department of Panama, 50 miles east of Colon, I, in company with the late John K. Cowen, then president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and J. B. McDonald, contractor of the New York subway, constructed a small railroad in order to handle metallic ores which were exported to the United States. We expended a large sum of money, all American capital, in this enterprise, exporting a great many thousands of tons of high-grade manganese ores to the United States.

In Costa Rica, in company with the late Senator John P. Jones and others, I personally have been in charge of the developing of mineral properties. In this small district there has been several million dollars invested by Americans. In the particular property which I am in charge of, known as the Costa Rica Union Mining Co., an American corporation, we have completed a splendid reduction plant and have spent about $500,000 during the development of the property, which is now a large producing property, and one of the most successful mines in Central America, where we employ a large number of Americans and a great number of Costa Rican laborers. Several thousand Costa Rican laborers are employed in this mining district.

We are now large exporters of bullion to the United States, which fact can be certified to through the United States mint at San Francisco and the assistant treasurer at New York City, delivered for our account through the International Banking Corporation.

I have been thoroughly familiar with the conditions existing in Panama and the Republic of Costa Rica from intimate business associations with the people for the last 20 years. During 16 years of residence in Costa Rica I can state from my personal knowledge that not only all American enterprises, but all foreign enterprises there, have received not only protection from the Costa Rican Government, but have been facilitated in their undertakings in every possible way; but our difficulties do not come through the failure of protection and help that we have always had from the Costa Rican Government, but through the failure of our being able to secure capable and contented labor under the existing conditions, caused through their misunderstanding of our present relations and intentions toward the Republics of Colombia, Mexico, and Nicaragua.

Permit me now to call your attention to some of the exciting causes that have produced this condition of unrest, suspicion, and discontent among the masses of the Costa Rican people, with which we are now seriously confronted.

The secession of Panama from the Republic of Colombia, leaving the uncertain territorial line between the Republics of Panama and Costa Rica on the south, which, though now being arbitrated before Chief Justice White of our Supreme Court, the Costa Rican masses are under the impression we are in sympathy with Panama on account of our close relations with and large interests there, and, to the north, the action of our Government in dealing solely and alone with Nicaragua to acquire arbitrary control of the only highway between oceans other than Panama without giving the people of Costa Rica a voice therein, and without any consideration for their well-recognized ownership of a part of this highway; and our present complications with Mexico; and the many conflicting accounts published through our newspapers translated and republished in Costa Rica, particularly such as Mr. Watterson's "On to Panama," with the reported intention of our acquiring all territory north of Panama; and, further, the late military operations in Nicaragua with our marines, giving possession of the Government there to the present President of Nicaragua, causes the unthinking part of the Costa Rican people uncertainty as to our intentions toward them and their country. At the present time it is common talk in Costa Rica that the Costa Rican Government, in calling attention of our State Department of its rights in the Nicaragua highway, received no satisfaction whatever, except to be informed that our Government was not purchasing the highway, only arranging for a little option upon it.

The American citizens residing in Costa Rica and doing business with the Costa Rican people, and employing large numbers of Costa Rican laborers, feel that the American Government should in some manner, before final action upon the Nicaragua treaty, express their intention and assure the Costa Rican people that we will treat with equity and justice whatever rights they may have in the Nicaragua route as originally contemplated. Such action would at once tend to reassure the Costa Rican people and restore to us the splendid business relation with them which has heretofore existed.

To this end may I not ask you, Senator, on behalf of the great American interests there, to take such action in the Senate in the consideration of the pending Nicaragua treaty as will secure to and protect Costa Rica's rights in said highway?

Yours, truly, J. N. POPHAM.

HOUSE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. R. 17482. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

H. J. Res. 286. Joint resolution extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia under certain contingencies, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13811, the river and harbor bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that there are a number of bills on the calendar, particularly Senate pension bills, and unless they are passed within a very short time it will be impossible for the House to consider them at this session of Congress. The Committee on Pensions met this morning, and we are trying to have passed upon this week all the House pension bills that have passed the House and been sent to the committee. We are notified by Members of the House that unless those bills can pass the Senate within a very short time it will be absolutely impossible to pass them through the House at the present session of Congress.

I have no objection at all to the consideration of the river and harbor bill, but I ask the Senator from North Carolina to allow at this time that the calendar shall be taken up and bills to which there is no objection considered until the hour of 1 o'clock.

Mr. SIMMONS. Would it not suit the Senator as well this afternoon, after arguments have been made on the unfinished business, to take up the calendar for an hour or half an hour?

Mr. SMOOT. That would suit me just as well, although I do feel that we ought to act on these bills now.

Mr. BORAH. I did not understand what was the statement that would suit the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. As I said to the Senator from North Carolina, there are some six Senate pension bills on the calendar, and unless they are acted upon very soon it will be impossible for them to pass through the House at the present session of Congress. I desired to take up the calendar this morning for the consideration of those bills, but the Senator from North Carolina desires to proceed with the river and harbor bill, and he intimated that after the hour of 2 o'clock we might take up the calendar and pass those bills.

Mr. BORAH. At 2 o'clock?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not say that we can. He merely made that suggestion.

Mr. CUMMINS. What disposition will then be made of the unfinished business?

Mr. SMOOT. That could be laid aside by unanimous consent.

Mr. CUMMINS. Has the Senator from North Carolina consulted the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce? Does he know that the chairman would be willing to lay it aside?

Mr. SIMMONS. My statement to the Senator from Utah was that after the speeches upon the unfinished business, if any are to be made to-day, have been concluded the unfinished business might be laid aside, and that I would not then interfere with having a reasonable time to dispose of the pension bills on the calendar.

Mr. CUMMINS. I wish to say that the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee asked me if I would not submit some part of what I have to say with regard to the trade commission bill to-day. I have been very busily preparing myself to comply with the request of the Senator from Nevada, and I hardly think that the bill will be laid aside without some discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. I will not take up any more time this morning; but I want to say to the Senator that to-morrow morning I shall ask that the calendar under Rule VIII be taken up in its regular order at the conclusion of the morning business, and if there is objection to that, then I shall desire the Chair to rule as to the meaning of paragraph 3 of Rule VII and let the Senate decide.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from North Carolina to say that there was an understanding, I thought, that I should submit an observation, as a member of the committee, touching the trade commission bill very soon after the Senator from Idaho had finished his remarks. I am not inclined this morning to yield the floor to have the trade commission bill wholly supplanted and displaced, as much as I am anxious to have the river and harbor bill taken up. It would be the proper course for me to address the Senate on the trade commission bill after the Senator from Idaho has finished.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me to interrupt him? There is not the slightest suggestion of in any way displacing the trade commission bill. The trade commission bill is the unfinished business and will be reached at 2 o'clock. The statement I made to the Senator from Utah was expressly that after the discussion upon the trade commission bill was concluded for the day I would then yield for a short time for the passage of these pension bills. So there is no purpose to interfere with the trade commission bill either now or when it is in order.

Mr. LEWIS. I misunderstood the observation of the able Senator from North Carolina. May I inquire of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] if he has concluded his remarks upon the trade commission bill, or does he propose to resume this morning?

Mr. BORAH. I was going to submit a few remarks further at 2 o'clock, but I will conclude very shortly if I am not interrupted.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Illinois did not intimate to the Senator from Idaho that there was any necessity for concluding his address, which is illuminating.

Mr. BRISTOW. I infer that the Senator from North Carolina wants to conclude during the morning hour the speech which he begun upon Saturday on the river and harbor bill. Am I correct?

Mr. SIMMONS. It will not take me two minutes to conclude what I have to say. I had about finished when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived on Saturday. I wish to conclude, and then I wish to have the Senate go on with the river and harbor bill until 2 o'clock.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator wants to conclude his address upon the bill, of course I would not want to do anything that would in any way interfere with him in doing it, but I am not willing, so far as I am concerned, that the morning hour shall be taken up every morning with the river and harbor bill when there are bills far more important than it to the country and to the people of the country on the calendar that could be disposed of in a comparatively short time. I think it would be unwise in the extreme to crowd out important legislation that has been waiting here for weeks in order that the river and harbor bill, which will require lengthy discussion, which is voluminous in detail, may have the right of way.

Mr. SIMMONS. To what legislation does the Senator refer?

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator wants to complete his speech I would be very glad to have him do it. Otherwise I shall insist that the river and harbor bill shall not be taken up or that it be taken up on motion.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not asking to take up the river and harbor bill in order to complete my statement. I had just about finished when the morning hour expired on Saturday. I am asking to take up the river and harbor bill for the purpose of keeping it before the Senate until it is displaced by the regular order at 2 o'clock.

Mr. BRISTOW. I object.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have asked unanimous consent for that purpose, and if the Senator objects I will make a motion.

Mr. BRISTOW. I object to that. If I have the floor, I should like to move——

Mr. SIMMONS. I have the floor. I have not yielded the floor at all since I was recognized. I have been standing on my feet engaged in a colloquy first with one Senator and then with another.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina has the floor, but the Senator from Kansas has objected.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13811, commonly known as the river and harbor bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I say that is a violation of the rules and not in order at this time.

I call attention to Rule VII, paragraph 3, which reads:

3. Until the morning business shall have been concluded, and so announced from the chair, or until the hour of 1 o'clock has arrived, no motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject upon the calendar shall be entertained by the Presiding Officer, unless by unanimous consent.

I have here a great many decisions of the Chair on this point. I will refer to only one now. On March 21 the Vice President ruled as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has already ruled this morning that, until the hour of 1 o'clock has arrived, although the morning business has been concluded, no motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill was in order, but after 1 o'clock the Chair is of the opinion that, upon motion and until the hour of 2 o'clock, the Senate may consider any bill upon the calendar, and the Chair has so ruled. That motion is not debatable. There can be an appeal taken from the decision of the Chair if it is not satisfactory.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What motion is not debatable, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I respectfully appeal from the ruling of the Chair, Mr. President.

The appeal was submitted to the Senate, and the Senate sustained the ruling of the Chair. That is the case this morning, Mr. President, with the motion that has just been made.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Was that a yea-and-nay vote?

Mr. SMOOT. It was not a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator from Utah have any doubt about the fact that the ruling ought not to have been sustained, and that during the morning hour we can by motion, after morning business is finished, take up a measure?

Mr. SMOOT. I do, Mr. President; and not only that, but it has been held, I think, many times that it can not be done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then we can do nothing under objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly. Mr. President, let me call attention to this particular rule. The Senator will notice that there is a comma after the word "Chair," and not a semicolon; so it can not be an alternative. This means that the morning business may run after 1 o'clock, as it often does run until after 1 o'clock; and if the morning business runs until after 1 o'clock, then a motion can be made any time after 1 o'clock to take up any bill; but unless that happens, the motion is not in order, and a bill can not be taken up except by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Suppose "and" were there instead of "or," what would be the difference? Why is "or" used instead of "and"?

Mr. SMOOT. I am not saying why the committee used the word "or" instead of "and." If "and" were used, it would be conjunctive.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The "or" being there, either is sufficient.

Mr. SMOOT. No; that is not what has been held by the Chair; that is not the construction we have been working under of late; and that is not what the rule has been decided to mean as passed on by this body.

That is all there is to the question, Mr. President. It seems to me that if morning business runs until after 1 o'clock, then a motion any time after 1 o'clock can be made to take up any bill; but before 1 o'clock a motion can not be made to take up a bill, because a bill must then be taken up by unanimous consent.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, Mr. President, if I understand the position of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], if morning business shall be concluded in 15 minutes after the Senate has met, nothing can be done until 1 o'clock except by unanimous consent?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no. The calendar is taken up under Rule VIII until that time. The object of the rule is to take care of morning business.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is not what the rule says.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will read Rule VIII and see if that is not what it says. That rule reads:

At the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless, upon motion, the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the calendar of bills and resolutions, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock—

That rule was adopted in pursuance of a resolution submitted by the late Senator Hoar August 10, 1888—and bills and resolutions that are not objected to shall be taken up in their order, and each Senator shall be entitled to speak once and for five minutes only upon any question.

So, Mr. President, unless morning business is over, the proper thing to do is take up the calendar of bills under Rule VIII, and they must be considered until 1 o'clock, unless there is unanimous consent to take up some other bill; but at 1 o'clock, or at any time after 1 o'clock, any bill can be taken up on motion and the Senate can proceed to its consideration. That is what the rule has been held to mean.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I believe that these two rules, taken together, mean that at the conclusion of the morning business, if that business shall be concluded before 1 o'clock, the Senate will proceed with the consideration of the calendar, unless it be otherwise ordered by the Senate. It does not say "unless there is unanimous consent of the Senate." Rule VIII says that:

At the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless, upon motion—

Not upon a request for unanimous consent, but—unless, upon motion, the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the calendar of bills and resolutions.

So, when morning business is concluded and the Chair so announces, if no motion is made, automatically the Senate would proceed to the consideration of the calendar; but if a motion is made under section 3 of Rule VII before 1 o'clock, the Senate may act upon that motion, and if the motion is adopted the Senate may proceed with the consideration of the matter asked to be taken up.

Mr. President, I do not desire to take the time of the Senate to further discuss the meaning of the third section of Rule VII. We discussed that here at some length on Saturday. I then said about all I could say, and I thought the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] said about all he could say.

The Senator from Utah invokes Rule VIII to aid his argument and contention——

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. But, as I see it, so far from Rule VIII assisting to support the contention of the Senator from Utah, it condemns that contention.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina is wrong. The Senator said that nothing was in order at the conclusion of morning business, and I invoked Rule VIII in order to show that the calendar was in order.

Mr. SIMMONS. The question which I asked the Senator was, if he contended that the Senate could not, if the President announced that the morning business had been closed before 1 o'clock, do anything except by unanimous consent?

Mr. SMOOT. That is right.

Mr. SIMMONS. And the Senator replied that under Rule VIII the Senate would proceed to the consideration of the calendar. When you look at Rule VIII you discover that the provision there is that we shall proceed to the consideration of the calendar, unless the Senate upon motion shall order otherwise.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, paragraph 3 of Rule VII was written for the very purpose of taking care of the calendar. If it were otherwise, a bill could be presented to the Senate, a motion made to take it up, and thus cut out the consideration of the calendar from the first day of the session until the end, unless that bill were disposed of.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have the floor. I should like to go on and finish what I have to say, without the Senator from Utah interrupting me at every minute of my progress.

The Senator's contention is that no motion to proceed with the consideration of bills is in order until after 1 o'clock; that we are forced to take up the calendar; and that the Senate is powerless by motion to order that we take up anything else except the calendar. If that contention be true, Mr. President, then the first part of clause 3 of Rule VII is utterly meaningless and ought to have been left out, and clause 3 of Rule VII, instead of reading:

Until the morning business shall have been concluded, and so announced from the chair, or until the hour of 1 o'clock has arrived—

Should read—

Until the hour of 1 o'clock has arrived no motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill shall be made.

If the Senator's contention is correct, the first line and half of the next line of clause 3 are absolutely surplusage and mean nothing.

My contention, Mr. President—and I am simply restating the point I stated before—is that when the Chair shall announce that the morning business is concluded a motion is then in order to proceed to the consideration of any bill that may be on the calendar of the Senate, and that the rule means that while that motion may be made before 1 o'clock, provided the morning business has been concluded, it can be made after 1 o'clock, whether the morning business has been concluded or not, and that is the only distinction. It is in the alternative. The motion may be made before 1 o'clock, provided the morning business has been concluded; it may be made after 1 o'clock, whether the morning business has been concluded or not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, may I appeal to the Senator? One-half hour is already gone, and 1 o'clock will soon be here. Might we not lay this matter aside? This contention——

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask for a vote upon my motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course I do not mean to take the Senator off his feet. I simply meant to say that I would not further discuss the question.

Mr GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I do not know that I will take more than a minute to say that the motion is revolutionary in this body. The rule has been construed universally and without exception, so far as I know, for more than 20 years in opposition to the view taken by the Senator from North Carolina; and while perhaps no great harm will be done if the motion should prevail, at the same time I think we had better be careful to proceed along safe lines in the construction of our rules.

The rule was manifestly made to care for the calendar, and if that rule had been observed during the present session, we would not have a calendar now of 300 or 400 bills that ought to be acted upon. Instead of considering the calendar, we have been discussing points of order and the construction of the rules, as we are doing this morning.

If the Senator would yield his contention and let us consider the calendar for 30 minutes—20 minutes now—then the motion will be in order, and doubtless the Senate will agree to that motion.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I want a ruling upon the point. I have very decided views and convictions about it, and I want the Chair to rule on the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well, then. I will content myself with what I have already said, that I think it will be an innovation that will be troublesome in the future, and that the Senate ought not to agree to the motion in the light of the explicit terms of the rule which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has invoked.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is reminded of a statement of a Kentucky lawyer at a banquet, that the crowning glory of the practice of the law was its delightful uncertainty. Argument has been made on both sides of this proposition. On one side it is contended that clause 3 of Rule VII provides that after the morning business has been concluded and until the hour of 1 o'clock, if the morning business shall have been concluded prior to that time, the calendar, under Rule VIII, must be taken up, unless by unanimous consent, and that no motion to take up a bill prior to 1 o'clock can be entertained by the Chair. The contention of the Senator from North Carolina is that whenever the morning business has been concluded, or after 1 o'clock whether it has been concluded at all or not, a motion to take up a bill is in order.

The Chair does not desire to take any advantage of the former ruling of the present occupant of the chair, wherein the Chair held that prior to the hour of 1 o'clock no motion was in order to take up a bill, and upon appeal from the Chair the ruling of the Chair was sustained, though not by a yea-and-nay vote. The Chair does not want that ruling to influence the opinion of a single Senator upon the floor; but in that, perhaps unjustifiable, condition of mind that the Chair thinks rests with most people, the Chair is now going to submit the question of order to the Senate rather than to have the RECORD disclose that the Chair had ruled upon both sides of the same question. The question is for the Senate to decide. Is the point of order well taken?

Mr. SIMMONS. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. REED. I ask for a statement of the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is that no motion to take up a bill is in order prior to the hour of 1 o'clock. The Senator from North Carolina asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I understand that morning business has been concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been closed.

Mr. BRISTOW. May I inquire as to the form in which the motion was put to the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Is the point of order well taken, namely, that the bill referred to by the Senator from North Carolina can not come up by motion until 1 o'clock? The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. STONE. I transfer the pair I have with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] and vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] and of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON]. The junior Senator from Utah is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] and the junior Senator from Wisconsin is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

I also desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]; and also the unavoidable absence of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], who is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (after having voted in the negative). I wish to state that the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST] is detained at his room by sickness.

I wish to transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST] and allow my vote to stand. I will ask that the statement of this transfer stand for the day.

Mr. CATRON. I have a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], who I understand is necessarily absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GOFF. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and withhold my vote.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] and his pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

Mr. PERKINS (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. PERKINS. As I have a general pair with that Senator, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. WALSH (after having voted in the negative). I am informed that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] has not voted. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 41, as follows:

So the Senate decided the point of order to be not well taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, before the motion is put I desire to place in the RECORD a few lines from the decision of Vice President Sherman, found at page 2816 of the RECORD of March 5, 1912:

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make a parliamentary inquiry as to the meaning of "morning business." Does not "morning business" include——

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, it is impossible to hear the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rise to a point of order. If the motion is pending, it is not debatable.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I will read this matter into the RECORD later. I was simply going to put in the RECORD a decision of Vice President Sherman concerning the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I insist upon my point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BRISTOW. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CATRON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], who, I understand, is necessarily absent, I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GOFF (when his name was called.) I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and therefore withhold my vote. I desire this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I make the same transfer as on the previous roll call and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will allow my vote to stand.

So the motion was agreed to.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13811) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, for the purpose of keeping the precedents straight, I desire, before making a brief statement in reference to the bill, to read a decision upon the question of order which has just been passed upon by the Senate, rendered by the late Vice President Sherman on March 5, 1912:

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make a parliamentary inquiry as to the meaning of "morning business." Does not "morning business" include up until the hour of 4 o'clock, or 2 o'clock at least, the calling of the calendar, and an opportunity to move to take up matters on the calendar?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; "morning business" is certain routine business, as laid down in the rule, that may proceed for two hours, but can be closed before, and is closed before, when the Chair so announces. After the conclusion of that business and the announcement by the Chair to that effect, then the Chair thinks the motion which the Senator made was in order, but after he had made that motion the Senator from Massachusetts made a motion, action upon which is preferential under Rule XXII, and that is the matter which must first be disposed of.

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate more than four or five minutes in relation to the pending bill. I wish simply to make a brief statement with reference to the amounts carried in the bill by way of cash appropriations and authorizations, and to compare them with the amounts carried in the House bill for like purposes.

The bill as it came from the House carried appropriations in cash of $39,408,904 and authorizations of $4,000,000; a total of cash appropriations and authorizations of $43,408,904. The Senate committee adopted all the House authorizations. There were only two of these: First, the Delaware River, for which there was an authorization of $1,000,000; secondly, the Ohio River, for which there was an authorization of $3,000,000.

The bill as reported to the Senate strikes out items in the House bill aggregating $2,024,000 and adds new items, for which appropriations are made, aggregating $5,946,400, making a net increase over the House cash appropriations of $3,922,400. The bill as reported to the Senate adds to the authorizations in the House bill authorizations for three additional projects—the mouth of the Columbia River, $4,100,000; harbor of refuge at Cape Lookout, $1,826,600; and Los Angeles Harbor, $426,000.

The bill as reported to the Senate therefore carries appropriations and authorizations amounting in cash to $43,408,904, and authorizations of $10,275,000, or a total of $53,683,904.

The House committee added 76 new projects, requiring in all to complete $38,864,700, and appropriated for these 76 new projects $5,786,829, leaving $33,077,871 to be appropriated for in future bills.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield for a moment?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. Are those figures given in the report here?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think so. I think they are in the report.

The Senate committee cut out six of these new projects, requiring in all to complete $1,519,950, and for which the House appropriated $519,000.

If the Senate committee's action shall be indorsed, the new projects of the House bill will be reduced to 70 in number, requiring in all to complete $37,344,750, for which the bill as reported to the Senate appropriates $5,267,829.

The Senate added 17 new projects to the bill, requiring in all to complete $6,181,510, and appropriated $2,023,600, leaving $4,157,910 to be taken care of by future legislation. If the action of the Senate committee is ratified in full the new projects will number 87, requiring in all to complete $43,526,260, for which appropriations amounting to $7,291,429 are carried in this bill, leaving $36,234,831 to be appropriated for in future acts.

Mr. President, without reading, I wish to incorporate in my remarks an itemized statement of the new project cited by the Senate committee.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Itemized statement of the new projects added by Senate.

	Project.	Total cost.	Amount appropriated.
1	Narrows, Lake Champlain	$737,000	$300,000
2	Boston Harbor, Mass. ($560,000 of this cost for a dredge, which was cut out)	1,545,000	400,000
3	Bridgeport Harbor, Conn. (the balance is carried in an unexpended balance on hand)	175,300	111,300
4	Chester River, Md	12,000	12,000
5	Pembroke Creek, N. C	10,000	10,000
6	Pensacola Bay to Mobile Bay	432,435	50,000
7	Mississippi River to Bayou Teche	826,000	100,000
8	Bayou Teche to Mermentau River	477,175	.....
9	Sabine River, Tex	30,000	30,000
10	Improving Tennessee River	150,000	150,000
11	Cut-off, Princess Point, Mich	138,000	138,000
12	Los Angeles Harbor, Cal. (authorization for balance)	626,000	200,000
13	San Rafael Creek, Cal	54,600	27,300
14	Napa River, Cal	43,000	20,000
15	Skagit River, Wash	30,000	30,000
16	Apoon Mouth Yukon River, Alaska	45,000	45,000
17	San Juan Harbor, P. R. (this to be returned)	850,000	400,000
	Total	6,181,510	2,023,600

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish also to incorporate, without reading, an itemized statement of the new projects eliminated from the House bill by the Senate committee.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Itemized statement of the new projects cut out by the Senate committee.

	House projects cut out.	Total cost.	Amount appropriated.
1	Matawan Creek, N. J	$72,000	$72,000
2	Shrewsbury River, N. J	295,000	100,000
3	Oklawaha River, Fla	733,000	175,000
4	Kissimmee River, Fla	47,000	47,000
5	Caloosahatchee River, Fla	25,000	25,000
6	Willapa Harbor, Wash	347,950	100,000
	Total	1,519,950	519,000

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, this is the only statement that I care at this time to make with reference to the bill. I wish, in addition, to say a word personal to myself. I am the acting chairman only of the Committee on Commerce. The river and harbor bill sent to us by the House was referred by the committee to a subcommittee, of which I was chairman, but contemporaneously with the consideration of that bill by the subcommittee my time was taken up altogether in connection with my duties in the hearings then going on before the Committee on Interoceanic Canals upon the proposed tolls repeal bill. After that committee had concluded, while the subcommittee was still engaged in considering the river and harbor bill, I was confined to my home by illness and was not present at all during the hearings before the subcommittee.

For that reason, Mr. President, I shall be compelled to rely very largely upon the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who in my absence was acting chairman of the subcommittee, and other Senators who were present and assisted me in those hearings.

Mr. President, I now ask that the bill be taken up for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

Mr. BURTON. I desire to address the Senate in a general way before the items are taken up.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understood that the Senator from Ohio desired to address the Senate. I will withhold the motion until he concludes or will just lodge it and he may proceed.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I have been closely associated with river and harbor legislation in the House and Senate for now nearly 20 years. I have had part in the framing of every river and harbor bill since that of the year 1894. While it is well understood by my fellow Members in the Senate that I have not approved the bills from 1910 to 1913, inclusive, I think I may say that no one has had equal opportunity to judge of the dangers on the one hand and the benefits on the other of river and harbor legislation.

I am forced to the conviction that unless there are radical changes made in our methods, unless we eliminate classes of items which are being included in the bills, this measure will become so objectionable to the people of the country that no river and harbor bill can pass, and it is now the time for the genuine friends of river and harbor legislation, for those who believe in the development of such harbors and waterways as can profitably be developed, to pause and consider.

The great danger in every river and harbor bill is that there is no power of resistance speaking for conservation or economy. Indeed, Mr. President, I sometimes question whether there is any strong disposition for economy in national, State, or municipal affairs. The sentiment in its favor is vague and unorganized. In no measure before any State or national legislation are the possibilities of extravagance greater than in this now before us.

To begin with, there is the earnest insistence of communities and of private interests that certain projects for river and harbor improvement be recognized. There is no sufficient influence in the way of criticism against that system. In fact, it is with the greatest reluctance that I oppose these bills, because localities consider a man who criticizes appropriations suggested as an enemy; sometimes, speaking rather recklessly, newspapers or individuals say any opposition is due to prejudice; and there is a disposition which must be recognized on the floor of both the House and Senate to regard whoever opposes any item as an intruder. My fellow Senators will remember that on one occasion I criticized an appropriation which I regarded as altogether wasteful in the State of Texas, and a statement was made upon this floor that it was none of Ohio's business.

Mr. President, it is the business and it is the obligation of every Senator to call attention to whatever vicious tendencies may appear in this or any other bill, and I am compelled to say that there are more which are manifest in the measure now pending before the Senate than in any of those since my membership in the House or Senate, beginning in the year 1895. It is my desire to criticize this measure, and I think it deserves criticism. I trust there may be a full and free discussion not only of the general policies of the bill but of the separate or specific items as well.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think before the Senator goes on with a discussion of the items of the bill we ought to have a quorum of the Senate here to hear him, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHIELDS in the chair). The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Camden	Fletcher	Kern
Brady	Catron	Gallinger	Lane
Brandegee	Chamberlain	Goff	Lewis
Bryan	Clarke, Ark.	Hughes	Lippitt
Burleigh	Crawford	Jones	McCumber
Burton	Dillingham	Kenyon	Martin, Va.
Newlands	Poindexter	Smith, Ariz.	Thornton
Norris	Ransdell	Smith, Ga.	Tillman
O'Gorman	Reed	Smith, Md.	Walsh
Oliver	Saulsbury	Smoot	Warren
Overman	Sheppard	Sterling	Weeks
Page	Sherman	Swanson	White
Perkins	Shields	Thomas
Pittman	Simmons	Thompson

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is present. The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I have no sympathy with that sweeping denunciation which characterizes every river and harbor act as a pork barrel; but, on the other hand, every measure of this kind presents the possibility of becoming a carnival of extravagance and waste.

I do not, in the first instance, desire to criticize the amount of this bill. Money judiciously expended is not wasted. In passing, however, it is well to call attention to this feature.

The cash appropriations amount to $43,330,404, to which certain additions have been proposed by the committee since its report was filed, which, I believe, was on the 18th of June.

In addition there are authorizations amounting to $10,352,600, making a grand total of $53,683,004.

The total amount appropriated and authorized in this bill was surpassed in three previous measures—those of 1896, of 1902, and of 1907, but at that time bills were passed biennially or triennially, while now they are passed annually.

The cash appropriation, $43,330,000, is, however, the largest amount of cash ever carried in a river and harbor bill since the foundation of the Republic. That fact in itself should induce caution and make us give careful examination to the items which make up this very large aggregate.

In criticizing the bill it will be necessary for me to repeat what I have said several times before on the floor of the Senate. I regret to say that I have for the most part spoken to an audience which was unresponsive, but I am satisfied there is to-day a disposition to investigate this measure which has not prevailed in preceding years, and if I am correct in my forecast there is a disposition not only in the Senate, but in the country at large, to be shown, to know whether these appropriations are made in a judicious manner, also whether the projects themselves are national in scope and worthy of the attention of the Federal Government.

I desire to make three general criticisms of the bill.

The first relates to the policy or method of making appropriations.

The second is that appropriations are made for many rivers and harbors the channels of which under present conditions can not be profitably improved. This applies especially to certain inland waterways, and applies in the most emphatic manner to the improvement of certain rivers by the construction of expensive locks and dams.

Third, there are large appropriations for benefits which are merely local and which in some cases only remotely or incidentally affect navigation.

Before taking up these criticisms in order, I may say that transportation conditions have greatly changed in the last 20 years. Numerous inland rivers, which were either the sole means for affording transportation or which were in any event efficient means for bringing products to the market, have now been superseded by other methods of transit, and in criticizing many of the items in this bill it is not necessary to lay the blame upon those who promoted these improvements years ago. That which may have been very judicious in 1870 or 1880, or even in 1890, is altogether injudicious in this year 1914.

The traffic statistics show a dwindling amount of freight on these rivers. They show also that there are other more efficient and cheaper methods of carrying the products of the farm and the factory to market.

I desire to take up first the general policy of this bill, that of piecemeal appropriations. In a minority report which I have filed I have given some very striking illustrations of this policy. They will be found on page 3 of the report to which I allude.

There is appropriated in the bill in cash for the improvement of the East River, N. Y., $500,000, a very considerable sum. But what is the total cost of the improvement to which the Congress and the Government of the United States commit themselves by the appropriation of that $500,000? It is $13,400,000; and the remaining $12,900,000 is left as a legacy to future Congresses to dispose of.

Improving Harlem River, N. Y., cash appropriation, $100,000; total cost of the improvement, which has been under way for some time, $1,628,000, or 16 times as much as the amount appropriated in this bill.

Delaware River, Pa., N. J., and Del., cash appropriation, $2,000,000; cost for completion, $6,809,200.

Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, cash appropriation, $2,250,000; cost for completion, $8,000,000.

Harbor at Norfolk, Va., cash appropriation, $270,000; cost for completion, $1,114,000.

Inland waterway, Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C., cash appropriation, $600,000; amount required for completion, $4,000,000.

Cape Fear River above Wilmington, cash appropriation, $91,000; amount required for completion, $416,000.

St. Johns River, Fla., cash appropriation, $300,000; cost for completion, $777,000.

Channel from Pensacola Bay to Mobile Bay, cash appropriation, $50,000; amount required for completion, $432,435.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question in order that I may thoroughly understand the subject? Referring to the column of cost for completion and the column of appropriations in this bill, is the cost for completion in addition to the amount appropriated in the bill?

Mr. BURTON. It includes it.

Mr. KENYON. One question more. Take, for instance, the East River and Hell Gate appropriation for cost of completion. Is that the cost from the commencement of the project to the close of the project, everything that has been spent or will be spent, or only what will have been spent including this item?

Mr. BURTON. This amount will be spent in the future, including this appropriation. As I said a moment ago, we appropriate here in cash $500,000 and leave $12,900,000 for future Congresses to take care of. It should be said in the case of some of these projects that they are new, and as to others that they are already under way and a considerable amount has been expended upon them. The figures which I have given relate to pending projects only.

Waterway, Mississippi River to Bayou Teche, La., cash appropriation, $100,000; cost for completion—it is in the alternative—$1,655,500 or $2,062,900.

Galveston Channel, Tex., by the construction of a sea wall, cash appropriation, $100,000; cost for completion, $1,185,000.

Brazos River, Tex., locks and dams, cash appropriation, $250,000; amount required for completion, indefinite; probably about $10,000,000.

Trinity River, Tex., locks and dams carried in this bill, $240,000; amount required for completion, again indefinite. In both cases we are going ahead appropriating these dribbling amounts without any knowledge as to what the project will cost when completed, and, I may say as well, without any assurance that the improvements will confer any benefit upon the communities in which they are located, unless perhaps it be a profuse expenditure of a very large amount of money, which will give benefit to contractors and bring employment to labor.

Cumberland River below Nashville, cash appropriation, $250,000; amount for completion, $2,201,882.

Cumberland River above Nashville, cash appropriation, $340,000; amount for completion, $4,500,000.

Ohio River, $5,000,000, of which $2,000,000 is cash and $3,000,000 is under continuing contracts; amount for completion, $51,057,000.

Mississippi River between Ohio and Missouri Rivers, cash appropriation, $1,000,000; amount for completion $17,250,000—seventeen times as great.

Mississippi River between Missouri River and St. Paul, cash appropriation, $1,500,000; amount for completion, $13,500,000.

Fourth lock, St. Marys River, Mich., cash appropriation, $250,000; amount for completion, $2,475,000.

Missouri River, Kansas City to the mouth, cash appropriation, $2,000,000; amount for completion, $15,000,000.

Sacramento and Feather Rivers, Cal., cash appropriation, $200,000. This is an item which appears in the bill along with other items not very large in amount; but what does that $200,000 mean? It means a committal to a project, the beginning of an improvement which will cost $5,860,000.

Mr. PERKINS. Of which the State pays half.

Mr. BURTON. The State puts in an amount in addition to the $5,860,000; but, for the improvement of the river, the $5,860,000 is the sum which it is proposed the Government of the United States shall pay.

The first objection to this dribbling policy is the one of expense. Everyone knows that if you are building a great breakwater, constructing a lock and dam, or contemplating any great improvement, economy and efficiency can be secured by making one contract. In the years before 1890 appropriations were made in separate sums; and there was a very good reason for that. There were but few of these projects of colossal expense at that time. Apart from the Mississippi River, there were few expensive improvements in the class of those contemplated in this bill. Beginning in that year, under the advice of the then Chief of Engineers, Gen. Casey, and with the cordial support of Senator Frye, who was then a member of this body and chairman of the Committee on Commerce, three large projects were selected for completion. A provision was drawn, which has been repeatedly inserted in later bills, to the effect that a certain amount of cash should be appropriated, and the Secretary of War was authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for the completion of the remainder of the work to an amount not exceeding the total cost of the improvement.

Mr. President, under this continuing-contract system progress was made in the successive river and harbor bills almost without exception until in the year 1907 a measure was brought in which contained no provision for any new project unless provision was made for its completion. It was decided that it was the best policy, a policy which was made possible after long years of effort, to provide for completion whenever an improvement was commenced. I very much regret that, beginning with the year 1910, this salutary method was departed from, and now the making of partial appropriations is worse than ever before.

The first argument against such a course as that in this bill is that of expense. Various estimates have been made; that the additional cost of the piecemeal system is from 5 to 30 per cent. I stated when the interruption occurred that in the building of any large work, such as a breakwater, a canal, or a lock and dam, economy and promptness can be secured by one contract. It is probable that the average saving would be as much as 20 per cent. This halting policy, this method of appropriating a tenth of the entire amount or in some instances even a smaller fraction, results in these appropriations costing the Government of the United States tens of millions more than they otherwise would cost.

The Senate committee placed a harbor of refuge at Cape Lookout under the continuing-contract system, authorizing further appropriations of $1,826,000. This was done after a showing made by the engineer in charge that by such method very large quarries could be developed, stone could be furnished more cheaply, and a saving of approximately $350,000 might be made.

No private enterprise is carried on in the manner so common in this bill. No foreign Government improves its rivers and harbors in this way. In France, before any project is adopted, most elaborate surveys and estimates are made, and then a decision is reached whether or not it is best to adopt it. If thought best to adopt it, provision is made for the whole expense, and the time within which it is to be finished is computed as nearly as possible. In Germany the same method is in vogue.

This piecemeal policy has been condemned by the engineers having the work in charge. Gen. Marshall, who was for several years Chief of Engineers, and one of the ablest members of the corps, said some years ago:

> Few, if any, of the larger works have ever been prosecuted at a rate sufficiently rapid to realize the fullest efficiency and economy.

But the saving in expense which would be accomplished by providing for the whole improvement is not all. There is another advantage, and that is that communities may know what to depend upon. If boats are to be constructed to use a certain channel, they may be constructed and be ready when that channel is finished. If wharves are to be constructed, those who project them are not left to the uncertainties of future appropriations and long delays. They can make their plans at once and carry them out.

In this connection I wish to call attention to a few of the most striking illustrations of the delay which has occurred in the making of public improvements.

In the year 1880 work was commenced upon a canal and lock at what was called the Colbert and Bee Tree Shoals above Riverton on the Tennessee River. It was not until the year 1911 that that improvement was finished. President Eliot, in an article in the Atlantic Monthly some years ago, called attention to a lock on the Columbia River, in the building of which 25 years were exhausted. To take an illustration in this bill, the existing project for the James River, Va., up to Richmond, was commenced in the year 1884, and this, with some modifications, after having been in progress 30 years, is only 42.1 per cent completed, or less than half, while the estimated cost of completion is $3,011,282.72. In that case the recommendation of the engineers was for only $100,000 in this bill, at which rate it would require 30 years more to complete this improvement which already has been underway for 30 years.

On the Columbia and lower Willamette Rivers, below Portland, Oreg., work was begun in 1877. The total amount expended on the original and modified projects is $2,769,000. It is estimated that $2,315,000 will be required to complete the projects.

The very worst item of all is omitted from the pending bill, and I think it is quite likely that it will be permanently omitted from future bills. That is the Sandy Bay harbor of refuge on the coast of the State of Massachusetts.

It must be said for that project that at one time a delegation headed by Mr. Moody, afterwards in President Roosevelt's Cabinet and a member of the Supreme Court of the United States, made a showing on its behalf which it was very difficult for anyone to answer, but at the same time practical maritime men were exceedingly skeptical about its benefits. It was adopted in the years 1884 and 1885. The estimated cost of completion to-day is $4,954,000. Work has been in progress since 1885, and the amount of $1,767,000 has been expended. The amount required to complete is nearly three times as great as that expended in 29 years, and the harbor of refuge constructed there is to-day rather a menace to the navigator than a help.

Commencing in 1885, the appropriation for several bills was $100,000 in each bill, and that on an improvement costing $6,000,000, as if their calculation at the very beginning was that it would not be completed inside of 60 years. Indeed, their calculations are worse than that, because in that day river and harbor bills were passed biennially, and on the basis of the amount of the first appropriations it would have required 120 years to complete it.

Why, Mr. President, there is no excuse for this slipshod, unbusinesslike method; and yet in bill after bill we go on with these small appropriations, the completion not in sight and no benefits assured.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the Senator would describe the particular improvement he has recently mentioned; just what it is, where is it located, and of what does it consist?

Mr. BURTON. It is located to the north of Boston, and was intended as a harbor of refuge, into which vessels might enter in time of stress. It was claimed that the coast there was one along which a great many boats were passing, that sudden storms arose, and that there should be at some point between Boston and Portland a harbor of refuge of ample size in which boats might find shelter. As I have already stated, among experts there has always been a difference of opinion as to whether or not it would accomplish any good results.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator how it was constructed and of what it was constructed.

Mr. BURTON. It was constructed of rubblestone. They have great quarries near at hand, and the rubblestone is placed in position more cheaply than in any breakwaters or jetties in the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it in the nature of a breakwater?

Mr. BURTON. It is not merely a breakwater; it is an artificial inclosed space into which vessels may go.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to ask the Senator if this harbor of refuge is included in the present bill?

Mr. BURTON. It is not.

Mr. RANSDELL. When was it dropped from the river and harbor bill?

Mr. BURTON. In 1909 a recommendation was made that there should be a test of the efficiency of the work done, and that no additional appropriations should be asked until some test was made.

Mr. RANSDELL. And there has been no appropriation since?

Mr. BURTON. My recollection is that there was an appropriation in the bill of 1910, but I am not positive whether an appropriation was made that year or not. I think so, but there was none in 1911, 1912, or 1913.

Mr. RANSDELL. I was under the impression that we had one in 1911, but I am not sure. Certainly there has been none since that time.

Mr. BURTON. Possibly the Senator from Louisiana is right about that, although my recollection is that the appropriation of 1910 was the last.

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like to ask the Senator a further question. During the 10 years that he was chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House, from December, 1898, until March 4, 1909, were not appropriations carried in every one of the river and harbor bills for the Sandy Bay harbor of refuge?

Mr. BURTON. They were; and I can state very clearly the reason. It was repeatedly referred to the Board of Engineers for a report, and every time a report came back that it was desirable, if not to finish, at least further to extend the breakwater or the protection afforded. I visited it at least on one occasion, and I never could quite convince myself that it was helpful; but it was impossible to obtain an unfavorable report upon it.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BURTON. In just a moment. I wish to say a word more. Very strong pressure was brought to bear for that improvement by the marine insurance companies of the United States, and numerous vessel men appeared in a delegation, on at least one occasion, before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I will say that the policy pursued while I was chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee was to limit the appropriations for the Sandy Bay breakwater and harbor of refuge to the smallest possible sum, and to see if we could not devise a way in which there would be some benefit conferred without spending the enormous amount contemplated for its completion. The project was adopted, in the first place, in 1884 by a majority of but one in the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House, and after a very long discussion.

I now yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator connected Mr. Justice Moody with the delegation that appeared in favor of this appropriation originally made in 1885.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, no; he did not appear then. It was while he was still a Member of the House.

Mr. WEEKS. I was going to say that 1885 was a great many years before Mr. Justice Moody became a Member of the House.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, no; it was not 1885. It was while the work was under way and while Mr. Moody was a Member of the House.

Mr. WEEKS. If Mr. Moody's arguments and the arguments of those who accompanied him were so overwhelming, there must have been some sound reason developed for undertaking this work originally, whatever may be thought of it to-day.

Mr. BURTON. I doubt it, Mr. President. I brought this matter forward not as an illustration of an injudicious project but of a piecemeal and absurd policy. At the rate it was prosecuted, as I said, it would require on one basis 60 years and on another basis 120 years.

Mr. WEEKS. I am entirely in sympathy with the Senator in the reason he has just given for criticizing the method of making the appropriations.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator how much money was invested in this harbor of refuge?

Mr. BURTON. One million seven hundred and sixty-seven thousand one hundred and seventy-four dollars and fifteen cents.

Mr. KENYON. And the project is now abandoned?

Mr. BURTON. Well, who knoweth who shall come after him? Who knoweth what will happen yet about it? It is possible that some recommendation will come in yet for this breakwater and it will be put on the bill; and, from the standpoint of its usefulness, I do not think time is wasted in making a few remarks on the subject right now.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it of any use now, in its present condition?

Mr. BURTON. I do not see how it can be used. It involves the use of a very large space, and the plan for a harbor into which to go is not complete until the whole breakwater is finished. I suppose boats might go in there and have some measure of shelter, though I doubt it.

Mr. NORRIS. I should think, unless it were completed to quite an extent, it would be a menace rather than a benefit to commerce.

Mr. BURTON. It is not exactly a menace, except to boats that are close inshore and very near to the improvement. It was maintained in the hearings before us that the boat Port- land, which was lost some years ago, I think, could have been saved if this harbor of refuge had been there. That boat sank, with considerable loss of life, but I never was able to convince myself that she was anywhere near to this breakwater when she foundered or that it would have rendered her any assistance.

The worst objection, after all, to this method of piecemeal appropriations is the lack of due and careful consideration of projects before they are commenced. It is very easy to appropriate $100,000. It is lost in the multitude of details in this bill, with its 400 items, so that Members of the Senate can not realize how much is involved. I read one item here of $200,000 for a project which means, before its completion, $5,800,000.

During the delivery of Mr. BURTON'S speech,

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives agreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 15279, receding from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 33 and 101 to the bill and agreeing to the same; receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 and agreeing to the same with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 212 and agreeing to the same with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; further insisting upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 20, 28, 29, 30, 43, 47, 48, 52, 76, 78, 79, 85, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 168, 169, 176, 177, 195, 218, 219, 220, and 234; and agreeing to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate still further insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House and disagree to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 212.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator what has become of the amendment with reference to mileage?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That amendment is still in disagreement.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator what has become of the amendment which was placed in the bill by the Senate concerning the assay offices?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That amendment is still in disagreement. I will say to the Senator that, while that is not embraced in this report, the assay offices will be preserved, but the increased salaries which were proposed by the Senate will not be acceptable to the House.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, it seems to me that this is a very important matter, and there should be more Senators present than there are at this time. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brady	Gallinger	Norris	Smoot
Brandegee	Goff	Overman	Sterling
Bristow	Hollis	Page	Swanson
Burleigh	James	Perkins	Thomas
Burton	Jones	Ransdell	Thompson
Camden	Kenyon	Robinson	Townsend
Catron	Kern	Saulsbury	Walsh
Chamberlain	Lane	Shafroth	Warren
Clapp	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Weeks
Crawford	Lewis	Shields	White
Cummins	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Works
Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.
Fletcher	Nelson	Smith, Md.

Mr. KERN (when Mr. SHIVELY'S name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY] is unavoidably absent on official business.

Mr. KENYON. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] on account of sickness. This announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

The motion was agreed to.

After the conclusion of Mr. BURTON'S speech,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he will withhold the unfinished business for just a minute that I may ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill on the calendar that the city of Providence and the State of Rhode Island are very anxious indeed should be passed promptly. I think it will not occasion any debate.

Mr. NEWLANDS. With the understanding that it will not take any time by debate, I will yield.

PORT OF PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Mr. LIPPITT. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11245) extending to the port of Providence, R. I., the privileges of section 1 of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the fact that the report of the committee of conference on House bill 13679, the Agricultural appropriation bill, has been in the Senate now for a couple of days. I think there is no opposition any longer to the adoption of the report. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid aside in order that the conference report may be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be taken.

Mr. SMOOT. There will be some debate on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. KENYON. What is the request?

Mr. NEWLANDS. If it will not take any long time, I will yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia asks that the Senate may take up the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to taking up the report, but I think it will lead to a little discussion this afternoon.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. As the report has been before the Senate for some time and the fiscal year is about expiring, it does seem to me that agreeing to the report is a matter of urgent demand.

Mr. NEWLANDS. With the understanding that it will not take much debate, I will not interpose an objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. It would be very unfortunate if by reason of appropriation bills going over we have to provide for the needs of the Government by resolution. I think we ought all to agree cordially that this report should be considered.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection at all to the consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report was made June 26. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator having charge of this matter if the free-seed proposition was restored in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it was.

Mr. KENYON. Congressional free-seed distribution?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was not on the conference committee myself. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] were on it, and they are both away.

Mr. KENYON. Is there anyone who knows?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; it was restored, I am advised. On Saturday I called attention to the conference report, and we had it printed in the RECORD, and I consented that it might go over until to-day, so that everyone might have an opportunity of seeing what changes are involved.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator understands that it is hopeless to insist on the proposition of the Senate as to free seeds?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So I am advised. The Senator will remember that two years ago I joined him in striking out the provision, and the House positively refused to accede.

Mr. KENYON. So the history of the matter in regard to it is that the Senate amendment has been rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The House has insisted on it, and the conferees on the part of the Senate have been unable to succeed in retaining the amendment.

Mr. KENYON. The conferees on the part of the Senate finally yielded?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. WEEKS. I should like to inquire from the Senator from Georgia whether the appropriation for the destruction of the gypsy and brown-tail moth was reduced in conference, and if so, why?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Can the Senator give me the number of the amendment?

Mr. WEEKS. I have it not before me.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that the RECORD shows that there was an agreement on $69,050. I understand that that is an error in the RECORD, and instead of $69,050, the amount is $210,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator can give me the number of the amendment, I will be glad to give him the information.

Mr. GALLINGER. The facts about that provision are, I think, that the House appropriated $207,540. Of course, that should not be cut. An amendment I offered increased it to $350,000. I apprehend the conferees found it necessary to reduce the amount carried in the amendment. I am sorry it happened, but, of course, those things have to be adjusted. If that is the status of it, there is no objection on my part.

Mr. WARREN. My remembrance is that that amendment was cut to the limit of the House plus an additional $12,500, about.

Mr. GALLINGER. The conferees could not interfere with the House appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. Of course not.

Mr. WEEKS. I find on examination that there was an error in printing the conference report, and the amendment is printed as $69,050, when it should have been $310,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is right.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I stated.

Mr. OLIVER. I should like to ask the Senator what action was taken in conference with regard to the appropriation on account of the chestnut-tree blight.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will not be able to tell the Senator unless he can give me the number of the amendment.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know the number.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who was on the conference, is present.

Mr. WARREN. I do not recall that the chestnut-tree matter came up in the conference at all. I think it is included in the original bill, and was not changed in the Senate. Unfortunately I have not a copy of the bill before me.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to know from either the Senator from Georgia or the Senator from Wyoming whether any provision was put in in respect to the grading and inspection of grain.

Mr. WARREN. I do not recall anything of that kind. I think it did not come before us.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. On amendment numbered 15 I notice the Senate conferees receded. The House provided an appropriation of $26,000 and also provided in amendment numbered 16 "that no printing shall be done by the Weather Bureau that can be done at the Government Printing Office without impairing the service of said bureau." The Senate conferees receded.

Mr. WARREN. The Senate conferees receded on the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that on amendment numbered 15 the Senate conferees receded, allowing an appropriation of $26,000 instead of $20,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senate made it $20,000 instead of $26,000.

Mr. SMOOT. The conferees agreed to $26,000. On amendment No. 16 the House receded, with an amendment inserting, after the word "that," the words "in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. President, I do not understand why the Senate conferees agreed to that amendment. I read before the Senate a letter from the head of the printing at the Weather Bureau in which he stated that he hoped I would not insist upon the amendment proposing $17,500; that they could not get along with less than $20,000. Now the conferees have gone to work and agreed on $26,000, $6,000 more than they asked for in the letter. I do not think it is right; I do not think it is proper.

But, Mr. President, it is so near the end of the month, and as this is quite vital, it seems to me, to the Government business, I will not ask that the report be disagreed to. However, I do not believe that we ought to appropriate the $6,000 more than the department itself said they could get along with.

Another thing, Mr. President, I do not believe that the amendment was a proper thing to do. I do not believe the question of printing ought to be left to the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture. A Joint Committee on Printing of the two Houses have that matter in hand under the law. They are authorized to look after that proposition, and here in this conference report we transfer that power to the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture. If that was to be done in every department, there is no telling where the printing of the Government would begin and end.

As I said, Mr. President, I am not going to ask that the report be disagreed to, but I wanted simply to express my dissent to the conference report as affecting amendments numbered 15 and 16, because I do not believe it is right.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from Utah has expressed himself, because he is authority on that point.

I wish to say that the conferees struggled a long time arduously over that matter, among others. The conferees sat for something like six days, and only ended a few minutes before midnight on Saturday night. I think I may assure my fellow Senators that nothing the Senate put in was surrendered without due attention, and it was only after 11 o'clock on Saturday night, after all its work, that conclusion was had.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I understand amendment No. 58 with reference to an increase in the appropriation for investigations in regard to determining some way of utilizing waste wood, and so on, was receded from.

Mr. WARREN. That was the very last straw that was not surrendered. It was not surrendered until everything else had been settled, and it was impossible to save any portion of it. It was even agreed by the conferees of the Senate to cut it down to a small amount—to $5,000—but the House absolutely refused to give us any amount of it. It was our judgment, whether erroneous or not, that we ought not to longer stand on it, because it meant a final disagreement.

I want to assure the Senator that there was not a failure on the part of the conferees on this side to press the matter. The ground taken against it was that this same matter was covered by a very large appropriation in another part of the bill; that the Forestry Bureau reported against it, and we had the documents before us; that all the laboratory work they had was already provided for in the laboratories; that this had been pretty thoroughly examined with the universities of Washington and Idaho, and so forth. That was the argument of the other side, and the Senate conferees finally yielded in order to save any further delay in the conclusion of the bill.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BRADY. The statement made by the Senator from Wyoming relative to the work being duplicated is not correct. There is no doubt in the world but that that information was given to the conference committee, but this work is entirely different from the work which is being carried on at Madison, Wis. It is field work. It is work that can be done only in the field where the timber grows.

It is very unfortunate, to say the least, that this amendment was rejected. It is recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture, and is recommended by the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, who has charge of this special work that is being done. I think it is more a misunderstanding than anything else relative to the work being duplicated.

I am not personally going to ask that the conference report be rejected on this account for the reason that I do not want to delay the passage of the bill, but I do want to serve notice at this time that I am going to introduce the amendment to another bill at this session and ask the Senate to give it its approval.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, in view of the statement just made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY], I am not disposed to press the objection to the recession. I am inclined to forego whatever objection might be made against the adoption of the conference report because of the recession on this item. It seems that we are going to be here all summer, and there is no special reason why this bill should be agreed to before the 1st of July. If we are to pass a resolution extending other appropriations, we can do it in reference to this as well as the others. If the Senator from Idaho had not made the statement he did, I would have been disposed to use every means possible to have the conference report rejected. I think it ought to be rejected.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. BRADY. I should like very much indeed to have the amendment included in the present bill, but I was under the impression that it would unnecessarily delay the measure, and I believe the Senate will give the matter proper consideration when presented at another time. However, the Senator from Washington has had more experience than myself, and he knows better how these things should be done. For that reason I want him to use his own judgment about the adoption of the report. I simply said that I did not want to assume the responsibility for delaying the bill, for the reason that I am in hopes that when the matter is properly presented to the Senate they will give this very worthy amendment due consideration and adopt it in some other bill.

Mr. JONES. I know the Senator from Idaho is very earnest in his support of this proposition. I know he has given it a great deal of attention and a great deal of work, and it was largely through his influence that the provision was put in the bill when it passed the Senate. The university of his State has been carrying on this work, and the people of our part of the country have been looking to that university, and from the work done there expected good results to come from this appropriation. But if the item goes out of the bill there will be no legislation on this point at this session. The Senate will, no doubt, give it due consideration and all that sort of thing, but it will not be enacted into a law. We will get no appropriation, and this work will have to stop.

As the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] has said, there certainly is a misunderstanding with reference to the work that has been done at Moscow at his university in connection with this work. As he was very instrumental in getting the amendment in the bill and has given very much attention to the subject, I do not feel like taking a position different from the attitude he assumes in reference to it.

Mr. BRADY. While it is quite true that I presented the amendment and was instrumental in having the amendment adopted by the committee, it is also true that my colleague [Mr. BORAH] and the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] rendered every assistance possible in presenting the amendment and securing its passage by the Senate, and we are all exceedingly anxious to have it retained in the present bill, and I will join in any reasonable effort to that end, but I am convinced that the report will be adopted irrespective of any objection or effort we may make.

Mr. JONES. We might have to pursue some method in which the Senator might not be willing to cooperate with me in order to get it done.

Mr. BRADY. I will do anything that is within my power and necessary to get the amendment inserted in this or any other bill during this session, for I believe it was one of the most worthy amendments presented to the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Jones	Page	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Kenyon	Perkins	Smoot
Brady	Kern	Pittman	Sterling
Bryan	Lane	Poindexter	Stone
Burton	Lea, Tenn.	Pomerene	Thomas
Catron	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Thompson
Chamberlain	Lippitt	Robinson	Thornton
Clarke, Ark.	McCumber	Shafroth	Tillman
Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Townsend
Fletcher	Nelson	Sherman	Walsh
Gallinger	Newlands	Shields	Warren
Goff	Norris	Shively	White
Hitchcock	O'Gorman	Simmons	Williams
Hughes	Oliver	Smith, Ariz.	Works
James	Overman	Smith, Ga.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think the importance of this amendment would justify me using every possible way to prevent the adoption of the conference report; but in view of the situation that the matter has gotten into, I am not disposed at this time to do that. If the provision is not made, however, in some of the other appropriation bills or in some other way at this session, I desire to say that I shall use every means in my power at the next session to get provision made for this very important work. There is no more important work in our section which can be done than that contemplated by this appropriation. The work done at the other institutions does not include the work that is done at the University of Idaho. With this statement I will let the matter rest for the present.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I understand the only member of the conference committee on the part of the Senate who is present is the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. Is that correct?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming if he remembers whether there was very much bitter opposition to amendment No. 114, relating to the investigation to be made by the Secretary of Agriculture in regard to the existence of artesian water and other underground water supplies suitable for irrigation in the arid and semiarid regions by boring wells?

Mr. WARREN. That was contended against from the first to the very last, their argument being that the amount of money set apart in other appropriations for that purpose was entirely adequate, and they seemed to have the papers from the department which they had sent for to corroborate it. It seems that the conferees on the House side have the habit, after the Senate has the bill made up, to send for further correspondence and again get letters from each of the departments as to any amendments in the line of increase that we in the Senate make; and, of course, they have those letters and papers before them.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator if he can remember any other bill where money was appropriated for similar purposes?

Mr. WARREN. The language may not be exact, but it was near enough for them, of course, to hang their opposition on.

Mr. NORRIS. In what bill is that?

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator from Nebraska will find a portion of it in the Agricultural appropriation bill and another portion in the sundry civil bill in the appropriations for the Geological Survey. Of course the Senator will understand that I am not giving that as my argument, because I contended to the last for this amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I remember when the amendment was put in the bill in the committee that we had quite a time with it; but it was adopted after some discussion. I learned that after I had left the committee a motion was made to reconsider the amendment, and it was reconsidered. At a subsequent session of the committee another vote was had on it, and then it was put back into the bill. There was some very strong opposition to it, although the Senator, as I remember, was one who favored the amendment all the time.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; and I think the Senator will remember that I was called away. Later on, at a meeting at which I was not present, by agreement the meeting was confined to three or four different matters. I could not be present but, of course, my views were understood to be in favor of the proposition.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me that this illustrates that we are very often legislating at the behests of the departments. It seems, from what the Senator from Wyoming says, that the conference committee were guided to a considerable extent or possibly controlled by letters from the department, even after the bill had passed both the House and the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. In justice to the department I have to say that it is only in response to inquiries made either by a Senator or a Member of the other House that such communications are forwarded.

Mr. NORRIS. I think this particular item illustrates that. This is not a local item. It seems to me it is one of the most appropriate objects for which we could spend money with a view of getting good and beneficial returns for agriculture. This item reads:

> To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the existence of artesian water and other underground water supplies suitable for irrigation in the arid and semiarid regions by boring wells, $100,000.

Mr. President, I repeat, this is not a local appropriation; it applies to no particular State; it applies to no particular locality; but it applies, practically, to every State in the United States west of the Missouri River. It is something, it seems to me, that is eminently proper for the Agricultural Department to do.

But what happened? What sort of a gauntlet did this amendment have to run? In the first place, in the Agricultural Committee, much to my surprise, there was bitter opposition. As I said, it was voted in; then the vote was reconsidered, and finally it was put in the second time. It passed without opposition when it got on the floor of the Senate; but during all that time there were department officials consulted by the Senate committee, and they threw cold water on the proposition. The argument made in the committee was the same argument which the Senator says was made by the conferees; that is, that this is appropriated for in some other bill. I challenge them to tell me where, and I should like to have some one tell me now where this is provided for in any other appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. JONES. I venture the assertion that there is not a dollar appropriated in any other appropriation bill which can be employed by the Agricultural Department or by any other department in sinking artesian wells.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I said, and that is what I still say.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator from Washington is right as to the Agricultural Department.

Mr. JONES. Or as to any other department.

Mr. WARREN. I think in the Interior Department, in the Reclamation Service, they have a right to do so.

Mr. JONES. That is not in any appropriation that may be made for the Reclamation Service. Of course, if they choose to use some of the money of the reclamation fund to make artesian wells as a part of a reclamation project, they can do so, but there is no money appropriated directly out of the Treasury that can be used by the Agricultural Department for the sinking of artesian wells.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Would it not commonly fall within the sphere of the Geological Survey?

Mr. NORRIS. I think not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator knows that I was not on the conference committee, and so I am not familiar with the views there expressed.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that; and I am not criticizing the conferees. I think from what a Senator has privately told me that two at least of the conferees were in favor of this amendment from the beginning and did what they could in conference to have it retained.

Mr. WARREN. I want to say, in justice to all three of the Senate conferees, that they favored it. There is a group of amendments, of which this is one, of which the Senator is speaking; another is as to the gypsy moth; and another one is that in which the Senator from Idaho is interested. It also includes another amendment of the Senator from Nebraska. Those were the last and hardest things on which to bring a settlement. Whatever might have been the opposition of some Senator originally, I want to say that in the committee they all stood by the amendment as the Senate had instructed. That always is a matter of honor with the conferees. I should consider that I dishonored the position given me if I did not stand by what the Senate ordered me to do.

Mr. NORRIS. I am very glad indeed to have the Senator's statement. Of course, I did not intend to say than any member of the Senate conference committee was opposing the amendment in conference. I do not desire to have that construction put on what I said.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming whether the House conferees pointed out any appropriation which they said could be used for sinking artesian wells?

Mr. WARREN. Oh, yes. The Senator will find some. He might deal with them as a Senator as I did.

Mr. JONES. I know we have an appropriation in the sundry civil bill for the Geological Survey to investigate artesian water, and so forth, but nowhere do we authorize them to do it by the boring of wells.

Mr. WARREN. But there is an amount of money, which they claim can be used, which provides for irrigation experiments. There is one hundred thousand or more dollars of that appropriation.

Mr. JONES. Do they claim that that can be used for the sinking of artesian wells?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. Does the department contend that it can do the work?

Mr. WARREN. I do not know that the department does so contend, because I do not recollect the wording of these provisions.

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Wyoming knows as much about these matters as anybody on this floor. Does he know where the department has ever sunk an artesian well?

Mr. WARREN. Oh, yes.

Mr. JONES. For experimental purposes?

Mr. WARREN. Well, experimental service. As the Senator knows there is a project in one of the Dakotas.

Mr. JONES. Yes; but that is in connection with the Reclamation Service.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. That is an entirely different matter.

Mr. WARREN. It is more or less experimental. I think there is also one in Kansas.

Mr. JONES. At Garden City.

Mr. WARREN. At Garden City. I think there is also one other project.

Mr. JONES. That is an entirely different matter. Does the Senator know of any appropriation outside of the reclamation fund that has ever been used for the sinking of an artesian well?

Mr. WARREN. There has been no specific appropriation, so far as I know, that directs a certain amount of money to be expended at any point for boring artesian wells; but under the provisions made for the Geological Survey and because of the fund which the Reclamation Service is using for experimental work in connection with irrigation projects the inference is drawn that this class of work can be done.

Mr. JONES. I wanted to find out whether there had been any authoritative declaration that there is any money that can be used for this purpose, because I want to say that I have tried to get the department to furnish money, but they have always said that they had no authority to use it for that purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. I have done the same thing.

Mr. WARREN. That same argument was presented by me, I may say, and by others in the conference.

Mr. JONES. I wonder the Senator from Wyoming did not have them point out some particular appropriation which could be used for that purpose, so that we could get at it.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that they pointed out those appropriations to us.

Mr. JONES. The department says it can not do it.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENYON in the chair). To whom does the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just one word. Since the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] referred to the sinking of artesian wells by the department in the Dakotas, I know of no work done by the department in the Dakotas in regard to securing water for irrigation purposes except in connection with the Belle Fourche reclamation project. That is not an artesian-well project. There is a vast semiarid region west of the Missouri River outside of this project, in which, as I understand, the department has done no work in the putting down of artesian wells and has made little, if any, investigation along that line. There may have been some investigation, but there has been no work of putting wells by the Government.

If I may be permitted a word further, I do not think that there is any item in this appropriation bill relating to agriculture for which the money could be more profitably spent than in the sinking of artesian wells in that vast semiarid region.

I came into the Chamber since the Senator from Nebraska began the discussion, but, as I understand, the Senator is referring now to the conference report upon his amendment providing for the appropriation of $100,000 for the putting down of artesian wells. I sincerely hope that the conference report will be changed in that respect and that the Senator's amendment will prevail.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I would have asked the Senator from South Dakota, even if he had not interrupted me, the very question which he has already answered, because I was satisfied not only that the Reclamation Service had not been putting down artesian wells with a view of getting water for irrigation purposes, but that under the law, as a practical proposition, they have not any authority to do so. I myself have had that very question up with the Reclamation Service. I was under the impression that they would have authority to do it under the reclamation act; but when I took it up with the officers in charge of the work several years ago and went over it and discussed it with them, they convinced me that in reality they had no such authority.

The object of this appropriation is to give authority and power and money to the Secretary of Agriculture to develop artesian water for the purpose of agriculture, without regard to whether it is public land or privately owned land on which the well is sunk.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield to the Senator in just a moment. It is a well-known fact that artesian water is sometimes found at great depths and that it is necessary to spend a vast amount of money in order to get it, all of which may be lost if artesian water is not found. There are localities in the semiarid belt where if it were demonstrated that water could be obtained, even though it could not be brought all the way to the surface of the ground, if it were brought within pumping distance, say within 25 or 30 feet of the surface, men could put down their own wells; but no one man can afford in that country to experiment for all the community. It seems to me that that is one of the objects of the Agricultural Department, namely, to experiment for the general good of agriculture; and wherever an experiment can be performed that is likely to redound to the benefit of any section of the country, there is the proper place to spend the money to perform the experiment. I now yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I agree entirely with the Senator that this is not a local question; that it is a very, very broad one, a very deep one, and one that it would undoubtedly be fruitful to follow for the great good of the country. Of course one of the contentions of the other side in conference was that it was not properly in the line of agriculture, because, while irrigation leads to agricultural development, the machinery for boring wells and engineering of that kind more properly belongs to the Interior Department and should be provided for in another bill, which the Senator understands provides for that class of work. That was among the arguments that were made against it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will wait until I finish what I had in mind when the Senator from Wyoming interrupted me, I will yield to him.

I said a few moments ago that I had taken the question up with the Reclamation Service. The answer that is made perhaps as often as any other to the request for this appropriation is, "Let the Reclamation Service take it up." It is absolutely impracticable for them to take it up, as was explained to me when I brought the matter to their attention two or three years ago. They asked me, "Do you expect, if you find artesian water in a certain locality, to be able to irrigate, by means of the well to be sunk, a considerable area of the country?" I said, "No; I would not expect that; perhaps if you sink one well you may irrigate one farm, but you will not be called on to dig any more wells, because if it is demonstrated that artesian water is there every farmer in the vicinity will bore his own well." They said, "That is right; there is no question about that; but what authority have we to use the money of the reclamation fund for that purpose? The law provides how it shall be used, not for experiments but to secure water to irrigate land, contemplating the irrigation of large tracts of land; and unless we can have some reason to believe that by sinking an artesian well we can irrigate a large area of country, we have no honorable right to use the money to put down wells." I conceded that they were right, and I believe now they were right. So that when it comes to a practical proposition we can not expect the Secretary of the Interior to take the reclamation fund and use it for experiments of this kind. I now yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I only want to say to the Senator that I do not think there can be any doubt about the fact that the proper branch of the Government service to conduct experiments to ascertain whether artesian water can be obtained is the Geological Survey. I think the experts of the Geological Survey would be far more likely to be able to determine properly a question of this kind than any of the men in the Agricultural Department. We have had some experience in artesian wells in my State, and it is largely a question of geology rather than of agriculture. The value of artesian wells for agriculture we all recognize, but if an investigation is to be made and experimental wells are to be sunk by the Government, from my own knowledge of the work of the Geological Survey I am sure that that is the bureau under which the work should be done. Of course the Senator knows the Geological Survey is a branch of the Interior Department.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, Mr. President, I have always thought that, if this provision went into the law, the Secretary of Agriculture would avail himself of the experts of the Geological Survey. There is not any question that the officers of that branch of the Government service, as far, perhaps, as science is able to determine, can look over the surface and give expert opinion as to the probability of securing artesian water and at what depth; and, as the well goes down and examinations are made of the soil taken out, they can determine as to the probability of finding artesian water and the advisability of going still deeper. But, Mr. President, there is no authority now resting in the Geological Survey to engage in this work, and nobody can cite a single line of law that gives them the authority to do so.

So far as I am concerned, I care not whether the man who sinks the well is called an agriculturist or a geologist; it does not make any difference. I am calling attention to this matter now in order that the Senate may understand the objections which have been made at various times, with a view, when the sundry civil appropriation bill comes in, as it will soon, to offer the same kind of an amendment to it as I have offered to the agricultural appropriation bill, giving the authority to the Geological Survey to prosecute this work, and see what the various opponents of this particular kind of appropriation will have to say when the work is proposed to be intrusted to the Geological Survey.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. I entirely agree with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] that this is a subject matter for the Geological Survey. Senators must remember that the Geological Survey is not a branch of the Agricultural Department; it is a branch of the Interior Department, and hence it is not appropriate to provide an appropriation for the Geological Survey in the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. For information, I desire to ask the Senator a question or two. Have any artesian wells been sunk in the territory which the Senator has in mind?

Mr. NORRIS. I know of a few.

Mr. GALLINGER. To what depth are they ordinarily sunk?

Mr. NORRIS. That varies very greatly.

Mr. GALLINGER. That leads me to the second question. Might not an experimental well be sunk by one department of the Government and water found that would be useless to the farmers residing, say, 25 or 50 or 100 miles from that water?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I presume that is true; but the Senator will no doubt remember that in various localities with which he is familiar there will be a well-defined belt in which there is artesian water. We have in my State, for instance, a quite well-defined strip of country where artesian water can be obtained. It is in a part of the State where no irrigation is necessary and where they have always plenty of rain; but it constitutes quite a stretch of territory, running through two or three different counties, in which the outlines of the artesian belt are very well defined. I have in mind now a town located in Nebraska, in a good portion of which artesian water has been obtained by driving; they do not even need to bore a well; but they obtain the water by driving, and by means of pipes run it all over the houses. Twenty-five or thirty miles from there they can get no artesian water, so that it is a matter, to a great extent, of guesswork.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the thought I had in mind. We are trying to get artesian wells in some parts of New Hampshire, but we are driving them through the solid rock. We know what that means. I had supposed that the mere sinking of an artesian well in soil such as prevails in Nebraska, for instance, would not be experimental and would not be very expensive. I do not know how it is in Nebraska, but they drive these wells, without digging them, in some parts of the country.

Mr. NORRIS. In the portion of the country with which I am familiar, where it is arid and semiarid, you can not get an artesian well by driving. I know of flowing wells down in the vicinity of the line, for instance, between Nebraska and Colorado, a locality where they have some artesian water. I have understood that northwest of there, in Colorado, and probably also in Nebraska, farther north and farther west, there is a locality where they have brought the water up to within 10 or 15 feet of the surface; but I am not thinking of that particularly. Of course, this amendment does not apply to that territory any more than it would to Colorado and Nevada. I have seen in Nevada, for instance, thousands and thousands of acres that would be the most valuable land under the sun if it had water; and I do not know but that experiments might demonstrate that there is artesian water in that locality. If one well located in such a locality should demonstrate the existence of artesian water, that is all the Government would have to do.

The people would take care of the rest, and that country would be built up.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator knows that I am in deep sympathy with the effort to provide for any needs that may exist in the arid and semiarid regions of this country——

Mr. NORRIS. I think so.

Mr. GALLINGER. And I was wondering whether or not an experiment made at one particular point would be of value at a point some miles distant. I recall reading once that Artemus Ward watched the process of sinking an artesian well. They had gone down very deep and had not struck water. He suggested that they go around in China and dig up; that he knew there was water there somewhere. [Laughter.] I suppose it is, after all, a good deal of an experiment.

Mr. NORRIS. In answer to the suggestions made by the Senator from New Hampshire, I will say that it is an experiment. That is the reason private individuals can not afford to spend the money to perform the experiment, for there is always the risk of not getting anything; but if artesian water were found in a certain locality, I take it that a wise administration of the law on the part of the Secretary of Agriculture would dictate that he pay no more attention to that locality; the people would take care of the matter, and it would soon be discovered what the bounds of that particular artesian belt were. I remember when artesian water was discovered in the eastern part of Nebraska that there were a great many wells put down; a great many experiments took place; and it was not long until the outlines of that particular artesian belt were well known. Scientists came in and gave various reasons for it and explained it, and they reached a satisfactory conclusion in their own minds.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, along the line of the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], I want to say that at my town, which is in a valley between two foothills coming down from the mountain, the valley being some 15 or 20 miles long and 4 or 5 miles wide, for a good many years there was talk of securing artesian water. The Geological Survey, after such investigation as they were authorized to make, said there was not any artesian water in that territory, but by and by some man sunk a well. He went down about 800 or 1,000 feet and struck artesian water; and from that time on everybody knows that if they go down about 800 or 1,000 or 1,200 feet they can get artesian water in that territory. That is why we want the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. That is exactly the purpose of this particular amendment. Let me ask the Senator if he can state how much that well cost?

Mr. JONES. I am not certain about it; but my recollection is that the cost ran from $1 to $5 a foot. Of course, when you get down a little way and strike rock, as has been suggested, it will cost more; but I think, on the average, the cost would be from $2 to $2.50 a foot.

In line with this proposition, I desire to say that in a certain locality in our State there are, say, 200,000 acres of land of the same character and constituting a sort of plateau. It is just as good land as the sun shines on, except that it is semi-arid or almost arid. If by the sinking of a well artesian water could be shown to exist at any point in those 200,000 acres everybody would be satisfied that he could find artesian water almost anywhere in the tract. That illustrates again what the purpose of this amendment is.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that illustrates it. I believe that is all I have to say, Mr. President.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I want to say a word relative to the amendment No. 58, making an appropriation of $25,000 for experimenting in by-products in the forests of the West. There seems to be an impression that the Chief Forester is opposed to this amendment. I am convinced that there is a misunderstanding relative to that matter. While he believes that it is a duplication of his work, yet he has no objection whatever to the same. The amendment was very carefully considered by the Committee on Agriculture. I presented to the committee the by-products sent to us by Dean Shattuck, who has charge of the work at the University of Idaho, and the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, Dr. Galloway, who was present at that meeting, joined us in preparing the amendment as it was adopted by the Senate.

The Department of Agriculture has already sent an expert to Idaho to assist Dean Shattuck in this work, and they are now actually doing work out in the forests and on the farms of the Northwest. They are securing excellent results, and in all fairness they deserve every encouragement that the Government can give them in the splendid work they are doing.

I am convinced that the Senate would not reject this report on account of this amendment, and I fear I would hurt our cause more than I would help it by attempting to delay the passage of the bill. I believe that a majority of the Members of the Senate are in favor of this amendment and will assist me in having it adopted in some other bill during this session. For that reason I shall raise no further objection to the adoption of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask that the unfinished business may be taken up.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in the discussion of this bill I can not repeat too often or reassert too frequently the proposition that I believe in the principle of the Sherman antitrust law, and I am willing to vote for any measure which to my mind will strengthen and make more effective its enforcement.

It has been said that the Sherman antitrust law places too great a burden upon the courts—a proposition to which I agree if we are going to leave to the courts, as we have been disposed to do heretofore, the execution of their own decrees. If it can be shown that an administrative body is necessary for the purpose of assisting in the formation of these decrees, to the end that these corporations may be dissolved under the decrees, and that the decrees dissolving the corporations may be carried into effect, I am in favor of that kind of a measure; but I am unable to overlook the fact that for the last several years in this country there has been growing more and more, by reason of the powerful influence which is behind it, the idea that we must tolerate monopoly in this country and provide some means and methods for its regulation. To that kind of a proposition, appearing in all its boldness or insidiously, I am opposed.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENYON in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BORAH. In just a moment. I want, before I close, to suggest that in its present form and with its present provisions in my judgment this measure will ultimately come to be used for that purpose, and will be built into a huge measure which will have for its ultimate object and purpose the regulation and control of monopoly.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. STERLING. I think in the discusion of so important a measure as this there ought to be a quorum present, and I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Goff	Nelson	Shields
Borah	Hitchcock	Newlands	Shively
Brady	Hughes	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	James	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Jones	Overman	Smith, Md.
Burton	Kenyon	Page	Sterling
Camden	Kern	Perkins	Thomas
Chamberlain	Lane	Pittman	Thompson
Clarke, Ark.	Lea, Tenn.	Pomerene	Thornton
Cummins	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Warren
Dillingham	Lewis	Robinson	White
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Shafroth	Williams
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a minute?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I offer an amendment to the trade commission bill. It is very short, and I ask that it may be read, printed, and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secrteary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the bill, on page 20, lines 20 and 21, by striking out the words "That unfair competition in commerce is hereby declared unlawful," and by inserting in lieu thereof the following words:

Competition in commerce, the purpose or effect of which is to cripple or destroy the business of a competitor, shall be deemed unfair competition, and is hereby prohibited and declared unlawful.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the roll call having brought to the Chamber a full Senate, and the manifestation of interest being unmistakable in this great measure, which is calculated to change the industrial policy of the country, I will proceed with the discussion, with the assurance to my colleagues that I shall be as brief as possible.

I find that I am not the only one who has heretofore contemplated with some disturbance of mind the proposition of tolerating these combinations and monopolies and providing a system of regulation. Mr. Bryan, the present Secretary of State, several years ago, immediately after the rendition of the decision of the Supreme Court in the Standard Oil case and the American Tobacco case, in an article in the New York Times, said:

> Mr. Gary, head of the Steel Trust, proposes regulation even to the extent of the regulation of prices, and the principle is indorsed by the Attorney General. The latter compares the trusts with the railroads, argues in favor of regulation of prices, and puts the regulation of prices upon the same ground as the regulation of railroad rates.
> To clearly understand the situation it may be well to suggest that there are now three remedies before the country. First, the national incorporation of interstate industries; second, the regulation of interstate industries by a board of the court, which will have power to fix prices; third, legislation which will dissolve within a reasonable time the private monopolies that now exist and prevent the organization of new ones, thus restoring competition.
> The first and second are really one in essence, since they simply contemplate different means of reaching the same end. Those who advocate national incorporation expect, of course, that the incorporation will be upon conditions which will in themselves constitute a regulation, while those who advocate regulation only, without national incorporation, will reach the same end in a little different way.
>
> The objection to national incorporation is that it is intended to do away with State regulation entirely and compel reliance exclusively upon national regulation. This is objected to—and I think the objection is sound—on the ground that the State is left helpless in case Federal legislation is not sufficiently strict.
> Federal incorporation is not only objectionable, but it is unnecessary. The Federal Government now has power to employ any means necessary for Federal regulation without national incorporation, and whatever Federal regulation is necessary ought to be added to State regulation and not substituted for it.
> The second plan is objectionable for two reasons: First, because it is insufficient—that is, Federal regulation is not a complete remedy. The influence exerted by monopolies is so great that the people would be in a constant battle with the great corporations to see which would elect officials through whom control would be exercised; and no one who has watched these decisions can fail to recognize the helplessness of the masses when they have to fight a vigilant, sleepless group of financiers who have a large pecuniary stake in controlling the Government.

Mr. President, when the time comes in this country when the regulation of railroads is in the hands of a commission and the regulation of the currency is in the hands of a commission, and the regulation of industry is in the hands of a commission, there will be but one fight—only one will be necessary, with such discretion as is lodged in this commission and the commission into which this will finally grow—and that is, to control the commissions.

We passed some time ago a currency bill. It provided for what is in effect a currency commission. The Government of the United States issues the notes and loans them to the banks.

Mr. President, when the industries and the commerce and the currency and the transportation of the country have been centralized at Washington, and that wide and indescribable and incomprehensible discretion given to the commissions which is being given to these commissions, there will be only one fight in politics, and that will be to control these commissions. They are given all kinds of power. The division of power which inheres in our form of government is practically ignored when we reach the commissions, and they exercise almost every conceivable kind of power which a government possesses.

Again, Mr. Bryan says:

> The larger the control vested in the national commission or court, the more important it would be for the trusts to control the selection of the members. If the court was intrusted with the fixing of prices, it would mean hundreds of millions a year to the trusts. No well-informed citizen need be told that with so large a sum at stake the trusts would be active in every congressional, senatorial, and presidential election.
> It has been suggested that the regulation of prices would be socialistic, and there can be no doubt that its tendency would be in the direction of ultimate ownership by the Government of the industries themselves. When the country decides that competition can not be restored—that monopolies are a permanent development of industry—then the people will be face to face with the socialistic issue.

Yes, Mr. President; when the time comes in this country when the people are resolved that they can not destroy monopoly, that they can simply do no more than regulate it and control it through commissions, so far as I am concerned, rather than undertake merely to regulate monopoly through commissions, which is about the same thing as undertaking to regulate a cancer in the human system, I would prefer to try State socialism.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BORAH. In just a moment.

> The Democratic platform outlines a plan, and our new form of government makes this plan easy of adoption. The plan is, in substance, as follows: Let a license be required of interstate commerce corporations—

And so forth. What I was seeking was the justification which the Secretary makes——

Mr. WHITE. What I wanted to know from the Senator from Idaho was from whom he was quoting.

Mr. BORAH. I was quoting from the present Secretary of State, Mr. Bryan.

> The third plan is, to my mind, the only one consistent with history, with economic principles, and with the public welfare. The private monopoly should be regarded as indefensible and intolerable, and legislation should be enacted which will compel the dissolution of all monopolies now in existence and make it impossible for a private monopoly to be created hereafter.

Again, Mr. Bryan says, and this seems to me particularly pertinent here:

> The only reason for combination is to prevent competition, and the only reason for preventing competition is to secure larger profits.
>
> The trust is not an economic development any more than horse stealing or burglary. The man who holds up the passenger on the highway acts upon the same principle that underlies private monopoly. The trust conducts highway robbery on a more polite and more extensive scale, but there is no distinction from a moral standpoint between the trust methods and the methods of the highwayman.
> If the public does not see that the methods are identical, it is because the glamour of financial success has obscured the processes by which the victim's money is extracted.

Again, he says:

> Is it not time to pay some attention to the just demands of the honest business man and relieve him from anxiety and expense at the same time that the country is relieved from the conscienceless depredations of the monopolist? Such relief is possible. The plan embodied in the Democratic platform protects the honest man, restrains the corporation which attempts to control business, and does it without invoking any new principle.
> There is no tenable middle ground between competition and Government ownership. Wherever competition is impossible, Government ownership is necessary. We have our choice, therefore, between the restoration of competition and preparation for Government ownership.
> I have faith that the people, when they understand the trust question, will prefer to rely upon competition rather than to permit private monopolies to exist and then trust to regulation.

Mr. President, any measure, any policy, which can be shown to be in aid of the destruction of private monopoly I will support. I may be entirely in error as to the effect of this measure. I do not believe that I am in error as to what its ultimate effect will be.

Let us go now to the bill itself and see in regard to section 5:

> That unfair competition in commerce is hereby declared to be unlawful.

To my mind this furnishes no standard whatever; and in so far as it furnishes no standard, it favors the lawless and embarrasses the honest. I can not conceive of a term which is more elastic in the mind of the business world than the phrase "unfair competition." I have searched very earnestly for the authorities which have defined "unfair competition," and I have been unable to find any authorities, except that upon a particular state of facts, relating alone to the case before the court, the court has decided under the Sherman law, generally, that that could not be done. Any definition which would fit a state of facts until the determining tribunal had them before it, which would be a guide to a citizen, I have been unable to find.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] called attention the other day to the work on words and phrases. But when we examine this work we find very little comfort and less guidance. Under the heading of "Unfair competition" the authors of this work simply refer to certain cases wherein a particular state of facts was deemed to be proof of unfair competition. But all these cases, so far as I have been able to examine them, are trade-mark cases. The question involved was what was an unfair use of a trade-mark. These were cases where deception and fraud in the use of trade-marks were involved. It needs no argument to show that that is no guide for the man in the general business world.

One of the cases cited was from the Ninety-fourth Federal, and I read a single paragraph from the syllabi:

> Nothing can be legally appropriated by anyone as a trade-mark which, aside from superiority and excellence, popularity, or cheapness of the article bearing it, would practically confer upon him a monopoly in the production or sale of like articles.

Another one of the authorities cited is the T. B. Dunn Co. v. Trux Manufacturing Co. (63 N. Y. Sup.). The syllabi of this case discloses the matter in controversy:

> Such packages not having been the same, and not having been devised so as to deceive or with intent to deceive or induce a belief that they were put up by plaintiff, defendant's use thereof could not be enjoined upon the ground of unfair competition.

The case of Sterling Co. v. Eureka Co. (80 Fed.) is also a trade-mark case. All of these cases were trade-mark cases, and the court in no instance undertakes to define or even to discuss unfair competition separate and apart from the infringement of trade-marks. Nothing therein contained gives the slightest suggestion as to the general rule of business.

The Senator also called attention on yesterday to an article by Prof. William S. Stevens, of Columbia University, and cited it in support of his contention that unfair competition had a well-defined and well-understood meaning. It seems to me, however, that Dr. Stevens, with whose views I in nowise disagree, is authority for the very opposite of that view.

He opens his article by saying:

"Unfair competition" is a term difficult either to define or explain. To different individuals it connotes different things. The lawyer's view of unfair competition, for example, is based upon the statutes and the decisions of the courts; that of the economists upon economic consequences and results. To the lawyer, a method which is legal is not unfair. To the economist, on the other hand, legally per se is no criterion of fairness. The opinions of the lawyer and of the economist are therefore likely to be at variance in the case of more than one method. This divergence of views will appear more clearly in the course of this article which is written from the standpoint of the economist.

In order to determine the meaning of "unfair competition" from an economic point of view it is of service to consider first the meaning of "fair competition."

After a person has performed the inconsequential and ordinary task of determining, in the whole field of human industry, what is "fair competition," the business man will be prepared to proceed to determine what is "unfair competition." That is the argument of the doctor upon this subject, and I agree with him. I do not criticize or find fault with his views. But it must be conceded that it is a rather large field of exploitation to which he invites the business man.

Fair competition in an economic sense signifies a competition of economic or productive efficiency.

You will notice the limitation of that statement.

Fair competition in an economic sense signifies a competition of economic or productive efficiency. On economic grounds an organization is entitled to remain in business so long and only so long as its production and selling costs enable it to hold its own in a free and open market. As the productive and selling efficiency of competitors increases, marginal concerns which are unable to keep pace will gradually lose their market and ultimately discontinue business. But in such an elimination there is nothing not economically fair to all concerned. If all have an equal chance to survive, it is economically proper that those failing through lack of efficiency should be destroyed. The community is entitled to the most efficient service that can be given. Inefficient organizations constitute a burden to the community and no justification can be found for their continued existence.

In other words, Mr. President, fair competition in the mind of this distinguished scholar is synonymous with productive efficiency. It is a term, therefore, incapable, as he plainly intimates, of definition or explanation. It depends upon a thousand conditions and upon environment; it depends upon the mental attitude not only of the judged, but the adjudged. Under such conditions as the doctor describes, the boldest monopoly that ever contributed to a presidential campaign could be secure, and in time they would be secure.

Unfortunately, competition is not always conducted under such conditions of equal opportunity in a free and open market.

Then further along in the article the doctor gave a classification of the things which have been declared to be unfair competition.

1. Local price cutting.

Unquestionably; and it is inhibited now. It is one of the monopolistic practices which is condemned by the Sherman antitrust law. It will add nothing to reassert the proposition in another statute. The courts have repeatedly announced that as true, and we derive the things which constitute unfair competition from the decision of the courts under the trust act.

2. Operation of bogus "independent" concerns.

That has been repeatedly condemned by the courts under the trust law, and is already inhibited. The statute already covers the subject matter.

3. Maintenance of "fighting ships" and "fighting brands."

Which is also a matter which has been passed upon by the courts as inhibited.

4. Lease, sale, purchase or use of certain articles as a condition of the lease, sale, purchase or use of other required articles.
5. Exclusive sales and purchase arrangements.
6. Rebates and preferential contracts.
7. Acquisition of exclusive or dominant control of machinery or goods used in the manufacturing process.
8. Manipulation.
9. Blacklists, boycotts, white lists, etc.
10. Espionage and use of detectives.
11. Coercion, threats, and intimidations.

Those are the 11 subjects which the doctor looked upon as constituting unfair competition and there he ceases. But it is clear that this committee would not be willing to assert that as a code constituting in full what the committee want under any circumstances to be unfair competition.

You have therefore not lessened the field of doubt nor lessened the field of understanding by designating those 11 things which are unnecessary of designation for the reason, as I said, that they are already included within the pronouncement of the courts with regard to these matters. I find no criticism of the article, but I do find that here is an economist who has made a special study of this subject for the specific purpose of trying to define in two articles in a magazine what he conceives to be unfair competition. He starts with the statement that it is difficult to understand, or difficult to define, and difficult to explain.

Mr. President, you are announcing a rule here which will enable the business men of the country to practice almost any kind of competition or else, upon the other hand, it will so circumscribe them by reason of the doubt that they will not be able to proceed until they have had repeated decisions from this commission as to what constitutes unfair competition. What constitutes unfair competition to-day does not constitute unfair competition to-morrow in the business world. Some things which are unfair competition to-day would not have been regarded as unfair competition 20, 50, or a hundred years ago, and a number of things, as business development grows, with different conditions, different views.

The bill further says:

The commission is hereby empowered and directed to prevent corporations from using unfair methods of competition in commerce.

Whenever the commission shall have reason to believe that any corporation has been or is using any unfair method of competition in commerce it shall issue and serve upon such corporation a written order at least 30 days in advance of the time set therein for hearing, directing it to appear before the commission and show cause why an order shall not be issued by the commission restraining and prohibiting it from using such method of competition, and if upon such hearing the commission shall find that the method of competition in question is prohibited by this act it shall thereupon issue an order restraining and prohibiting the use of the same. The commission may at any time modify or set aside in whole or in part any order issued by it under this act.

I call attention to some of the expressions from the courts with reference to this kind of a statute, as to the uncertainty of the language, the ambiguity of the language upon the question of their enforcement either in civil process or in a criminal court. My attention has been called to a case which is often cited—in the Forty-fifth Arkansas, at page 164, the case of Andrew Jackson ex parte. This case says:

The warrant alleges that the petitioner was convicted of the crime of committing an act injurious to the public morals, by leaving his wife, etc. By the Revised Statutes, chapter 44, section 7, it is made a misdemeanor to "commit any act injurious to the public health, or public morals, or to the perversion or obstruction of public justice, or the due administration of the laws." We are not aware that this act has ever been judicially questioned or ever in any case heretofore enforced. It has trickled down unnoticed in practice, through all the digests, and finds its place in Mansfield, section 1961. For want of something more definite, the justice of the peace has brought it now to bear upon Andrew Jackson, and it must be noticed.

We can not conceive how a crime can, on any sound principle, be defined is so vague a fashion. Criminality depends, under it, upon the moral idiosyncrasies of the individuals who compose the court and jury. The standard of crime would be ever varying, and the courts would constantly be appealed to as the instruments of moral reform, changing with all fluctuations of moral sentiment. The law is simply null. The Constitution, which forbids ex post facto laws, could not tolerate a law which would make an act a crime or not, according to the moral sentiment which might happen to prevail with the judge and jury after the act had been committed.

Analyzing this warrant we can not find that it sets forth any offense as the ground of commitment. We think the honorable chancellor was mistaken in his view of the law and should have held this commitment void, as he had rightfully held the former was.

Mr. President, what are you doing with this commission except establishing a censor for morals in the business world for right conduct, for right action? To enforce fair competition is to practically oversee the moral conduct of all men engaged in a business in which they have a competitor.

I want to say in this connection that if this law should become effective, and if you should make it a success from the standpoint of reviewing everything that every citizen might consider unfair which he should present to you, there would be no end of the expense and of the cost of the number of officers, agents, and parties who would be engaged in the performance of this work.

As I said the other day, Mr. President, the best enforcement of the law in this matter is the individual himself. The trusts for a long time did not take much concern in regard to the proposition that if a man was injured by a monopoly he could recover treble damages. But after the Supreme Court had rendered a decision in which that phase of the law was exploited and applied to the labor organizations so as to be effective for its purpose, these suits against monopolies are springing up by individuals all over the country. If a monopolist understands that if he injures a man to the amount of $10,000 by unfair practices—by monopolistic practices such as are now defined in our decisions—the man injured may turn around and recover from it $30,000. It is going to be the most effective and powerful instrument for the dissolution of monopolies in this country that we can possibly have. I would rather have the countless hundreds and thousands of men who were injured by monopolies contending for the enforcement of the law than any commission or any public institution you can possibly create. Under this proposed law, if a man has been guilty of unfair practice what you do is to say to him, "Go thou and sin no more." No punishment for past deeds, no reparation to the injured party.

With reference to the question of the expense of bureaucratic forms of government, commissions, and so forth, in 1894 the United States Government employed 247,000 persons. In 1914 the same Government employed 712,000 persons. In 1894 the population of the United States was 66,000,000. In 1914 the population of the United States was 95,000,000. In the same time that the population has increased 47 per cent the number of employees has increased 186 per cent. Yet men speculate about the cost of living, and the taxes, and the fact that we can not get enough taxes by an income tax and a revenue tax and every other kind to keep the Treasury from going to a deficit.

I ask those who are favoring this bill to contemplate what in 10 years from now or 20 years from now will be the amount appropriated by the Government of the United States to bring public lawsuits and to adjust the competitive conditions of business in this country if, indeed, this proves to be a workable proposition.

But, further, Mr. President, with reference to some of the decisions on the question of uncertainty, in the case of Cook versus The State, Twenty-sixth Indiana State Court Reports, page 278, it is said:

> There must be some certain standard by which to determine whether an act is a crime or not.

As I understand the proposition, this is not made a crime, simply unlawful, but the principle of ascertaining what is the rule or standard by which business is to be guided is ascertained by reviewing those authorities in which the court has held that similar language was too uncertain for enforcement.

> There must be some certain standard by which to determine whether an act is a crime or not; otherwise, cases in all respects similar tried before different juries might rightfully be decided differently, and a person might properly be convicted in one county for hauling over a turnpike in that county and acquitted in an adjoining county of a charge of hauling the same load on the same wagon over a turnpike in like condition in the latter county, because of the difference of conclusions of different judges and juries, based upon their individual views of what should be the standard of comparison of tires, derived from their varying experiences or the opinions of witnesses as to what difference of width of tires would constitute one wagon a narrow-tired wagon and another a broad-tired wagon.
> If it should be said that the question as to what is a narrow-tired wagon is one which may be determined in a particular case by the jury trying it, under proper instructions from the court, can we hold that the court in its instructions could lay down any principle or rule which would obtain in all such cases throughout the State? If so, can this court indicate what should be the scope or tenor of such instructions? The phrases "narrow-tired wagon" and "broad-tired wagon" are not technical phrases having a peculiar and appropriate meaning in law, and they are to be taken in their plain or ordinary and usual sense. Thus taken a narrow-tired wagon means a wagon having wheels with tires which are narrow, while a broad-tired wagon means a wagon having wheels with broad tires. If tires of particular widths be compared, it is easy to say which is comparatively narrow and which is comparatively broad, but without any prescribed standard it is impossible to say as a matter of law that a tire 2 inches wide is certainly either a narrow tire or a broad tire.

The Supreme Court has said in Ninety-second United States, page 214:

> "Every man should be able to know with certainty when he is committing a crime." (U. S. v. Reese, 92 U. S., 214, 220; 23 L. ed., 563-565.) This obvious duty must be performed by the legislature itself, and can not be delegated to the judiciary. It may doubtless be accomplished by the use of words or terms of settled meaning or which indicate offenses well known to and defined by the common law. Reasonable certainty, in view of the conditions, is all that is required, and liberal effect is always to be given to the legislative intent when possible. But when the legislature declares an offense in words of no determinate signification or its language is so general and indefinite as that it may embrace within its comprehension not only acts commonly recognized as reprehensible, but others also which it is unreasonable to presume were intended to be made criminal, the courts, possessing no arbitrary discretion to discriminate between those which were and those which were not intended to be made unlawful, can do nothing else than declare the statute void for its uncertainty.

Justice Brewer, in a case in Fifty-second Federal, page 917, says:

> But in order to constitute a crime the act must be one which the party is able to know in advance whether it is criminal or not. The criminality of an act can not depend upon whether a jury may think it reasonable or unreasonable. There must be some definiteness and certainty.

Mr. President, I should like to see the legislation in regard to the trust question confined to such statutes as would have for their object and purpose the enforcement and execution successfully of the law which we have. I had supposed from the nature of the bill which is now pending before the Judiciary Committee, that the prime object was to secure legislation which would make more specific and certain the execution of the Sherman antitrust law. If this bill were confined to the subjects which are necessary to be considered in the administration of that law, in view of the decisions of the courts I would be willing to support it, although I believe all that could be done by additional provisions of the law creating the Bureau of Corporations. If that department were enlarged by some additional provisions to the law so that there would be an expert in the department having the sole business of overseeing the execution of judgments and decrees rendered under the Sherman law after they had been entered, I believe that it all could be done with very little expense. This bill we must concede is a very extensive proposition, or will be, and if it can be accomplished in the other way with less expense it seems to me it would be a wise thing to do.

Mr. President, even as early as the days of Anacharsis it was said, "Laws are like spider webs, and will, like them, only entangle and hold the poor and weak, while the rich and powerful will easily break through them." Severe and sardonic, but of peculiar and scathing pertinency just now. Legitimate business and honest industry have a just complaint against the Government. We are piling statutes upon statutes and rule of conduct upon rule of conduct, while we enforce and execute our laws with no regard for consistency and often with a keen regard for political exigencies and with notorious favoritism. Thus honest and legitimate business is enmeshed in a wilderness of laws, made the plaything and the puppets of politics, while dishonest and illegitimate business—monopoly—in its brazen impudence, purchases favors by campaign contributions and thus "easily breaks through." We have in this country arrived at, or seem to be closely approaching, the time when the organizers and creators of monopoly are to lay down the rules and fix the regulations by which they are to carry on business.

The vast majority of the business men of this country are willing and anxious to do business on an honest basis. They believe in honesty as the best policy as a business proposition. They will obey any law that rests in feasibility and reason—any law that business can obey and exist. The laws which we pass ought to take this fact into consideration. But we do not do so. We legislate upon the theory that business is morally bankrupt, as it seems to bid fair to be financially bankrupt. We seem to be reaching out with commissions and inquisitorial bodies to oversee, superintend, and police every business man and every line of business in the United States. We have a penchant just now to see how our business will look when incased in the strait-jacket of a bureaucratic system. When a wrong is suggested, instead of making and enforcing the law as to those who violate it, we create a commission with many officials, a retinue of clerks, and special agents to oversee at great expense to the taxpayers those who violate no law, while those who do so are occasionally and spasmodically prosecuted, and when prosecuted the prosecution generally stops on the hither side of effectiveness.

We are either unable or unwilling from sheer political cowardice to execute the laws against monopoly, against the few who ride roughshod, booted, and spurred over their fellows in a business world. We make a pretence to the multitude of doing our duty by enacting a few more laws while the multitude is suffering, not because of the lack of laws but because of the failure to execute what we have. We hope in this way, apparently, to satisfy the interests who pay the campaign expenses and to delude and chloroform the suspicions of those who cast the votes. What we need in this country now above all things is the execution of our laws rather than the enactment of more laws.

There are few men in this country, very few compared with the ninety-odd million of people, who have created vast combinations and monopolies, who are constantly in violation of the law. They have organized and created these monopolies in such a way that even the sinister and slippery method in which they did it disclosed their consciousness of guilt while they were doing it; and yet in order to get these few men who have demoralized the business of this country by the monopolies we create here a commission which has to do with every legitimate industry and every business in the United States.

To my mind it is a mistaken policy, and I have never understood the President's message nor a single word that the President ever wrote to be in support of such a thing. I know that he said during the campaign—

> I don't want a smug lot of experts to sit down behind closed doors in Washington and play Providence to me. * * * I am one of those who absolutely reject the trustee theory—the guardianship theory. I have never found a man who knew how to take care of me, and reasoning from that point out I conjecture that there isn't any man who knows how to take care of all the people of the United States, I suspect that the people of the United States understand their own interest better than any group of men in the confines of the country understand them. * * * If any part of our people want to be wards, if they want to have guardians put over them, if they want to be taken care of, if they want to be children, patronized by the Government, why I am sorry, because it will sap the manhood of America.

His idea, as I understand it, was not to tie the whole business world up with overseers and policemen, not to have a superintendent for the average honest citizen throughout the United States, but to give business its freedom, to destroy monopoly, to release the unbounded energies of the average citizen and depend upon him to be both honest and successful.

I am a supporter of that kind of a policy. I do know, Mr. President, that those who advocate this measure have not in view that which I think will be the result and effect of it, but if this commission is going to have any business in the world to discharge and it proves a success in the end, that is precisely what will result—the business of the country will come to this commission for authority and direction.

Mr. President, I would like to see at the close of this session the passage of a national incorporation act, and certain provisions which I deem to be essential for the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law, and then I would like to see the announcement made that the monopolists of this country must obey the law as laid down by the Supreme Court, and that neither a plea of business condition nor a plea of business confidence or lack of it would deter the enforcement of the law with reference to these great monopolies. I do not believe that it will help the situation to send out a roving commission to superintend or supervise, to oversee and police the hundreds who are not violating the law. I do not think it will help business a particle to have in the statute an uncertain provision with reference to unfair competition. I think that which will bring about what we must ultimately have—to wit, the destruction of private monopoly—is the announcement that private monopoly must go. And let us not forget that the owners of private monopoly distinctly understand the decisions of the Supreme Court now to that extent that they know that they must go if those decisions are carried into effect.

Let me recall to you a piece of history which some still living helped to make, and all of us have often read. For 40 years we compromised and dickered with human slavery, procrastinated and side-stepped, apologized for or defended the institution. We were afraid that to destroy it would destroy business and involve the country in financial distress. We tried the Missouri compromise, the fugitive-slave law, the Dred Scott decision, and squatter sovereignty. We searched our false and cowardly hearts for justification of the pernicious doctrine that one man should live off of another's toil. We scoffed at the moral law and falsified the Scriptures until the whole Republic reeked with inhumanity and venality and a whole people seemed enmeshed in cowardice and crime. But in that hour there came into camp a strange, ungainly figure from the ranks of adversity and poverty, with his simple but living faith—a house divided against itself can not stand. From that hour slavery was doomed; the sacrifice had to be made, and it was great; but slavery was doomed. The age of compromise and procrastination, of moral obliquity and intellectual cowardice, had passed. Monopoly is ten thousand times worse than black slavery; it is the father of class domination, the molder of chains both for the body and the soul, and can not exist in any form with safety to the people in a Republic. A Republic is strong enough to destroy, but never could be strong enough to regulate monopoly. The human system may survive the knife, but it never can survive the subtle encroachments of the insidious hunger of disease. Some of these days all political parties—because the people will rise in their might—will take up this proposition of monopoly, and declare in terms unmistakable that a Republic and monopoly can not exist under the same flag; will declare that we will put the man in jail who organizes a monopoly and practices monopoly as quickly as a man who organizes a combination of thieves and takes our property in another way.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I shall occupy the floor for a few minutes and will then give way to the able Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], who, I understand, desires to address himself to some of the distinctive legal features of this measure.

No man in the Senate can hear with more pleasure the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] than myself, and while I am not always able to give my approval to his conclusions, no man can accord to him sincerity of conviction in the announcement of premises more readily than I. I am particularly moved to a consideration of the things to which he alludes in referring to the extent of monopoly in this country, and I am interested to recall that the denunciation of just such monopoly has for years come from the Democracy and been made by men of no less sincerity of purpose and of no inferior patriotism to that of the Senator from Idaho.

A single reply to the Democrats came from those who had least regard for public opinion and none for the right to express it. It was the hurled-back charge of "demagogue" or "anarchist" against every Democrat crying out the danger of these evils. If there had been more heed in this country to the warnings which have been given by Democracy against the encroachment of private monopoly, there would not have been need today in this great body for any man to defend or assail legislation having for its object the remedy of those monopolies and the restraint of those who continue to execute the infamy upon the citizenship of this country which monopoly permits. Let it be now recalled that Republican administrations for the last 20 years have licensed by law these monopoly privileges which now Democrats and patriotic men of all parties alike condemn as they seek to rescue their oppressed countrymen.

There is no real citizen of this country desiring the welfare of his Nation but will agree with the anathemas hurled by the able Senator from Idaho. They join with him in all the condemnation that the splendor of his utterance flames around this hideous object and behold with him the frightening vision which he conjures up to the horror of this honorable body.

But, Mr. President, who and what did this thing? I answer. It is by and under laws upon the statute books under which these institutions have taken their shelter and their license. They were passed under administrations which denounced the Democracy because it sought to avoid the very evil which is now put upon the Republic and which eminent Republicans, such as the distinguished Senator from Idaho, confess need curbing in some instances and destruction in others.

So far as I am concerned, I wish to be very frank, and unreservedly to say that by principle I am opposed to the form of legislation which finds its way into this Chamber to-day and which is traveling fast upon the heels of similar kind that has been pacing and romping the circle of Congress for the last five or six years under the guise of remedies of national wrongs. It is to be regretted, Senators, that there is a tendency, whenever the mind is aroused by a public wrong, to remedy that public wrong by committing a greater public wrong in the form of the remedy. I deplore that there should be upon this country a general atmosphere of consent that the Federal Government should constitute itself a pater familias of each citizen of the Government and arrogate to itself power to remedy every conceivable wrong, real or imaginary, of any citizen of the Republic, however limited in operation to the domain of his local abode. The older and greater doctrine, and that more noble institution of home rule, by which a man may be regulated by his State within the State where he lives in the extensive privilege of its own police power, has been wholly abandoned, and the theory upon which this Government has so long survived is to be forsaken and forfeited, while we are to be rushed into the mazes of all the confusions and of all the disasters which the theory of centralized government ever project upon the citizen wherever it is fostered by privilege and upheld by power.

No great evil upon government has ever been successfully perpetrated save as it has introduced itself under the guise of necessity and blessing. No great departures from the constitutional theory of government—which long having been tried and long proven successful—have ever been entered upon save through that specious excuse of the immediate emergency which is justifying the exception.

EVIL OF PERSONAL DISCRETION IN GOVERNMENT.

The able Senator from Idaho has laid his finger clearly upon that element of weakness that is in all such legislation as this which new conditions have forced the Democracy and the Senate to bring before the country. It is the vesting in any centralized set of men the uncontrolled personal discretion to say wherein certain acts are within the law and when such shall be regarded as excluded from it. It were better by far that we could have certainty of method of proceedure, exactness of definition of what makes offense—all stated with absoluteness in a statute. It would be more satisfactory that there should be specified in every law the particular things which are denounced, the things which are permitted, the penalty for the violation of the things denounced, and the privileges accorded to the things which are obeyed.

This form of legislation was the early standard of legislative bodies, as the distinguished Senator well says. He need not have gone back so far as his classics; he could have reverted to the first chapter of his Blackstone to recall that we are taught that the three great elements of legislation are permanency, uniformity, and universality.

Yet, Mr. President, there can be no permanency in any legislation that rests solely upon the variable and shifting discretion of the opinions of mortal man. There can be no universality, because any other set of men similarly situated will vary their judgment according to the change of affairs which have been introduced into the arena of action. There can be no uniformity unless the Government is so constructed that that which will apply in one place of government under certain conditions would apply to all of the Government in every part of it under the same conditions. With 48 States of the Union, with the varying demands on the part of those different Commonwealths, the changeful needs of our countrymen, the effect of geography, the production of soil, the tastes of men and their political inclinations, it is almost an impossibility to assume that any one set of defined expressions, such as the able Senator points out as necessary to this bill, could ever have uniform application to each of these States, be universal in that application to all of the conditions, or become permanent in the changing modes and methods of the operation of business and government.

How, then, in view of these facts, shall you remedy the apparent wrongs to the people caused by various practices in different localities in the light of the conflict of local complication and local method of operation? There is but one way. It is to adopt in legislation some general phrase acknowledged and defined in law to which men of honor, wisdom, and discretion may measure or square the complained conditions and, deciding upon them all, render judgment in justice accordingly.

Mr. President, I concede that there is much ground for the fears of the Senator from Idaho as he expressed them, that confusion may arise in some quarters as to the meaning of the law until this body, to whom its keeping is committed, has rendered a definition and given an illustration upon different arising facts by their decisions of the meaning. I also readily concur in that other fear, that men will hesitate lest the conduct they are about to perform should be afterward denounced as being within the general application, and they would be nervous that the Federal Government, in the exercise of its powers, would intrude itself upon the personal discretion in the discharge of their own private business according to their own private codes of honor. But I want to say to the able Senator from Idaho, in this notable presence, that I want the responsibilities for this new intrusion by the Federal Government into this field of supervision of private and personal conduct of the citizen in every State placed right where it belongs.

If it were left to my school of thought as a theory of legislation I would not support this measure, nor any of its kind. If I had the choice or opportunity to take that which I know would be its better—the local regulation of the institutions within the local States where they are incorporated and draw their life and enhance their value—there would I repair for remedy.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THIS CENTRALIZED LEGISLATION?

These eminent gentlemen who are now complaining about Federal introduction into their private affairs and Federal intrusion upon the commerce of the country, whom, I ask, have they to blame if such an era has been brought upon them? I say, themselves; and I ask all my colleagues in the Senate to hearken to what I feel will be a statement that no just man can say is colored with partisan prejudice or political bias.

Mr. President, I charge that every effort which has been made on the part of the States to regulate any corporate concern within their midst and to pass fair laws looking to their regulation has been met by those large institutions with a protest and appeal to the Federal courts upon the claim that the local legislation was a violation of the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, or as taking property by confiscation. Then the general anathema of condemnation designated "unconstitutional" would be called up from the depths of legal mystery in order to apply to and confound the undertaking. So successful in instances and so numerous were they that they gathered strength with their march and defeated every such undertaking in every State by the accommodating Federal court which would enjoin legislation of the different States that sought by moderate methods to restrain these extremes of persecution on the part of these individuals and corporations. These are the institutions characterized by the able Senator as baleful, sinister, and disastrous to the liberty of this country.

May I illustrate a few instances arising to my mind?

INSTANCES OF USURPATION.

First, there came the States of North Carolina and Alabama, in the South, which introduced upon themselves a mere State regulation touching freight rates in matters of local concern for their local citizenship. A Federal judge, under the theory that these regulations were not a guaranty to the railroads of fair return, and, because it was not a guaranty of profit, such was "taking property," under the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, enjoined the execution of the law, nullified the statute of sovereign States, paralyzed the arms of executive and constabulary. Further, it took steps to imprison editors and other citizens as criminals because they dared to criticize this Federal usurpation and dared cooperate in behalf of local home rule in a local sovereignty of their State government.

Then came following, as we remember, the great State of Minnesota. Its legislature passed local legislation to control the charges in freight rates and fares of passengers, and to give warehouse protection, and accomplish other regulations in the State on purely State institutions operating in the State. Then the Federal court was resorted to by these corporations seeking to escape all law. Why? These large business interests, not willing to be bound by the law, coming directly from the votes of the voter through the legislature, in moderate regulation, sought to overturn the sovereign State, to defeat the will of the voter, to destroy the legislative enactment, and to take refuge, as was the custom, to the safe haven of a Federal court. There in the State of Minnesota, a Republican State—as I have also alluded to Democratic States—these officers of the law were restrained; the very able officer of the law, the attorney general—now the able Senator Mr. CLAPP—vested with power by the votes of his people, sworn to uphold the law under the constitution, was prohibited from executing his solemn oath before God at the instance of a Federal court under the motive power of these "business institutions." These were willing to destroy a sovereign government that they might execute their purpose of avoiding all forms of regulation of their conduct and escape obedience to all law. We found the decisions of the Federal courts in those cases paralyzing Minnesota.

Then an effort was made in the States of Kansas and Oklahoma merely to pass laws that had for their object the protection of local depositors in local banks from the robbery and embezzlement by officers of the bank speculating with the depositor's money. This law provided a certain percentage of deposits as an insurance fund—a bank-guaranty law. What became of these laws? Hardly had they asserted themselves until the same "business institutions" that demanded that the States should no longer control their own affairs and should not be so impudent as to assume to exercise regulation or control over these large interests that went by a corporate name, mystic and attractive, utilized for stock selling and bond swindling—these went into the Federal courts and enjoined the banks from protecting their own depositors upon the ground, among others, that it was "unconstitutional." Ah, that word, like charity, was supposed to cover a multitude of sins—as against them. These favorites of Federal usurpation held up this particular undertaking of relief year in and year out, while they denied local government and local sovereignty the opportunity or privilege of governing its own people. This was done by crying out that the legislation was "unconstitutional." They asserted that only the Federal Government should undertake these measures of protection—if to be ever assumed. The injunctions followed.

Then Texas passed a law for the purpose of levying a tax upon the railroad properties in the State of Texas; but individuals living in New York, who posed as bondholders, brought action in behalf of these railroad companies in the Federal courts, claiming exemption from taxation by Texas upon the ground that as the railroad cars moved over tracks along the borders of Texas from time to time and commingled and joined with cars in another State, to wit, Louisiana, for that reason were engaged in interstate commerce. That therefore the tax could not be levied against such cars. They were successful in taking from the treasury of Texas the tax which Texas had a right to exact for the protection afforded in the shape of police guardianship to this property. This done under the theory that only the Federal Government should take charge of these institutions, their different muniments, and their different policies of conduct in the discharge of their undertaking as carriers. These cried for "uniformity"—"one master." Need I go further to bring to the attention of the Senate other instances where these gentlemen have availed themselves of the Federal courts to escape regulation imposed by the respective States and all control by the people through law?

Mr. President and gentlemen of the Senate, we have lately seen that so far has this doctrine been carried that these influences have succeeded in having the Supreme Court of the United States—by a construction that I am not able to agree with nor to eulogize, as does the distinguished Senator from Idaho, as a high "expression of duty"—through which it is held now that, if a State passes any legislation looking to the regulation of freight rates within the borders of the State, or to prevent unjust exactions as to rates charged passengers, or to prohibit unfair monopoly or oppression of its people, such legislation is invalid merely because Federal legislation by Congress upon a similar subject exists. Thus by virtue of a sovereignty they find in the Federal Government superseding and excluding that of the State, the State is forbidden to legislate upon this subject for the protection of its people in anywise whatsoever.

Thus a State may have these institutions in its midst; it may protect them with a police power supported by the aid of its taxing power; it may yield up the contribution of patronage to the extent of making millionaires of the owners of the property; but under no condition can these owners be regulated or the law of the State be applied to them to avoid their exactions and prevent great wrongs in the form of oppression upon the people of the State. Yet the people of the same State are denied the right to go to the Federal Government in the same way for their relief against these wrongs, because the moment they step into the Federal courts and ask to have the wrongful rates restrained as against them we can hear them met with the query: "Mr. Petitioner, you live in this State, do you not?" "I do" "This company is a corporation here, is it not?" "It is." "Then you are both citizens of this State, and therefore the Federal court has no jurisdiction as to you. If you have overpaid, sue in the courts; if you have not paid and they are exacting too high tribute, it is a mere breach of contract, sue before your home jury for money if you think you will live long enough to get a hearing." By this policy of discrimination, by this Federal intrusion and oppression, it has come about that there is no other place for a man to go for legislation of relief against oppression at his doorway but to the Federal legislature at Washington. He finds himself here because he has been driven here by the wrongful policies inaugurated with success on the part of these institutions who now seek exemption from the legislation of this body. They denounce the effort to pass Federal laws on the ground that it oppresses them with the system of control. That it is so enlarged and general that, with the application of the law, they will be confused, and with an enforcement they will be harassed. Well, who brought it on them? Who builded this Frankenstein which these gentlemen feel now bind them? They did. We Democrats announce our new adaptation of the Federal centralism—it is that because the National Government has so long allowed corporate power the privilege of oppressing the citizen of the State the citizen of the State must now avail himself of the power of the Government to defend himself against the oppression of corporate privilege.

Mr. President, I remember that, when delivering law lectures in England lately, of seeing a marvelous presentation of part of a prophecy from a distinguished man now passed into that ephemeral thing we call "the fame of the ages." This he said: "Law lords and landlords, and trade lords, the specters you have conjured up have arisen. Rent rebels, strikers, behold the lawless bands; there they are! They are the fruits of the seed you have planted—the nihilist with his bomb, the socialist with his flag, the lawless individual with his methods—they are yours. You summoned up the system by which they could obtain no rights for themselves, and they were then bent on the only thing they knew—retaliation by wrongs against you. Behold you, sirs!" Said the great one, "Hear you the tide? It is the sweep of the water you summoned up. You planted the dragon's teeth; you will hear the roar of the pack as sure as the stream goes seaward."

NECESSITY FOR RESORT TO FEDERAL AID.

Mr. President, what do we see on the part of these gentlemen? After having successfully destroyed every form of local autonomy in this Government; after having, through their agents, been able to destroy the sovereignty of the local State courts; after having denied the privilege to local legislatures to govern their own people; and having exempted themselves from all local form of control within the State, they then fancied they had complete immunity from all forms of law. Then you began to act Did you begin, my brother Senators? No; but the great force behind you began with you. There was that voice in our country reminding you of wrongs, which, because of the failure of local relief, had multiplied in number within the States. These had denied the right of home rule and of self-control. You were then told by the people that since they were denied the right of home rule they were determined to obtain relief at the only place they could secure it. You saw the wrongs perpetrated upon your countrymen; you saw the infamies visited upon your States; you saw the oppression put upon your citizenship by these institutions; then you turned yourself about to find your remedy in the Congress of the United States. Not, sirs, because you believed in the creed of the destruction of the States, but because you were compelled to adopt the only system permitted you that promised relief of your country against anarchy on the part of the ignorant and revolution on the part of the learned.

So legislation then began in the National Congress to a degree that the fathers who founded this Government never dreamed would be assumed; methods of paternalism, systems of concentration of power, having for its object the control of everything a man ate and everything he drank, where he walked and where he went, every system of his life, and this by administrators miles and miles from him, to be directed by men for whom he never voted, whom he never saw, and who had no interest in his life or in his death, in the welfare of his children, or in the prosperity of his household. He was confronted with this emergency and out of necessity he was to yield to it. And here we are, accepting and adopting the best we can to prevent the worst from resulting.

EFFORT TO DEFEAT NATIONAL LEGISLATION.

Then, sir, we ask what did these institutions that now seek exemption from Federal legislation do when there was an honest attempt upon the part of able Senators on both sides of the Chamber to enact legislation that could be said to be fairly within the purview of honest purpose and fair regulation? They then began to denounce the Congress of the United States. They began it eight years ago, and they have kept it up ever since. I want to warn Senators if ever you "lay that flattering unction to your soul" that you had capacity to prescribe regulations or the ability to shape legislation or that you had in any degree merit which would serve in the Senate with patriotism or ability—I warn you to behold the criticisms of yourselves and the source whence it comes and feel your insignificance (?). Behold through these estimates of you how "degraded" you have become. Who are these "business men" who have been sending to this body their petitions of defiance against any form of legislation looking to the regulation of their wrongful conduct? They are those who having exempted themselves from any State control or local home rule regulation—now demand exemption from Federal regulation; immunity from all law—as their privilege.

When President Roosevelt saw this impotent condition of the States, he sought to have a bill passed in Congress looking to the regulation of the railroads. After the railroads had avoided local control by the legislatures of the States, these masters of them hovered around the Senate with their emissaries—committees and their lobbies; they shadowed the House of Representatives like black omens; they followed the legislators with annoyance wherever they could; they maligned them wherever it was possible; and misrepresented many men in public life wherever opportunity afforded. All this with a view of defeating the railroad-regulation bill and any form of regulation whatever. Then went forth, as goes forth now, the cry that such legislation meant disaster to business; it meant destruction of honest railroad industry; it was a direct assault at the integrity and purpose of business men. President Roosevelt was compelled to rely upon certain Democratic Senators to assist him in his undertaking, and, with the aid of certain independent Republicans, the legislation found its way to the statute book. Have the railroads been destroyed? Has business been decimated? Have these men been sent to bankruptcy? Has that dissolution hung like a cloud and burst with disaster upon us? Not at all. But we have the very same men who were busy denouncing us, hurling anathemas, and uttering curses, now confessing that the legislation was of great relief, was of great benefit, and that now they realize the great error they made in denouncing the President and Congress in their effort to circumvent this form of regulation.

Then, if we recall, when there was another move made on the part of this body looking to mere commerce regulation, to prevent the rebate system, and the Elkins law was before the body, there came the same swirling cavalcade denouncing this attempt. "It was destructive to business interests." "It would destroy the great corporate welfare." "It would rob the railroads of their honest earnings and their honest industry, as well as their earnings." "It would destroy the laboring man." "It would bring a holocaust generally upon the Nation." And thus we had the same audacious and daring form of intimidation attempted upon this body then as now.

What did it avail? Courageous men, animated by a nobler purpose than serving a temporary expediency and too courageous to yield to such frightening aspects, passed the legislation, and to-day we have admitted by these men the benefits of the legislation and the accrued welfare of the citizen; and these very men who denounced it then, as those who are denouncing the attempt now, concede that that which Congress did was to their welfare and to the advancement of commerce.

Then, when we passed the banking and currency law, how these business bankers denounced it as a performance of ignorance and destruction. Then, when it was passed, how they fell over each other to praise as a blessing what they had tried to prevent. Then many who had cursed the effort tried to get the appointment as one of the administrators of the system. Such hypocrisy was not calculated to awaken respect here nor confidence from the citizenship of the country.

TRICKS OF MASTERS OF FINANCE.

Now, Mr. President, we contemplate what many of these gentlemen masters of finance did to deprive themselves of public confidence before the face of an astonished Nation. Mr. President, all corporations are not dishonest; all business men are not tricksters; but the Holy Scriptures hath it, in the ancient doctrine of the fathers, that the sins of the fathers descend to the children. I am not able to see the justice in that ancient Mosaic theory, yet I do realize that it was proclaimed by a very high source. These corporations which have been criminals in this Government and these business men who have played the trickery upon this Nation have, whether consciously or not, transmitted to the innocent ones the fate of their own conduct and the results of their own offenses.

Who are these men who have brought this Republic to a point where it no longer has confidence in corporate management and has serious suspicion of all business undertakings? Do these "business men" forget that the great insurance concerns of this country, managed by certain "business men," seized thousands and thousands of widows and orphans and placed them as victims upon the altar of greed and avarice, as these men robbed these helpless children and defenseless women of the money that was left for them by their parents and husbands, while these business men appropriated this money to their own guilty uses? How they builded castles along the Roman Campagna to emulate Lucullus of the ancient day, and upon the hills of the Hudson, that they might not be outclassed by the barons of the Rhine—all out of the money of these helpless persons. Do we forget how they gave the money out as campaign contributions to purchase elections and buy judges? That then when they were brought to book in investigations how they shifted the blame from one to the other, until finally they all launched it upon one tripping dancing-master millionaire, who, to the pleasings of a lute, played his little part in Paris as he capered before the white-wigged "angels" who are nameless in this particular assemblage, but who in their particular method, held him secure in a foreign country during the period of the American statute of limitations. [Laughter.]

Can you imagine that under these conditions these "business men" would not reap the direct result of this kind of policy, when you recall that while these very trust funds were stolen by these people not one was forced to disgorge nor one of these culprits ever jailed. True, one happened to be indicted, but he held the enviable attitude of exemption before the law. He was able to plead guilty and, in the language of a former code of political morals, "stand pat," while an appellate court, which was well understood to be very favorable to him and his sponsors, rendered the expected ruling, to wit, that he could not be held guilty upon the indictment, giving the usual legal distinction in such cases, to wit, "for that, to wit, whereas the aforesaid gentleman was charged with taking the said $50,000 with his left hand when it should have said by his right opposite his left by which he left little that was right. Therefore as the community, being blind, could not see which hand this handy man so handily unhanded these widows and children of their all, now, therefore, the said defendant goeth without day and is acquit." Wondrous is justice. [Laughter.]

Do you fancy that when that ruling was made, and that distinguished head of great institutions in this country was allowed to escape deliberately in confessed violation of the law that such did not likewise cause a great mass of citizens to see how unjust and discriminating was the law, as the able Senator from Idaho well said, quoting the ancient, "how like a net that caught the weak and let the strong escape"?

If I may be pardoned by the Senator for being so bold as to suggest a more fitting quotation, well might I use the words of the great Shakespeare—

> Plate sin with gold,
> And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks;
> Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw does pierce it.

And such, our great country realized, was the privilege of these big institutions in their safe corporate control of certain courts. Then, sir, do you realize what the management of these great corporate institutions continued to do? The Alton Railroad Co., in my splendid State of Illinois, under the specious management of these financial necromancers, did not hesitate, with the twirl of the wand, at drawing water figuratively as out of the lake that surrounds the city of the corporate home and selling it for stock, crystallizing it as it were into a beautiful display like the stalactites that might fall from the roof of the Mammoth cavern and garnishing it with seductive illustration in the form of a "stock certificate." Thus millions and millions of money, by the great prince of "presto," were drawn from the trusting public without one step ever being taken to punish these great offenders, who took money of the humble and trusting and put it in their private purse and treasury, without giving one cent of return. Yet these justified their conduct with a smile of "corporate management"; and when the State of Illinois sought to punish the offenders we were met by the precedent established in the new theory of the Federal dispensation that it was only for the Federal courts or the Federal Congress to regulate these eminent financial highbinders. It was only little offenders that could be seized by the courts of the States; punished for crime, all they have sacrificed, their reputations destroyed, their wives widowed, their children orphaned—if need be, to the gallows.

Then came the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Co., with one set of gentlemen—the directors and trustees—buying worthless property with the railroad money, then lifting its price twenty times and selling it to their own masters and pocketing the profits, and stalking through the country with their brazen countenances unabashed. They issued more bonds on the falsified value of the embezzled property and sold these by a process of commercial lying to a gullible public who now stand bankrupt and helpless. The stockholders pillaged, the bondholders robbed, and the people to be drained in railroad rates to make up the stealings. Then, sir, when the United States Supreme Court rendered its ruling a few days past in the Shreveport case, saying that the State of Louisiana was powerless to regulate these concerns, as all States must now yield to sole congressional control, one of these culprits did not hesitate to have himself interviewed and say: "How glorious is the judgment of the law! The politicians who occupy places on the State railroad commissions can no longer fiddle with us."

Yes; but these gentlemen have found an arena where there will be some fiddling, and it will not be Nero's performance with the world burning, but with an indignation blazing, and they it will be who will be first sent to the caldron.

NEW YORK, NEW HAVEN & HARTFORD RAILROAD—BUSINESS MEN.

Then, Mr. President, just the other day, before our eyes, we saw another exhibition—one after the other—the New York, New Haven & Hartford, and its nauseous eruption of treachery, trickery, and thieving. I shall not attempt to detail at this time the sickening spectacle that procession of crime presents to the revolting gaze. It is sufficient to know that they performed their undertaking of robbing the constituency of four States, not only through the muniments of exemption from State control and the manipulation of corporate management, imposing upon the credulous as they robbed the trusting, but they did it in the name of the Lord, for they wrote a prayer as their pleading—and put their crime in the guise of an angel weeping for oppressed souls. A distinguished professor of a distinguished college in the East—one of that kind who, standing by their imaginary altars, thank the Lord that they are not as other men are—was purchased for $3,000 to write the prayer in false, delusive, and seductive psalmist language. This prayer was to conjure the innocent citizens from the lowlands of New England and from the heights of the hills to cry "O Lord," in the words of the psalmist. All to induce the people to restrain any further opposition to the railroad garroters smothering New England. Then under the spell of the effect the railroad holy rollers proceeded to take millions and millions from that property and put it in their private pockets to the bankruptcy of the stockholders and to the disgrace of honest railroad management throughout the country. And it was they, if we remember, who, through their certain two spokesmen, not long since denounced an attempt on the part of this honorable body to bring about a fair regulation of these concerns. They had themselves quoted—denouncing the efforts of Congress as "demagogy" and dangerous interference with the "business men."

Mr. President, that these men have brought upon themselves the natural penalty of their own conduct no man can deny. There is no logic to an awakened resentment. There is no philosophy in a wounded heart. There are no narrow limitations of constitutional construction within the souls of men who feel that they have been wronged by those they trusted and betrayed by those in whom they invested all of property and honor.

So the time came when there was no other place where the citizen could have resort but to the Federal Congress; and I regret to confess that I am forced to surrender to a very great degree the very creed of a lifetime's undertakings, in the theory of government, when I adopt this system of a national regulation and a national control over the affairs of a State citizen in purely State affairs. Nor would I subscribe to it under conditions as they now surround us if I were not driven to adopt it as the only means by which my fellow citizen may have guardianship in the property he possesses against the omnivorous maw of these that have previously devoured his kind and to protect my State and my country against approaching anarchy of desperation and revolution of aroused revenges.

THE REAL OBJECT OF THE BILL.

Then what is the measure that is suggested here? It is that "unfair competition" should not be permitted these masters, lest that unfair competition should completely merge out of existence the defenseless and literally devour the weak and leave the citizen no place, no refuge, no succor against a monopoly of trade that grinds him to slavery and his children to poverty.

"Now," says the able Senator from Idaho, and wisely, "the expression 'unfair trade' is not defined in such specific terms as will enable the men who have to administer the phrase to know exactly what is only to be comprehended." I confess the criticism is just, but I have to say that it is better that the phraseology shall be so large and so comprehensive that it shall allow no man to perpetrate the offense upon the weak and the defenseless than that it should be so limited that while it gave to a few the knowledge how to exactly comply with words of the law, it gave to the many the privilege to violate its spirit and escape its consequence, because of the limited words of the law.

Says the distinguished Senator, "The law should have specific terms," and the able Senator reads a decision from the Supreme Court of the United States laying down the fundamental law that legislation should be specifically prescribed in terms. I take no issue with the decision. The able Senator could have regaled his excellent legal knowledge—and to that I readily certify, for I have not been without experience of his eminence in the courts by my personal association—and could have reverted to an old case of United States versus Sharp, which he will find in Peters, where the Supreme Court of the United States laid down the doctrine that all legislation in matters touching crime should specifically define what that crime is, that the citizen may not, of course, go awry and blunder by committing an offense when he did not know what he was doing, and if not so specific the act is invalid.

Correct; but there came a time when there had to be a new form of legislation. Why? The older doctrine of definition, I must tell my learned friend, grew out of the theory when crimes came in two forms—those which we took from the common law of England and those which we were compelled to create in our own country by setting forth the specific act which when done constituted the offense. But, then, there came along a line of business which invented for itself a business phraseology and escaped the constructions of the former law. These found exemption from all the terms of the statutes and, by the invention of this new phraseology, secured immunity from the statutes as they were prescribed upon the ground that their words and acts were not within the words of the law. In this way they always escaped punishment by the strict construction of words, notwithstanding the language of the Scripture that "the spirit maketh and the letter kil'eth the law." Therefore the only thing left for the legislative bodies to do was to adopt their "business" language, the language invented by them, their language of trade and commerce.

Then from time to time the plain man expressed that a wrongful thing was "unfair," and he complained in equity; he complained in justice; he complained to his neighbor; he complained to his friend. From that the courts began to adopt his phrase—not the phrase of the law, not the scientific phrase of statutes, not the refined phrase of construction, but his phrase as he made it and understood it in his everyday walk of life. Then came the phraseology to be adopted as the method of the law, because it conveyed a certain meaning to those who had first initiated it; and to this very hour we have those phraseologies carried on in certain lines of commercial undertakings now defined, well understood, and carried into the decisions with a complete and exact meaning, among which is the phrase "unfair trade."

I will not read books to the Senator nor to the Senate; but I invite the Senator's attention to the construction of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case which involved the very Elkins law to which I referred, where the word "device" is used. The Supreme Court of the United States say that while the word "device" is capable of many and several meanings, nevertheless it has a specific meaning as to devices respecting transportation methods that seek to juggle and manipulate methods of rebates and devices to accomplish them; and having had statutes previously denouncing devices to cheat and swindle, the word "device" is held to be complete and sufficient for the courts or those who administer the law.

Now, I invite my learned friend to a decision that possibly escaped him in the multitude of his labors. Lately in the city of Chicago there was indicted a set of gentlemen, known as the packers, for violating the Sherman antitrust law. These men went before the court upon demurrer to the indictment upon the ground that the law which used the term "restraint of trade" meant nothing; it did not define what particular acts would render them amenable to the statute; what acts or things would be restraint; and that the act was unconstitutional because it was equivalent to making subsequent acts criminal which, at the time, looked fair and just, and was equivalent to an ex post facto application of the statute. But viewing the whole excursion of certain criminal marauders in commerce, anticipating these despots of trade, and beholding a march that they had undertaken across the very ramparts of independence in this country, the court said the phraseology would remain, because it was a phraseology understood in their particular language. That they knew its meaning, and knew when the things they did was within its scope; general as it was, that the words were fitting to that undertaking.

They came to the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal subsequently to all the decisions cited by the able Senator from Idaho, and there sought certiorari and habeas corpus upon the ground of all the contentions made now by the able Senator from Idaho in the legal argument which he now makes before this body. That court declined to accept the contention, and returned these defendants to the forum from whence they came, leaving the action as based upon the ground that the phraseology, general as it was, had a commercial meaning, and that any further specific definition had not been undertaken by the act and could not now be undertaken without confusing the effect and guidance of all the previous precedents established under the Sherman Antitrust Act.

So I say to my learned friend, supposing there should be an attempt made on the part of Congress now to define with specificness the particular things amounting to unfair trade or unfair competition. There would arise just such able lawyers as himself, although I do not believe he would be found among them, because I know his conscientious scruples in matters of public duty, and this would be their argument:—

"We demur to this proceeding, may it please the court." "Why?" says the court. "Because," says the offender, "the legislation has specifically defined what makes unfair trade. It therefore repeals by rejection all previous definitions of such as now found in the law decisions of the phrase." They will say "Congress, by the doctrine of elimination, declined to accept the words 'unfair trade' as previously understood, and adopts a new form of definition." Now, they will say we can do all the conduct previously understood to be unfair in trade, however oppressive, and we are not within this law. We decline to be within the definition as now defined, while we find perfect safety in perpetrating our offenses under the old definitions not now without and not included. Thus you see they will escape all the previous decisions of the courts, and all the things that we seek here to avoid as having been done in the past we would allow those gentlemen to perpetrate in the present and go free from any restraint or punishment in the future.

Therefore I am sure the able Senator will see that while there is much to be said in favor of his contention from the standpoint of abstract reasoning if it were a new question, for the first time brought into the arena of conflict, yet the conditions are such as to form an absolute exception, and therefore it becomes absolutely unavoidable that the only language we can use is the kind of language used in this act. In the words of Riverdale Mills v. Atlantic Coast Line (219 U. S., 186)—

A situation had come about which demanded regulation in the public interest according to the judgment of Congress.

ATTEMPTS TO AROUSE PANIC BY CERTAIN "BUSINESS MEN."

Now I desire to advert to another phase. I refer now to that aspect that since we have undertaken this legislation you behold a certain class of "business" gentlemen throughout this country who first start with the assertion that this legislation will create a panic, and then the next assertion that it will mean great loss and disaster to them personally—and here we are very much interested in what is known as the "psychology of the condition." I quote an eminent authority.

I behold a distinguished banker, distinguished by virtue of having his speeches published more frequently because of the position he occupies than of the matter contained in the utterance, that of an officer of the National City Bank of the city of New York. This distinguished gentleman delivered himself lately of his weekly address in which he condemns the Congress of the United States as a body that is playing with the fate of the Republic, that is bringing to disaster the commerce of the country, that has the daring impudence to attempt to regulate the financiers of America.

Senators, it is shocking to my mind that, sent here by the great people of your country, you would have the daring temerity to undertake any legislation without first crawling upon your knees to the portals of these eminent establishments, and asking what is their pleasure upon the occasion, before you undertake the discharge of your official duty.

We read in the public press what a degree of benighted, pitiable ignorance we are displaying before the country, how lacking in patriotism our every undertaking, how wanting in common sense in all our proceedings; and just as I read that particular speech of this distinguished banker from New York I likewise see the very same speech, in almost absolute words, made by an officer of a railroad company at Hot Springs, Ark., on the very same night, and by a vice president of a banking institution of the city of San Francisco upon the very same night.

Now, I respect exceedingly this inspiration of new-found banquet oratorical skill on the part of these eminent financiers; but I would suggest a more commodious method by which they may circulate the slander of panic and induce the sentiment of fear in their country. That instead of having a speech prepared for them by some skilled newspaper boy, struggling for an existence upon the least of compensation, but who writes excellent English for such oratorical displays of one-night eruptions, that the speech be mimeographed and sent to a few gentlemen with the notice that at a certain clock stroke it is to be delivered upon certain great occasions and delivered to the press as the emanations of financial genius. This would be organization. I suggest that thereafter they may use a phonograph and that some one of their particular chosen spokesmen be selected, that a tent be engaged, and the announcement be made to the country that from this eminent source there is to come forth a great speech upon the disorders of the country, the distempers of Congress, and the ignorance of the Senate. That these distinguished leaders shall, through this particular chosen official, "speak this speech, I pray you, as taught you." Read first the speech of Hamlet to the players, and then emulate it with exactness, and then, in this phonograph, perpetrate it.

There is in this country an inoffensive community of 5 cent moving-picture shows that will illustrate it, if it is accompanied with the moving antics of the swelling orator. Then have it arranged so that at certain times throughout the country it may be delivered with the same consecutive, chronological exactness that these particular addresses are made upon the part of these distinguished gentlemen on the same sentiment which they now deliver to the country to the fright and terror of the Senate and to the trembling sensations of the country at large—and to the snickering amusement of all sensible citizens who know these men.

But I also have another word to say, and that is that these gentlemen who are seeking to hold up the Nation as being misguided and imposed upon, to hold up this Senate and this Congress as unworthy of the respect of this Nation, all as in no wise entitled to the credit of respectability before the world—these men should pause and remember the line of the Holy Law, and behold the beam in their own eye before they pluck out the imaginary mote in another. Let one remember how, in a customhouse deal in New York, this Government was robbed by this great institution of thousands and thousands of money, never responded to, while one of the officials of the Government who allowed that robbery was afterwards made an official of the institution in reward for his generous nature, that could see no offense in permitting the outrage or in taking his specious bribe from the perpetrator.

Do these gentlemen fancy that they are impressing the honest men of this country? Do they think that the humble toiler can not read his weekly paper; that the woman of the house can not read her magazine by lamplight; that the merchant does not keep up with the daily press; that the country at large does not understand who they are, what they are, what they represent? Will they never understand that all their methods have been the same, all their undertakings alike; that they are but a poor army of bad duplicators of a greater race? Unfortunately for these descendants, suffering from the blight of an imagined new-found capacity of oratorical skill, are constantly perpetrating the insipid and ridiculous performances upon the country, under the self-infatuation that such is fascinatingly constructed, wonderfully delivered, and overwhelming in its influence.

Alas, Mr. President, how sad is that estate of new-found greatness when flattered by fools and incited to ridiculous exhibitions by swollen conceit and pompous vanity.

Now, I would say to those gentlemen there is a way to reach this body. It is by an honest, fair presentation of a cause. It is by coming to these honorable men who occupy these seats, without regard to their political alignments, and letting them know the honest views of honest business men, and by letting them have the private views of any private citizen. But that manner of man who masks in the gilded helmet and armor that he has molded out of the gold that has been lawlessly extracted from the hard earnings of the poor and from the honest industry of the country comes branded as a felon before the honest men of the Nation, and his voice is as one who cries from the pit to where his deeds have immured him.

Mr. President, this manner of man will have little influence upon the honest sentiment of the country. He is neither being misunderstood by us nor is he deceiving the country, to which he thinks he speaks.

Now, this legislation, let me say as I conclude, has but one object. It is to speak to that manner of men who heretofore went out and said to their rivals, "You will either join with us, so that we may amalgamate you out of existence, that you shall take such as we shall give you in compensation for your property, or we will beat you to the ground." Then following the threat by conspiring with certain railroads to grant rebates against which the competitor could not live. Then finding himself withering to the ground, the competitor had the only alternative left him by a surrender to that superior power of the brigand in commerce. We seek also to protect against that other kind of man who, having a large banking institution, as demonstrated in proofs evinced here upon hearings, says to competitors, "You shall not have the right of banking houses; you shall not have opportunity to supply customers nor give to merchants a chance to enlarge that business or maintain themselves in the hour of disaster." These who say we demand that when we get men down they shall stay down.

That high-class merchant, that honorable gentleman, that conscientious banker, that faithful railroad operator, that splendid master of commerce, wherever he is, he will need no such guardianship; he will have no punishment. He is the pride of our country. He is the kind of man we point to to show what thrift can accomplish and what honorable life may achieve. But this other kind that brought this Nation to debasement in the last twenty years, and in the last five years so near to revolution that men despaired of liberty and doubted that free institutions could be maintained in this Union—these shall not repeat their offense without responding to their country for the crime committed against freedom and mankind.

Mr. President, I have uttered these observations because of the views just closed of my learned friend, the Senator from Idaho. The Senator more completely expressed in his views the views of all those who might be found opposing this bill. None can improve on his analysis or presentation. I am desirous of infusing confidence in the merchants of our country. I want the great respect of this country to go to the law, and the respecters of the law to be the subject of our admiration and our just guardianship. I want confidence in business. I want the plain citizen to respect the man of honest riches and I want the rich man to respect the industrious poor. The honest corporation is no offender or criminal and the dishonest corporations should know that they will be found out, searched out, and justice meted out to them.

Mr. President, I have not always agreed with my learned friends on the other side in abstracts, but I believe in this matter there are no serious differences. The man in the White House, Woodrow Wilson, may have certain creeds and doctrines that may not meet with your approval at all times, but he is seeking to give freedom an opportunity; to give to commerce liberty; to give to men justice.

We on this side of the Chamber who are behind him often likewise differ from many of his methods and do not agree with all his systems, but with the sincere purpose that animates his life he is coming to the rescue of the Republic, which he seeks to redeem to her old days when she was honored by all men, beloved by all citizens. All good citizens rejoice to cooperate in this high resolve. Under this act we are giving him hearty support, to the end that democratic institutions may still survive, and that this Nation may still be free, giving opportunity to industry, freedom to man, and success to American citizenship, to our glory before the world!

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10523) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 7, 9, 10, 11, 18, 19, 20, 24, 26, 36, 37, 38, 50, 51, 54, 59, 61, 64, 68, 77, 89, 90, 91, 92, 94, 97, 98, 99, 101, 103, 104, 105, 107, 109, 115, 122, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 150, 151, 152, 157, 161, 168, 169, 170, 171, 183, 187, 190, 191, 202, 203, 204, 212, 218, and 224.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 8, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 22, 25, 27, 29, 32, 33, 34, 35, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 52, 53, 55, 57, 58, 63, 67, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 75, 76, 79, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 93, 96, 100, 108, 111, 114, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 123, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 138, 139, 140, 142, 143, 144, 145, 148, 149, 153, 155, 156, 159, 162, 163, 167, 172, 173, 174, 175, 179, 184, 186, 192, 193, 194, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 205, 207, 209, 210, 213, 217, 219, 220, 221, 222, and 225, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$115,610"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$13,034"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit all of the matter inserted by said amendment after the word "Columbia," in line 1; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For constructing a suitable viaduct and bridge to carry Benning Road over the tracks of the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co., and of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., in accordance with plans approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $110,000. And authority is hereby given said commissioners to acquire by purchase, or to condemn in accordance with existing law, the land necessary to carry out the construction authorized by this appropriation, and to construct said viaduct and bridge and the approaches thereto, and to reconstruct, grade, and pave, by day labor or otherwise, the streets, avenues, and ways changed in line or grade or newly created hereunder: Provided, That the cost of constructing said viaduct and bridge, including approaches thereto, shall be borne and paid one-half by said railroad companies in proportion to the widths of their respective rights of way, and the remaining one-half by the United States and the District of Columbia; and said sums shall be paid by said companies to the Treasurer of the United States, one half to the credit of the District of Columbia and the other half to the credit of the United States; and the same shall be valid and subsisting liens against the franchise and property of said Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co. and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., respectively, and shall be a legal indebtedness of said companies in favor of the District of Columbia, jointly for its use and the use of the United States as aforesaid; and the said lien or liens may be enforced in the name of the District of Columbia by bill in equity brought by the Commissioners of said District in the Supreme Court of said District, or by any other lawful proceedings against the said Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co., or said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., or both; and any relocation in the line or change in the grade of the tracks of the Washington Railway & Electric Co. necessary to permit the completion in accordance with approved plans of the viaduct and bridge and approaches herein provided for shall be made by and at the cost of said railway company; and in the event of said railway company failing or refusing to do such work the same shall be done by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the cost to be paid from the appropriation for said bridge and viaduct and collected from said street railway company in the manner provided for in section 5 of 'An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia,' approved June 11, 1878, and paid into the Treasury, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$142,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For paving with asphalt the north approach to the Highway Bridge across the Potomac River from Water Street to the west intersecting park driveway nearest to the Highway Bridge, a distance of about 1,900 feet, and for paving with granite block the balance of the north approach from the west intersecting driveway to the bridge structure and the south approach to the bridge, $27,000: Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to do this work with their portable asphalt plant if, in the judgment of the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, such work can be economically performed by the use of said plant: And provided further, That the said Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to transfer to the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds for the above work any granite blocks removed from streets in the District of Columbia whose roadways are authorized herein to be repaved with a smoother pavement, the cost of hauling the blocks so transferred from the streets to the site of the work to be charged against this appropriation."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$190,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$270,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That this sum shall not be available for the payment of traveling or subsistence expenses"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"In all, for playgrounds, $43,265, which sum shall be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 78, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$2,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 88, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$425,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The proceedings in such case shall be under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter I of chapter 15 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia, in so far as the same are applicable. It shall be the duty of the jury provided for in said proceeding to find as special benefits the increase in value which such reclamation and development has added to each lot, piece, or parcel of land abutting such improvement, and adjacent thereto, and any other lot, piece, or parcel of land in the District of Columbia, which it may find will be specially benefited by reason of said improvement; and of the amount which said jury shall find such lots, pieces, or parcels of land so benefited it shall assess one-half thereof upon such lot, piece, or parcel of land. In determining the amounts to be assessed against said lots, pieces, or parcels of land the jury shall take into consideration the respective situations and topographical conditions of said lots, pieces, or parcels of land, and the benefits and advantages they may specially receive from such reclamation and development, and where any part of any lot, piece, or parcel of land has been dedicated for the purpose of such reclamation and development, the jury in determining whether the remainder of said lot, piece, or parcel of land is to be assessed for benefits and the amount of benefits, if any, to be assessed thereon, shall also take into consideration the fact of such dedication and the value of land so dedicated. The said assessments shall be levied and collected under the provisions of said subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia, and shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and of the District of Columbia in equal parts, and when finally ratified and confirmed by the court shall severally be a lien upon the land assessed and shall be collected as special improvement taxes in the District of Columbia, and shall be payable in five equal annual installments with interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from and after 60 days after the confirmation of the verdict of the jury. Where not otherwise herein provided for, all of the provisions of said subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of said Code of Law for the District of Columbia shall be applicable to the levying and collecting of said special assessments."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 215, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "four"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 216, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "$2,000" where it occurs in said amendment and insert in lieu thereof "$1,800"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 28, 31, 226, and 227.

JOHN WALTER SMITH,
LUKE LEA,
J. H. GALLINGER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

ROBERT W. PAGE,
T. U. SISSON,
C. R. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments still in disagreement, request a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. LEA of Tennessee, and Mr. GALLINGER conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 286) extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia under certain contingencies. The joint resolution makes a continuing appropriation for 15 days from July 1. Unless it is passed, the Government will be embarrassed on the 1st of July to carry on its operations. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may be considered at this time.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 30, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 29, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We turn to Thee, O God, our Father, source of all our longings, hopes, and aspirations, for inspirations, strength, courage, that we may pursue the tasks before us with clear vision, strong hearts, and earnest desires; that we may do Thy will, satisfy our conscience, bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ.

The world again is startled, amazed, confounded, by the red hand of the assassin. Hasten the day, O God, our Father, when all men shall know and practice the golden rule, the art of living together in peace and harmony.

Hear us in the name of the world's great Exemplar. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal as read will stand approved.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal of Sunday.

The Journal of the proceedings of Sunday was read and approved.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia rise?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. To call up the conference report on the Consular and Diplomatic appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Alabama rise?

Mr. BURNETT. I make a point of order that a conference report is not in order on this day. It is set apart for the purpose of suspensions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is rather inclined to think the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia is willing for me to make this request——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Carolina rise?

Mr. POU. I ask unanimous consent that one night of this week be set apart for the consideration of the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. What night does the gentleman wish?

Mr. POU. I ask that on Tuesday, June 30, 1914, the House stand in recess from 5 o'clock p. m. until 8 o'clock p. m.; that the House shall continue in session from 8 p. m. until not later than 11 p. m. During said session it shall be in order to consider in the House as in the Committee of the Whole bills on the Private Calendar to which there is no objection. The consideration of said calendar shall begin with No. 244 thereon, continuing to the end, after which other bills on said calendar may likewise be considered by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the order of business?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I rise to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in reference to the Creek equalization payment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the Creek equalization payment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow morning, immediately after the completion of the reading of the Journal, I may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that to-morrow morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal, he may be allowed to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, on what subject?

Mr. DOUGHTON. On the subject of the effect of the tariff on wool and woolens and the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] last Saturday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I shall not object.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] objects. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and the Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15762) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 908).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15762) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 9, 10, 12, 19, 22, and 25.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 8, 11, 13, 14, 17, 18, 20, 24, 26, 27, and 28, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"INTERNATIONAL BOUNDRY COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

"To enable the commission to continue its work under the treaties of 1884, 1889, and 1905, $15,000: Provided, That $10,000 thereof is made immediately available to resume and continue the work relating to the distribution of water, under the direction of the Secretary of State, and as authorized by and in pursuance to the protocol of May 6, 1896, between the United States and Mexico.

"The commissioner appointed by the Secretary of State under article 21 of the treaty of 1848, and reaffirmed under article 7 of the treaty of 1853, and article 5 of the treaty of 1884, and article 8 of the treaty of 1889, to carry on this work, is hereby authorized and directed to pay the salaries, compensation, wages, and allowances heretofore authorized or approved by the Secretary of State, and any and all persons employed by or under the direction of the commissioner appointed by the Secretary of State to study the questions in connection with the distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande, from the date to which such salaries, compensation, wages, and allowances were last paid up to and including the 30th day of June, 1914, or until said employees shall be separated from the service; and the appropriation made by the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation act approved February 28, 1913, 'To enable the commission to continue its work under the treaties of 1884, 1889, and 1905' is hereby reappropriated and made available for the payments herein authorized and directed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"INTERNATIONAL PRISON COMMISSION.

"For subscription of the United States as an adhering member of the International Prison Commission, and the expenses of a commission, including preparation of reports, $2,550."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 16 of the bill, in lines 20, 21, and 22, strike out the following: "and the expenses of the United States delegate in attending the meetings of the commission"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For the expenses of the arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain in accordance with the special agreement concluded for that purpose August 18, 1910, and the schedules of claims thereunder, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, as follows:

"Salaries and expenses of the tribunal: For the payment by the United States of one-half of the following expenses: For three arbitrators for three months, at $1,200 each per month, $10,800; stenographer for arbitrators, for three months, at $100 per month, $300; messenger, for three months, at $60 per month, $180; traveling expenses of arbitrators, $2,000; reporting proceedings, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and for printing, stationery, and supplies, $500; in all, $9,390.

"For rent of office for joint secretaries, $360.

"Salaries, United States agency: Agent, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $7,500 per annum; counsel, $5,000 per annum; 2 counsels, at $2,520 per annum each; 2 law clerks, at $1,800 per annum each; joint secretary, who shall also act as disbursing clerk, $3,000 per annum; 2 stenographers, at $1,200 per annum each; and messenger, $720 per annum; in all, $27,260.

"Expenses, United States agency: Necessary and contingent expenses, $12,700."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended as follows: On page 20 of the bill, in line 22, after the word "expenses," insert the following: "in Washington City"; and on the same page, in line 25, strike out "$50,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$40,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended as follows: On page 21 of the bill, in line 19, strike out "$150,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

H. D. FLOOD,
CYRUS CLINE,
HENRY ALLEN COOPER,
Managers on the part of the House.
LEE S. OVERMAN,
LUKE LEA,
W. L. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15762) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the amendments of the Senate, namely:

On amendment No. 1: Provides that the salaries for "ambassadors" to Argentina and Chile shall be available for payment of salaries of "envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary" to those countries until such time as the duly accredited "ambassadors" are received by them.

On amendment No. 2: Provides that the salaries for "secretaries of embassy" to Argentina and Chile shall be available for payment of salaries of "secretaries of legation" to those countries until such time as the duly accredited "secretaries of embassy" are received by them.

On amendment No. 3: Appropriates $75,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $50,000, as proposed by the House, for emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service.

On amendment No. 4: Appropriates $15,000, instead of $20,000, as proposed by the Senate, and $10,000, as proposed by the House, for the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, and inserts the language proposed by the Senate modified so as to place the work under the direction of the Secretary of State and to eliminate the language requiring it to be done in pursuance to "concurrent resolution of April 29, 1892."

On amendments Nos. 5 and 6: Strikes out authority to use the appropriation for "Boundary line, Alaska and Canada, and the United States and Canada" for reducing field notes, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 7: Appropriates $2,550, as proposed by the House, for the subscription of the United States as an adhering member of the International Prison Commission, and strikes out authority, proposed by the House, for the permanent participation and expenses of the United States as a member of such commission.

On amendment No. 8: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the appropriation of $1,500 for the quota of the United States as an adhering member of the International Geodetic Association for the Measurement of the Earth.

On amendments Nos. 9 and 10: Provides that moneys received from other American Republics for the support of the Pan American Union may be drawn from the Treasury upon requisition of the "chairman of the governing board of the union," as proposed by the House, instead of by the "Secretary of State," as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 11: Appropriates $500, as proposed by the Senate, as a contribution from the United States to the International Commission on Annual Tables of Constants and Numerical Data, Chemical, Physical, and Technological.

On amendment No. 12: Appropriates $8,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $4,800, as proposed by the Senate, for payment of the quota of the United States for support of the International Institute of Agriculture.

On amendment No. 13: Appropriates for the United States court in China in the language proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 14: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the appropriation of $7,156 for the pro rata share of the United States in the expenses of the Permanent International Council for the Exploration of the Sea.

On amendment No. 15: Appropriates $800, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,300, as proposed by the House, for the International Seismological Association, and strikes out authority for payment of expenses of the United States delegate in attending the meetings of the commission.

On amendment No. 16, relating to arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain: Appropriates for the expenses of the work in the language inserted by the Senate modified in the following particulars: Provides that the agent of the United States shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; appropriates for two counsel, at $2,520, instead of one at that salary; makes the salary of the disbursing clerk $3,000 instead of $2,500; and appropriates for necessary and contingent expenses in a lump sum instead of in detail, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 17: Appropriates $1,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,000, as proposed by the House, for the International Radiotelegraphic Convention.

On amendment No. 18: Strikes out the reappropriation, proposed by the House, for the international conference for the purpose of drawing up international rules and regulations for the assignment of load lines to merchant ships.

On amendment No. 19: Appropriates $75,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $50,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the Fifth International Conference of American States.

On amendment No. 20: Appropriates $750, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,000, as proposed by the House, for the International Congress on Customs Regulations.

On amendment No. 21: Appropriates $40,000, instead of $50,000, as proposed by the House, for the Nineteenth Conference of the Interparliamentary Union, modified so as to confine its expenditure to "Washington City."

On amendment No. 22: Appropriates $150,000, as proposed by the House, for the acquisition of embassy premises at Mexico City.

On amendment No. 23: Appropriates $100,000, instead of $150,000, as proposed by the House, for the acquisition of embassy premises at Tokyo, Japan.

On amendment No. 24: Strikes out the appropriation of $140,000, proposed by the House, for the acquisition of legation premises at Berne, Switzerland.

On amendment No. 25: Strikes out the appropriation of $375,000, proposed by the Senate, for the acquisition of consular premises at Shanghai, China.

On amendment No. 26: Appropriates $15,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $20,000, as proposed by the House, for the International Commission on Public and Private International Law.

On amendment No. 27: Appropriates $375,200, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $375,000, as proposed by the House, for allowance for clerk hire at United States consulates.

On amendment No. 28: Inserts the appropriation of $40,000, proposed by the Senate, for the Fifteenth International Congress Against Alcoholism.

H. A. COOPER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13679) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 11245. An act extending to the port of Providence, R. I., the privileges of section 1 of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement.

The message also announced that the Senate had still further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, numbered 20, 28, 29, 30, 43, 47, 48, 52, 76, 78, 79, 85, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 168, 176, 177, 195, 218, 219, 220, 234, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and had disagreed to the House amendments to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 212.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I report a joint resolution extending appropriations for the necessary operation of the Government and of the District of Columbia under certain contingencies, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 286, H. Rept. 906) extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia under certain contingencies.

Resolved, etc., That all appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia which shall remain unprovided for on the 30th day of June, 1914, are continued and made available for and during the first half of the month of July, 1914, unless the regular appropriations provided therefor in bills now pending in Congress shall have been previously made for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915; and a sufficient amount is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry on the same: Provided, That no greater amount shall be expended for such operations than as the sum of one-twenty-fourth of the appropriations made for the fiscal year 1914 bears to the whole of the appropriations of said fiscal year: Provided further, That the total expenditures for the whole of the fiscal year 1915 under the several appropriations hereby continued, and under the several appropriation bills now pending, shall not exceed in the aggregate the amounts finally appropriated therefor in the several bills now pending, except in cases where a change is made in the annual, monthly, or per diem compensation or in the numbers of officers, clerks, or other persons authorized to be employed by the several appropriations hereby continued, in which cases the amounts authorized to be expended shall equal one-twenty-fourth of the appropriations for the fiscal year 1914, and twenty-three-twenty-fourths of the appropriations contained in the several bills now pending when the same shall have been finally passed, unless the salary or compensation of any office shall be increased or diminished without changing the grade or the duties thereof, in which case such salary or compensation shall relate to the entire fiscal year and run from the beginning thereof: And provided further, That the session employees of the Senate and House of Representatives now authorized by law shall be continued upon the rolls until the end of the present session of Congress and paid at the rate per diem or month at which they are now paid; and a sufficient amount is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the same: And provided also, That the operation of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in securing a valuation of the several classes of property of carriers, subject to the act to regulate commerce, authorized by the act of March 1, 1913, shall continue, and a sufficient amount is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not to exceed the sum of $65,000, for the first half of the month of July, 1915.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that I may be recognized to move to suspend the rules and pass this resolution. The appropriations for the continuation of the entire Government cease to-morrow night, and unless this resolution becomes a law by to-morrow there will be chaos in the Government.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. We are about to go to the suspension of the rules——

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. It is a usual proceeding in this House, but it is very novel to this Congress. The power of recognition is wholly with the Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. I would like to know from the Speaker how considerable a list of men have asked for suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. While that is not a parliamentary inquiry, the Chair will state there are about 15 for to-day and about 30 on a list in my office.

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, is that accessible to the membership of the House?

The SPEAKER. Part of it is made up. There are four or five who are not on this list that have agreed to it since. Of course, this day is not suspension day, and there was an arrangement made about it. It had to be made in order to get it made suspension day at all.

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I made the inquiry——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is——

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I made no request of any kind.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman a parliamentary inquiry to propound or not?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; I have.

The SPEAKER. Well, state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Under the rules, Mr. Speaker, is there any way in which a Member on suspension day may know what is going to come up?

The SPEAKER. The only way he can find out is to come to the Speaker—that is, on regular suspension days—and he will tell him what he knows.

Mr. MURDOCK. What about special suspension days?

The SPEAKER. This day is operating under a gentlemen's agreement that was made here last week, and the Chair does not——

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, it was by unanimous consent, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] was here when that agreement was made.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have no objection to the suspension day, but I wanted to know how the House can find what is going to come up.

The SPEAKER. The way the Speaker finds out is, in the first place, a gentleman comes to him and tells him what the bill is and asks to call it up. There are certain bills that nobody, acting as Speaker, would allow to come up in that summary way, because they ought to be discussed more, and that is the only kind of veto that this Speaker undertakes to put on them.

Mr. MURDOCK. And the bills will be taken up seriatim?

The SPEAKER. The bills on this list will be taken up seriatim, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] is recognized.

COTTON FUTURES.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 110 with amendments as follows——

The SPEAKER. Have you the amendments in the bill?

Mr. LEVER. I have, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send the bill as amended to the Clerk to be read.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend a moment. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] asks to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 110 with the amendments incorporated in it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. We have not reached that place yet.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. TRIBBLE. For a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I wish to ask the Speaker if, in case this bill is taken up, it is subject to amendment by this House?

The SPEAKER. It is not subject to amendment after the Clerk reads it, but you can read anything on top of ground into a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The Chair has not yet submitted to the House the question as to whether or not this bill be taken up. Am I correctly informed on that question?

The SPEAKER. The bill must be reported, and it takes a majority, going through the tellers, to take it up.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is my understanding of it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 110) to regulate trading in cotton futures and provide for the standardization of "upland" and "gulf" cottons separately.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the parliamentary situation, on the motion to suspend gentlemen can ask for the reading of the bill as amended and only have read the amendable portion?

The SPEAKER. This amendment is in the nature of a substitute, and a gentleman can ask for the reading of whatever he wants to pass.

Mr. LEVER. That was my motion, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. He does not have to ask for the reading of 6, 8, or 10 pages, as the case may be, that we do not want to pass. The Clerk will read.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. TRIBBLE. The caption of the bill having been read, under the statement of the Speaker I move to substitute for that bill the bill known as the Scott bill.

The SPEAKER. You can not substitute.

Mr. HEFLIN. The regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Then I move to amend the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not do that.

Mr. GARNER. Let the Clerk read, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 110) to regulate trading in cotton futures and provide for the standardization of "upland" and "gulf" cottons separately.

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be known by the short title of the "United States cotton futures act."

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of this act, the term "contract of sale" shall be held to include sales, agreements of sale, and agreements to sell. That the word "person," wherever used in this act, shall be construed to import the plural or singular, as the case demands, and shall include individuals, associations, partnerships, and corporations. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other person acting for or employed by any association, partnership, or corporation within the scope of his employment or office, shall, in every case, also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such association, partnership, or corporation as well as that of the person.

SEC. 3. That upon each contract of sale of any cotton for future delivery made at, on, or in any exchange, board of trade, or similar institution or place of business, there is hereby levied a tax in the nature of an excise of 1 cent for each pound of the cotton involved in any such contract.

SEC. 4. That each contract of sale of cotton for future delivery mentioned in section 3 of this act shall be in writing plainly stating, or evidenced by written memorandum showing, the terms of such contract, including the quantity of the cotton involved and the names and addresses of the seller and buyer in such contract and shall be signed by the party to be charged, or by his agent in his behalf. If the contract or memorandum specify in bales the quantity of the cotton involved without giving the weight each bale shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed to weigh 500 pounds.

SEC. 5. That no tax shall be levied under this act on any contract of sale mentioned in section 3 hereof if the contract comply with each of the following conditions:

First. Conform to the requirements of section 4 of and the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act.

Second. Specify the basis grade for the cotton involved in the contract, which shall be one of the grades for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture except grades prohibited from being delivered on a contract made under this section by the fifth subdivision of this section, the price per pound at which the cotton of such basis grade is contracted to be bought or sold, the date when the purchase or sale was made, and the month or months in which the contract is to be fulfilled or settled: Provided, That middling shall be deemed the basis grade incorporated into the contract if no other basis grade be specified, either in the contract or in the memorandum evidencing the same.

Third. Provide that the cotton dealt with therein or delivered thereunder shall be of or within the grades for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture except grades prohibited from being delivered on a contract made under this section by the fifth subdivision of this section and no other grade or grades.

Fourth. Provide that in case cotton of grade other than the basis grade be tendered or delivered in settlement of such contract, the differences above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for such grades other than the basis grade shall be the actual commercial differences determined as hereinafter provided.

Fifth. Provide that cotton that, because of the presence of extraneous matter of any character or irregularities or defects, is reduced in value below that of good ordinary, or cotton that is below the grade of good ordinary, or, if tinged, cotton that is below the grade of low middling, or, if stained, cotton that is below the grade of middling, the grades mentioned being of the official cotton standards of the United States, or cotton that is less than seven-eighths of an inch in length of staple, or cotton of perished staple or of immature staple, or cotton that is "gin cut" or reginned, or cotton that is "repacked" or "false packed" or "mixed packed" or "water packed," shall not be delivered on, under, or in settlement of such contract.

Sixth. Provide that all tenders of cotton under such contract shall be the full number of bales involved therein, except that such variations of the number of bales may be permitted as is necessary to bring the total weight of the cotton tendered within the provisions of the contract as to weight; that on the fifth business day prior to delivery the person making the tender shall give to the person receiving the same written notice of the date of delivery, and that on or prior to the date so fixed for delivery, and in advance of final settlement of the contract, the person making the tender shall furnish to the person receiving the same a written notice or certificate stating the grade of each individual bale to be delivered and, by means of marks or numbers, identifying each bale with its grade.

Seventh. Provide that, in case a dispute arises between the person making the tender and the person receiving the same, as to the quality, or the grade, or the length of staple, of any cotton tendered under the contract, either party may refer the question of the Secretary of Agriculture for determination, and that such dispute shall be referred and determined, and the costs thereof, to be fixed and assessed by the Secretary of Agriculture, shall be collected and paid, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The provisions of the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh subdivisions of this section shall be deemed fully incorporated into any such contract if there be written or printed thereon, or on the memorandum evidencing the same, at or prior to the time the same is signed, the phrase, "Subject to United States cotton futures act, section 5."

The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations for carrying out the purposes of the seventh subdivision of this section, and his findings, upon any dispute referred to him under said seventh subdivision, made after the parties in interest have had an opportunity to be heard, shall be accepted in the courts of the United States in all suits between such parties, or their privies, as prima facie evidence of the true quality, or grade, or length of staple of the cotton involved.

SEC. 6. That for the purposes of section 5 of this act the differences above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for cotton of grades above or below the basis grade in the settlement of a contract of sale for the future delivery of cotton shall be determined by the actual commercial differences in value thereof upon the sixth business day prior to the day fixed, in accordance with the sixth subdivision of section 5, for the delivery of cotton on the contract, established by the sale of spot cotton in the market where the future transaction involved occurs and is consummated if such market be a bona fide spot market; and in the event there be no bona fide spot market at or in the place in which such future transaction occurs, then, and in that case, the said differences above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for cotton above or below the basis grade shall be determined by the average actual commercial differences in value thereof, upon the sixth business day prior to the day fixed, in accordance with the sixth subdivision of section 5, for the delivery of cotton on the contract, in the spot markets of not less than five places designated for the purpose from time to time by the Secretary of Agriculture, as such values were established by the sales of spot cotton, in such designated five or more markets: Provided, That for the purposes of this section such values in the said spot markets be based upon the standards for grades of cotton established by the Secretary of Agriculture: And provided further, That whenever the value of one grade is to be determined from the sale or sales of spot cotton of another grade or grades, such value shall be fixed in accordance with rules and regulations which shall be prescribed for the purpose by the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 7. That for the purposes of this act the only markets which shall be considered bona fide spot markets shall be those which the Secretary of Agriculture shall, from time to time, after investigation, determine and designate to be such, and of which he shall give public notice.

SEC. 8. That in determining, pursuant to the provisions of this act, what markets are bona fide spot markets, the Secretary of Agriculture is directed to consider only markets in which spot cotton is sold in such volume and under such conditions as customarily to reflect accurately the value of middling cotton and the differences between the prices or values of middling cotton and of other grades of cotton for which standards shall have been established by the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That if there be not sufficient places, in the markets of which are made bona fide sales of spot cotton of grades for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture, to enable him to designate at least five spot markets in accordance with section 6 of this act, he shall, from data as to spot sales collected by him, make rules and regulations for determining the actual commercial differences in the value of spot cotton of the grades established by him as reflected by bona fide sales of spot cotton, of the same or different grades, in the markets selected and designated by him, from time to time, for that purpose, and in that event, differences in value of cotton of various grades involves in contracts made pursuant to section 5 of this act shall be determined in compliance with such rules and regulations.

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to establish and promulgate permanent standards of cotton by which its quality or value may be judged or determined, including its grade, length of staple, strength of staple, color, and such other qualities, properties, and conditions as may be standardized in practical form, by fixing a standard of middling cotton and, using the same as a basis, establishing a standard of nine different grades, to be designated middling fair, strict good middling, good middling, strict middling, middling, strict low middling, low middling, strict good ordinary, and good ordinary, which, for the purposes of this act, shall be known as the "Official cotton standards of the United States." The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to prepare practical forms of the official cotton standards which shall be established by him, and to furnish such practical forms from time to time, upon request, to any person, the cost thereof, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, to be paid by the person requesting the same, and to certify such practical forms under the seal of the Department of Agriculture and under the signature of the said Secretary, thereto affixed by himself or by some official or employee of the Department of Agriculture thereunto duly authorized by the said Secretary.

SEC. 10. That no tax shall be levied under this act on any contract of sale mentioned in section 3 hereof if the contract comply with each of the following conditions:

First. Conform to the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act.

Second. Specify the grade, type, sample, or description of the cotton involved in the contract, the price per pound at which such cotton is contracted to be bought or sold, the date of the purchase or sale, and the time when shipment or delivery of such cotton is to be made.

Third. Provide that cotton of or within the grade or of the type, or according to the sample or description, specified in the contract shall be delivered thereunder, and that no cotton which does not conform to the type, sample, or description or which is not of or within the grade specified in the contract shall be tendered or delivered thereunder.

Fourth. Provide that the delivery of cotton under the contract shall not be effected by means of "set off" or "ring" settlement, but only by the actual transfer of the specified cotton mentioned in the contract.

The provisions of the first, third, and fourth subdivisions of this section shall be deemed fully incorporated into any such contract if there be written or printed thereon, or on the document or memorandum evidencing the same, at or prior to the time the same is entered into the words "Subject to United States cotton futures act, section 10."

This act shall not be construed to impose a tax on any sale of spot cotton.

SEC. 11. That upon each order transmitted, or directed or authorized to be transmitted, by any person within the United States for the making of any contract of sale of cotton grown in the United States for future delivery in cases in which the contract of sale is or is to be made at, on, or in any exchange, board of trade, or similar institution or place of business in any foreign country, there is hereby levied an excise tax at the rate of 1 cent for each pound of the cotton so ordered to be bought or sold under such contract: Provided, That no tax shall be levied under this act on any such order if the contract made in pursuance thereof comply either with the conditions specified in the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth subdivisions of section 5, or with all the conditions specified in section 10 of this act, except that the quality of the cotton involved in the contract may be expressed therein in terms of kilograms instead of pounds.

SEC. 12. That the tax imposed by section 3 of this act shall be paid by the seller of the cotton involved in the contract of sale, by means of stamps which shall be affixed to such contracts, or to the memoranda evidencing the same, and canceled in compliance with rules and regulations which shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The tax imposed by section 11 of this act shall be paid by the sender of the order and collected in accordance with rules and regulations which shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 13. That no contract of sale of cotton for future delivery mentioned in section 3 of this act which does not conform to the requirements of section 4 hereof and has not the necessary stamps affixed thereto as required by section 12 hereof shall be enforceable in any court of the United States by, or on behalf of, any party to such contract or his privies. That no contract of sale of cotton for future delivery, made in pursuance of any order mentioned in section 11 of this act, shall be enforceable in any court of the United States by or on behalf of any party to such contract or his privies unless it conform to the requirements of section 4 hereof, and the tax imposed by section 11 upon the order for such contract shall have been paid in compliance with section 12 of this act.

SEC. 14. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make and promulgate such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to collect the tax imposed by this act and otherwise to enforce its provisions. Further to effect this purpose, he shall require all persons coming within its provisions to keep such records and statements of account as will fully and correctly disclose all transactions mentioned in sections 3 and 11 of this act; and he may appoint agents to conduct the inspection necessary to collect said tax and otherwise to enforce this act and all rules and regulations made by him in pursuance hereof, and may fix the compensation of such agents.

SEC. 15. That any person liable to the payment of any tax imposed by this act who fails to pay, or evades or attempts to evade the payment of such tax, and any person who otherwise violates any provision of this act, or any rule or regulation made in pursuance hereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $20,000, in the discretion of the court; and, in case of natural persons, may, in addition, be punished by imprisonment for not less than 60 days nor more than 3 years, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 16. That in addition to the foregoing punishment there is hereby imposed, on account of each violation of this act, a penalty of $2,000, to be recovered in an action founded on this act in the name of the United States as plaintiff, and when so recovered one-half of said amount shall be paid over to the person giving the information upon which such recovery was based. It shall be the duty of United States attorneys, to whom satisfactory evidence of violations of this act is furnished, to institute and prosecute actions for the recovery of the penalties prescribed by this section.

SEC. 17. That no person whose evidence is deemed material by the officer prosecuting on behalf of the United States in any case brought under any provision of this act shall withhold his testimony because of complicity by him in any violation of this act or of any regulation made pursuant to this act, but any such person called by such officer who testifies in such case shall be exempt from prosecution for any offense to which his testimony relates.

SEC. 18. That the payment of any tax levied by this act shall not exempt any person from any penalty or punishment now or hereafter provided by the laws of any State for entering into contracts of sale of cotton for future delivery, nor shall the payment of any tax imposed by this act be held to prohibit any State or municipality from imposing a tax on the same transaction.

SEC. 19. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 20. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, available until expended, the sum of $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make such investigations, to collect such data, and to use such methods and means as he may deem necessary to determine and designate what are bona fide spot markets within the meaning of this act, to prescribe rules and regulations pursuant to sections 5, 6, and 8 hereof, and to establish and promulgate permanent standards for cotton and to furnish practical forms thereof as authorized by section 9 hereof, and he shall publish the results of his investigations including rent and the employment of such persons as he may deem necessary, in the city of Washington and elsewhere. All sums collected by the Secretary of Agriculture as costs under section 5, or for furnishing practical forms under section 9 of this act, shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 21. That sections 9, 19, and 20 of this act and all provisions of this act authorizing rules and regulations to be prescribed shall be effective immediately. All other sections of this act shall become and be effective on and after three months from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. LEVER and Mr. HEFLIN rose.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HAUGEN. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] demands a second.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The Senate passed what is known as the Smith bill. It went before the Committee on Agriculture, and the Committee on Agriculture amended it by what is known as the Lever bill. Now, the Smith bill has not been read before this House.

The SPEAKER. No; and the Smith bill is not going to be read before the House.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, another parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Now, the amendment has been read before the House, which is not the Smith bill. At this time I offer what is known as the Scott bill as a substitute for the amendment.

The SPEAKER. It is out of order. Now, inasmuch as this is almost the first time we have had a suspension of the rules in this Congress the Chair thinks it nothing but fair to keep gentlemen from wasting time—which they do not want to do—to state two or three things about the suspension of the rules. You can not amend the bill after it is read. You can not offer a substitute for it. You can not make the ordinary motions of postponing, and so forth. The motion to reconsider does not apply.

It can not be recommitted. In addition to that, the modus operandi is very simple and very summary, and that is what it is intended to be. When the bill—whatever it is that is read by the Clerk, to be passed upon—is read it is the business of the Speaker to ask if a second is demanded. The Chair did so ask in this case, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] demanded a second. The next thing he will do will be to ask that a second be considered as ordered. The House may or may not agree to it. If the House refuses to do it, it is the business of the Chair to appoint two Members to act as tellers, and the second is made by going through the tellers, and it takes a majority of the tellers to second the motion. Frequently a second is demanded simply and solely for the purpose of getting 40 minutes' debate.

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, will the Speaker inform me——

Mr. TRIBBLE. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, this bill is not amendable under the suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. TRIBBLE. That is what I wanted to get at. The Speaker stated it as a fact that after the bill had been read it could not be amended. How can Members know what it is until it is read?

The SPEAKER. They do not know unless they have hunted it up previously.

Mr. MANN. It is not amendable before it is read, either.

The SPEAKER. No. A Member rises in his place, if he can get the eye of the Speaker, and says, "I move to suspend the rules and to pass so-and-so, and he sends it to the Clerk's desk, and nobody can amend it or substitute for it, or anything of the sort.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the fact that this bill was reported by the committee on the 4th of June, and the gentleman has had ample time to acquaint himself with its contents.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. If the Lever amendment is beaten, does the vote recur on the original bill?

The SPEAKER. It does not. It simply goes back into the status it was in a minute before the gentleman rose.

Mr. MURDOCK. Then, Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, the bill is not before the House, but an amendment to the bill?

The SPEAKER. A substitute for the Smith bill is before the House.

Mr, MURDOCK. And the substitute is not before the House?

Mr. MANN. It is the motion that is before the House; a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. Of course it is.

Mr. MURDOCK. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It is a motion to pass not the original bill, but a substitute for it.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] demanded a second.

Mr. LEVER. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. MURDOCK. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] objects.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, the proposition before the House is either to pass the Lever bill or no bill?

The SPEAKER. That is the proposition. The Chair appoints the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] as tellers. Those in favor of ordering a second will pass between the tellers and be counted.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 14.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the ayes are 75 and the noes are 14, and a second is ordered. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, in 1911 I made a speech in this House about the conduct of the New York Cotton Exchange. Among other things, I said the New York Cotton Exchange as conducted to-day is the deadliest enemy that the cotton producer has. I am still of that opinion. In the hearings had before the Committee on Agriculture Mr. Thompson, a cotton dealer, appeared and testified. He has had much to do with the New York Cotton Exchange. I asked him this question, "The committee on fixed difference on the New York Cotton Exchange really has the power to fix the price of cotton?" And he said, "That committee can change the price of cotton a half a cent a pound in one night." [Applause.]

I want to say to gentlemen on this side of the House that I do not claim that this bill is perfect; it does not contain all that I would put in it if I were permitted to write the entire law. It does contain three provisions that I have contended for ever since I have been a Member of Congress, and one of these provisions is the one that strikes down the very conditions that I have just referred to regarding fixed difference on the New York Cotton Exchange. It would merit my support if it had no other provision than that one. [Applause.] I am anxious to have a law upon the statute books governing the conduct of cotton exchanges in the United States. We have no such law to-day. I want to warn gentlemen who think of opposing this bill because it does not contain everything that they would like to see in it that there is absolutely no law on the statute books now to check the evil practices indulged in on the cotton exchanges to-day. [Applause.] This bill has some features in it that will mean great good to the cotton producers. They will prevent cotton gamblers from robbing the farmers of the South of millions of dollars on the cotton crop. To gentlemen who favor other kinds of legislation let me say, do not permit yourselves to be placed in the attitude of opposing the only measure that it is possible to pass on this subject at this session of Congress. Because, if you do, you will stand in the attitude of favoring present conditions, and I tell you that under present conditions cotton gamblers are robbing cotton producers of millions of dollars every year. [Applause.]

If you can not agree to all the provisions of this bill, vote for it because of the good features in it. Upon that ground I shall give it my support. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, let me submit briefly to the House the reasons that prompt me to support this measure: First, if disputes arise as to the grade of cotton named in the contract on the New York Cotton Exchange, the committee on classification and fixed differences settle the dispute and from its decision there is no appeal. Under this bill these questions will go to the Secretary of Agriculture, and he will settle disputes that arise without knowing the price stipulated in the contract. This is a very beneficial change. Second, this bill establishes the 9 grades of cotton standardized by Congress and now in use by the Department of Agriculture, instead of the 28 different grades of stuff, ranging from dog-tail cotton up to the higest grade now in use on the New York Cotton Exchange. [Applause.]

This low-grade, unspinnable stuff is accumulated in New York and used to tender on contracts in the exchange. It is not accepted, of course, but remains there and is tendered over and over again on contracts, to the great injury of the cotton producer. The nine grades provided for in this bill will, in my judgment, do away with that practice. [Applause.]

Third. Under this bill a record of all transactions had on the exchange will be kept, so that we may know at the end of the cotton season how many bales of cotton have been handled on the exchange and how contracts have been fulfilled. This is a splendid provision.

Fourth. This bill requires actual cotton of a spinnable grade to be at the bottom of every contract on the exchange. [Applause.]

Fifth. It substitutes the commercial difference in the grades for the fixed difference now arbitrarily fixed on the New York Exchange. [Applause.]

Where will we go now to obtain this commercial difference? Mr. Speaker, the committee that now has the power on the New York Exchange to say just what the difference is between strict middling and good ordinary or between any other grades represents the exchange, and from its decision there is no appeal. Under this bill the commercial difference will obtain, and the Secretary of Agriculture is required to go, not to the committee on fixed difference on the New York Cotton Exchange, but to five spot markets in the South, to find what the price and commercial difference are. Let me say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that these provisions constitute a long and valuable step in the right direction and will be of vast benefit to the cotton producers of the South. [Applause.]

The operation of this bill will do much toward giving the producer the opportunity to exercise a right that belongs to him—that of helping to fix the price of cotton under the full and free operation of the law of supply and demand. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, when I first came into the House I was appointed a member of the Committee on Agriculture, and this matter was pending at that time. Since then the committee have held extensive hearings. Men representing the growers, men representing the middlemen, and those representing the mill operators have been heard. Hundreds and thousands of pages of testimony have been taken.

The evils now inherent in the trade as it is managed were very clearly set forth, and I believe a case was clearly made out that legislation is necessary at this time to protect the cotton grower and the cotton-mill man. In two minutes it is impossible to say more than a few words in outline. The first thing the bill does is to standardize nine grades which are the regular spinnable grades of cotton, including practically every fiber that is spinnable, but excluding grades that are not spinnable in the usual machinery, and the lowest grades, where the fibers are broken or where the fiber is weakened in character in any way and which can not be used in ordinary machines.

The difficulty with this low-grade stuff and this off-grade stuff is in finding a market for it. Not finding a market at the mills it has been shipped to the great centers of trade—the New York cotton market, for instance—and has been used there for delivery on contracts, the contracts requiring a basis of middling cotton with a certain number of points off or on, according to grade above or below the basis. And the grade was predominantly low, and the future contracts traded in on that market largely determined the price of the spot cotton in the southern market to the detriment at times of the millman and to the detriment at times of the grower and to the benefit of the middleman on the whole.

The next thing to be cured by the bill, after the establishment of the grades so that everybody can learn what they are and determine what kind of cotton he had and what it was worth, was the fixing of certain markets in the South to be known as the spot markets, to be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture, where the actual price of cotton could be determined, so that the grower of cotton would not be at the mercy of speculators in the great centers, but would know from the spot market selected by the Secretary of Agriculture what were the prevailing prices of cotton and what the price should be that he ought at that time to receive. Gambling is like a cancer, that attacks the wholesome fibers of business and destroys them. There is a field for legitimate speculation, but gambling is a form of speculation that is not defensible, and like a cancer it ruins the regular, ordinary, healthful tissues of business.

The third thing that the bill endeavors to remedy is the matter of dealing in contracts on the exchanges. The contracts are bought and sold, with no intention of receiving or delivering the cotton. Millmen went to the cotton exchanges for the purpose of hedging. That was legitimate in itself so far as they were concerned, but they could not go there and get cotton to spin, for the reason that the cotton they were to receive was not any known quantity or quality of cotton or any known length or fiber of cotton, but it was cotton with so many points on or off from the basis of middling, and the exchanges were useless as places for the millman to go to buy the cotton that he needed to use in his mill to spin for the commodities sold in trade.

I have studied the bill with the committee, and I have been on every subcommittee that has prepared bills on this subject, and I am in favor of this bill, because I believe it affords some remedy for existing evils. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] to use some of his time.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that I can get only four minutes, one-fifth of the entire time allotted to those opposed to the measure, to discuss a bill in which I am vitally interested and in which the people whom I represent are intensely interested. I wish to say that I agree with my distinguished friend from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], who makes the statement that there is some good and some bad in this bill. That is true, but "a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." As a producer of cotton and as a representative of a constituency which produces cotton and representing a district which is one of the largest cotton districts not only in George but in the South, I oppose this bill because there are certain features in it which are detrimental to the grower, the producer.

Mr. Speaker, I know it has been said that it is necessary for the exchanges to exist in order that cotton may find a market. Ah, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of this House, that is an old song that was composed and has been sung by the great cotton exchanges, and they are still singing it.

Nearly 75 per cent of the people of this entire country are forced to use cotton as the material for their clothes. Cotton will ever be in demand. It is sought for in the warehouse and on the plantation every day of the year. Now, the farmers of this country are willing to rely upon supply and demand. That and that alone should control.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that under this bill the manufacturers will be protected, but in this game between the manufacturers and the New York Cotton Exchange the cotton producers are the men who furnish the stakes for their gambling. The cotton exchange, largely in New York, has manipulated and controlled the price of cotton for, lo, these many years. There are about 400 men who are members of the cotton exchange, and they have made themselves the self-constituted guardian of the cotton growers of this country. Mr. Speaker, they pay $25,000 for a seat on that exchange, so I am informed, and I can assure you that they are not of that patriotic kind who stand ready to pay $25,000 in order to protect the farmers of this country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia had leave to extend his remarks.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, there is no economic outrage in the United States equal to that of gambling in cotton. That has been true for many years, a long, hopeless period, during which an outraged public sentiment not only in the South but throughout the Nation has repeatedly sought correction. It has never obtained the correction, and it is not now going to obtain the correction if this substitute for the Senate bill becomes a law. It is 20 years, Mr. Speaker, since Mr. Hatch, of Missouri, succeeded in passing through this House a drastic bill prohibiting gambling in cotton. He passed it by a majority of 40 votes. Afterwards the same bill passed the Senate by a majority of 10 votes. Having passed both branches of Congress, it ought to have become a law. But it did not become a law. It came back to the House for a few minor changes and was permitted by the leadership here to die.

I ask gentlemen from the South how many outrages do they think have since transpired in the South because of that action? How many crimes, how many defalcations, how many bankruptcies, how many miseries have followed in the cotton States the defeat of that measure 20 years ago?

Four years ago a Republican Congress passed a drastic bill against gambling in cotton, known as the Scott bill. It went through this House. There was only one remarkable feature about the consideration of the bill in the House, and that was that it went through the House so easily. It went to the Senate and it died there.

Last year the Congress again had an opportunity to pass a drastic provision prohibiting gambling in cotton. It was placed in the tariff bill as an amendment by Senator CLARKE of Arkansas. It came to the House, and there was a time when the membership of this House had a right and an opportunity to put an end forever to this national infamy. The majority of the House deliberately and under challenge passed that opportunity by. The House amended the Clarke proposition and sent the amended tariff bill to the Senate. The Clarke proposition and the House amendment to it both died, as some of us then predicted.

Now, a year later, the Committee on Agriculture has brought in a substitute for a Senate bill—the Smith bill. The Smith bill prohibits gambling in cotton. It prohibits the use of the mails to the Stock Exchange of New York in "futures." That will stop gambling in cotton.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman does not want to make a mistake as to what the Smith bill does.

Mr. MURDOCK. I yield.

Mr. LEVER. The Smith bill does exactly what this bill does—it regulates rather than destroys.

Mr. MURDOCK. The Smith bill proposes to deny the use of the mails to the Stock Exchange of New York. The stock exchange is made up of about 250 to 300 kid-gloved gentlemen. According to the statement of the gentleman himself, made in his own report recently submitted to this House, the farmers of the South are losing from ninety to one hundred million dollars a year in the production of cotton, because of the machinations of this leisurely outfit in New York. What the American people want is a halt called on this gambling practice, and called indubitably, with certainty, and without compromise. This substitute does not do that. True, it standardizes the grades of cotton. That is a good thing. There is no question about that. The device in this bill by which it seeks to protect the market against the tender of riffraff—inferior cotton—in settlement of a contract, is good. So is the prohibition of pro forma deliveries. The proposition to do away with the practice of adjusting deliveries on the system known as the "fixed difference" as a basis of settlement is meritorious. But this bill does not prohibit gambling in cotton. That is what the Nation demands. The Nation will not be satisfied with less. The substitute should be voted down, and a bill brought before the House that will save the cotton producer this enormous annual sum of money and remove forever this gambling blot from the life of the Nation. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE].

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, on February 9, 1910, a delegation of farmers appeared before the Agriculture Committee. That delegation of farmers was composed in part of Georgia men. The president of the Farmers' Union, Charles S. Barrett, designated Mr. T. J. Brooks and other farmers to appear before that committee and speak for the farmers. Mr. Brooks appeared before the committee and spoke for the farmers. He presented the planters' side of this question and advocated the Scott bill. The Agricultural Committee reported favorably the Scott bill, and this House passed the Scott bill since I have been in Congress almost unanimously. During the hearings on this regulation bill, known as the Lever bill, I wrote Mr. Brooks, the previous spokesman of the farmers, and he wrote me on May 29, 1914, in part as follows:

> In the first place, I do not like the taxing way of reaching the exchanges. The Government goes into partnership with a gambling machine for a part of the spoils. The bill which passed the House twice (Scott bill) will do the work. These substitutes are subterfuges and playing with the subject—sparring for time.

Charles S. Barrett, president of the Farmers' Union, is unalterably opposed to this bill, or any other bill placing a tax on cotton.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is objectionable for two principal reasons—

First. The bill legalizes cotton future exchanges and proposes to give gambling transactions a commercial business standing. If gambling in cotton futures is wrong, then when you tax the gambler you give legal recognition to this evil; you legalize an immoral transaction.

Second. Tax should not be placed on cotton for any purpose. Since cotton was taxed as a war measure the South has never ceased to denounce the injustice as unconstitutional.

Mr. Speaker, gambling is an evil that should be suppressed. The man who deals in cotton futures produces no cotton. Why should he be permitted to fix the price? The people who produce the cotton should not be turned over to the mercies of the speculator.

I have earnestly tried to secure legislation on this question beneficial to my people. I am here to-day trying to amend this bill to meet the need of the farmer. It should not be passed in its present form, though after I have done all I can to amend it I will not obstruct its passage, for the reason it will go back to the Senate, and I have assurances that it will be amended and most of the objectionable features eliminated.

I seriously object to the manner in which the representatives of the cotton exchanges have furnished the evidence before the committee. The truth is, this bill meets the approval of the cotton exchanges in some of the material parts.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRIBBLE. No; I can not yield, for I have not the time. If the gentleman will get me more time, I will yield.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Marsh, the President of the New York Cotton Exchange, said before that committee:

I want to begin by saying that I do not appear here in opposition to legislation in regard to the cotton exchanges.

He appeared in favor of it. Every man representing the cotton exchange who came before that committee advocated legislation regulating the exchanges by the cotton-tax feature.

Mr. Marsh further says:

Consequently it can not be said that I am, or that the New York Cotton Exchange is, opposed to legislation on this subject in principle. On the contrary, we believe in legislation on this subject.

Let me read to you another portion of the hearings before the committee.

Mr. Hill who has been in the cotton-exchange business 30 or 40 years and who has been president of the New York Cotton Exchange, and who has been appearing periodically in Washington for 30 years, looking after the interest of the exchange, said before the committee:

I like the initial clauses of this bill, and I like the tax idea rather than the prohibition of the mails. I think the business can stand a small tax.

He further said:

I feel quite sure that the political powers, were we to show this sort of spirit, would be satisfied with these changes and that these changes would add substantially to the volume of our business rather than to change it or reduce it.

Mr. Speaker, he then outlines this bill; he gives exactly what he wants. First, Government standards. That is this bill.

Second, commercial differences to be established, if possible, by the Department of Agriculture at Washington, or the Department of Commerce and Labor.

That is this bill.

Third, contract to call for an even running delivery of 100 bales of any one grade.

That is this bill.

Mr. LEVER. Is the gentleman opposed to those things?

Mr. TRIBBLE. This bill should be amended to suit the needs of the farmer. For one, I prefer not to take Mr. Hill as my authority on cotton legislation.

Mr. LEVER. Is the gentleman opposed to the things he enumerated?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I am in favor of the Scott bill, but I am not in favor of a makeshift. The regulations proposed may be good in a measure, but if we pass a bill to regulate exchanges it should be done by mail and telegraph regulation and not by taxing the farmer's cotton.

Mr. LEVER. I ask the gentleman if he is opposed to these provisions?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I have answered the gentleman's question—I am not in favor of regulation by taxing the farmer's cotton.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman knows whether he is or not. It will not take him a quarter of a second.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Regulation of exchanges in the proper way is desirable; that is to say, by suppression by mail and telegraph. If the Scott bill can not be passed and this bill can not be amended, I shall not further obstruct its passage, expecting the proper amendments to be made in the Senate and in conference. When the bill returns to this House for final passage, I hope the objectionable features will be eliminated. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I am one of those in this House who believe that dealing in cotton futures on the exchanges in this country works to the injury of the consumers of cotton goods and the producers of cotton. I have always believed in the abolishment of them, because they accomplish all of the harm and are just as bad as the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] and the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] have painted them. But under the peculiar parliamentary status in which this bill is brought into the House, you are either to take a bill that will greatly help the present situation or you are to vote against the bill and allow the present conditions in the exchanges to exist. No matter how much opposed I may be to gambling in cotton futures, I believe this bill, from the viewpoint of regulation—and I have never been an advocate of regulation, but abolishment—will work such good to the consumers of cotton goods in this country and the producers of cotton in this country that I shall vote for it. [Applause.] It contains many most excellent provisions, and from the viewpoint of regulation it could hardly be improved upon. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] raises sand about nobody appearing before the Agricultural Committee who was a farmer or in the interest of the farmers of the country. That committee is made up of men who are the best friends of the farmer. They are always zealously looking out after their interests; and I want to say to the gentleman from Georgia that as one friend of the farmer I appeared before that committee and remained there, not as a farmer but as a champion of the farmer, during the entire consideration of this subject.

Mr. TRIBBLE. And did they give the gentleman the bill he wanted?

Mr. HARRISON. No; they did not; but they considered my bill, that would have abolished gambling in cotton futures on these exchanges, and they considered the bill of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER], which would have done the same thing. The question, therefore, that now presents itself is whether you will accept this bill, which is not subject to amendment, in its present form, knowing that it will greatly remedy the present conditions in the exchanges, or whether you will vote against it and get no legislation. I commend it to the Members of the House and sincerely hope that it will pass. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who has just taken his seat, says that he is opposed to this bill. If the gentleman is sincere in that, and I know he is, then he should vote down this motion to suspend the rules, so we can amend it. Every good thing in this bill can be retained, and the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture knows it. Vote down this motion and let the bill be considered in the usual way, so it can be amended. It will remain on the calendar and can be acted on later in the usual way, and then we can keep everything that is good in it and put some additional things in it that are better than anything that is in it now. Let me read you from the Democratic platform. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Oh, that will do to laugh over there on the Republican side, but these gentlemen on the Democratic side can not laugh at it when they get home. That platform says:

We favor the enactment by Congress of legislation that will suppress the pernicious practice of gambling in agricultural products by organized exchanges and others.

Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee has just admitted that this bill regulates but does not suppress gambling in farm products. Keep all of the regulation in it, but give us an opportunity to put some suppression in it, whether through the taxing power or otherwise. The Scott bill passed this House, and my distinguished friend from South Carolina supported it. The Beall bill, practically the same, passed this House, and the gentleman supported it; and why not take off the gag in the motion to suspend and give the Members an opportunity to offer amendments that will have a tendency to suppress gambling in cotton instead of galvanizing into respectability and giving legal status to the worst gambling machine that ever afflicted a civilized people? I defy you to take it off. The worst bills that have ever been passed in this House have been passed under suspension of the rules, because 20 minutes on a side does not give time to show what is wrong in them. When you gentlemen get back home and consult your farmer constituents and they find out that you voted with the president of the New York Cotton Exchange and that you have legalized, whitewashed, and federalized cotton gambling, wheat gambling, corn gambling, and oat gambling I fear you will have a long, hard time before you can explain to them your vote. The idea of this being the only chance to consider this bill! Such false claim as that ought to make every honest man blush for shame! Some gentlemen think the best thing we can do is to put off the consideration of the trust bills until the next session of Congress, the short session.

Can not this little bill be considered at that session? Can not it be considered now at this session before we adjourn? Vote down the motion to suspend the rules and it remains on the calendar and can be considered in the regular order, in the regular way, open to amendment, and no man need say that this is the only opportunity to pass this bill. If it becomes the only opportunity, it is because by your vote you make it the only opportunity. Vote down the motion to suspend the rules and give us an opportunity, and then we will keep everything in that is of benefit to commerce and the farmer and take out those features that ought not to be in the bill. I want any man from the South or West or from the North to get up here on the floor of this House and say, "I am not in favor of the suppression of the artificial fictitious gambling in farm products." This bill only legalizes the gambling and will give the Federal courts jurisdiction as against your State laws, and I appeal to you to vote down this motion to suspend the rules and let us pass the bill with proper amendments.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER], a member of the committee.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, in the limited time allotted to me, of course, it is impossible to discuss fully the bill pending before the House. I am frank to say at the outset, in the few remarks I will be able to make upon this bill, that it does not meet in its entirety my approval, by any means. I would be glad to substitute for it H. R. 8192, introduced by me during this Congress on September 16, 1913, which is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8192) to prohibit interference with commerce among the States and Territories and with foreign nations, and to remove obstructions thereto, and to prohibit the transmission of certain messages by telegraph, telephone, cable, or other means of communication between States and Territories and foreign nations.

Be it enacted, etc., That certain words used in this act and in proceedings pursuant hereto shall, unless the same be inconsistent with the context, be construed as follows: The word "message" shall mean any communication by telegraph, telephone, wireless telegraph, cable, or other means of communication from one State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia or to any foreign country. The word "person" shall mean any person, partnership, joint-stock company, society, association, or corporation, their managers and officers, and when used with reference to the commission of acts which are herein required or forbidden shall include persons who are participants in the required or forbidden acts, and the agents, officers, and members of the boards of directors and trustees, or other similar controlling or directing bodies of partnerships, joint-stock companies, societies, associations, and corporations. And words importing the plural number, wherever used, may be applied to or mean only a single person or thing, and words importing the singular number may be applied to or mean several persons or things.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person to send or cause to be sent any message offering to make or enter into a contract for the purchase or sale for future delivery of cotton without intending that such cotton shall be actually delivered or received, or offering to make or enter into a contract whereby any party thereto, or any party for whom or in whose behalf such contract is made, requires the right or privilege to demand in the future the acceptance or delivery of cotton without being thereby obligated to accept or to deliver such cotton; and the transmission of any message relating to any such transaction is hereby declared to be an interference with commerce among the States and Territories and with foreign nations. Any person who shall be guilty of violating this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined in any sum not more than $1,000 nor less than $100, or shall be imprisoned for not more than six months nor less than one month, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and the sending or causing to be sent of each such message shall constitute a separate offense.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of any person sending any message relating to a contract or to the making of a contract for future delivery of cotton to furnish to the person transmitting such message an affidavit stating that he is the owner of such cotton and that he has the intention to deliver such cotton; or that such cotton is at the time in actual course of growth on land owned, controlled, or cultivated by him and that he has the intention to deliver such cotton; or that he is at the time legally entitled to the right of future possession of such cotton under and by authority of a contract for the sale and future delivery thereof previously made by the owner of such cotton, giving the name of the party or names of parties to such contract and the time when and the place where such contract was made and the price therein stipulated, and that he has the intention to deliver such cotton; or that he has the intention to acquire and deliver such cotton; or that he has the intention to receive and pay for such cotton: Provided, That any person electing to do so may file with the telegraph, telephone, wireless telegraph, or cable company an affidavit stating that the message or messages being sent, or to be sent, for the six months next ensuing by such person do not and will not relate to any such contract or offers to contract as are described in section 2 of this act, and any such company shall issue thereupon a certificate evidencing the fact that such affidavit has been duly filed, and such certificate shall be accepted in lieu of the affidavit herein required at all the transmitting offices of such company during the life of said affidavit. Any person who knowingly shall make a false statement in any affidavit provided for in this act shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 nor less than $500, or shall be imprisoned for not more than two years nor less than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment. And in any prosecution under the provisions of sections 2 or 3 of this act the proof or failure to make any affidavit herein required shall be prima facie evidence that said message or messages related to a contract prohibited by section 2 of this act, and the proof of failure to deliver or receive the cotton called for in any contract for future delivery of cotton shall be prima facie evidence that there was no intention to deliver or receive such cotton when said contract was made.

SEC. 4. That any agent of any telegraph, telephone, wireless telegraph, or cable company to whom messages herein described may be tendered is hereby required, empowered, and authorized to administer any oath required to be made under the provisions of this act with like effect and force as officers having a seal, and such oath shall be administered without any charge therefor.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person owning or operating any telegraph or telephone line, wireless telegraph, cable, or other means of communication, or any officer, agent, or employee of such person, knowingly to use such property or knowingly to allow such property to be used for the transmission of any message relating to such contracts as are described in section 2 of this act. Any person who shall be guilty of violating this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished for each offense by a fine of not more than $1,000 nor less than $500, and the sending of each message in violation of the provisions of this section shall constitute a separate offense.

SEC. 6. That every book, newspaper, pamphlet, letter, writing, or other publication containing matter tending to induce or promote the making of such contracts as are described in section two of this act is hereby declared to be nonmailable matter, and shall not be carried in the mail or delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier. Any person who shall knowingly deposit or knowingly cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery any matter declared by this section to be nonmailable, or shall knowingly take or cause the same to be taken from the mails for the purpose of circulating or disposing thereof, or of aiding in the circulation or disposition thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 nor less than $500, or shall be imprisoned not more than 5 years nor less than 1 year, or both. Any person violating any of the provisions of this section may be proceeded against by information or indictment and tried and punished either in the district at which the unlawful publication was mailed or to which it is carried by mail for delivery according to the direction thereof, or at which it is caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it is addressed.

SEC. 7. That the Postmaster General, upon evidence satisfactory to himself that any person in sending through the mails of the United States any matter declared by section 6 of this act to be nonmailable, may instruct the postmasters in the post offices at which such mail arrives to return all such mail to the postmaster in the post office at which it was originally mailed, with the word "unlawful" plainly written or stamped upon the outside thereof, and all such mail, when returned to said postmaster, shall be returned to the sender or publisher thereof under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe.

SEC. 8. That in any proceeding under this act all persons may be required to testify and to produce books and papers, and the claim that such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the persons giving such testimony or producing such evidence shall not excuse such person from testifying or producing such books and papers; but no person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or punishment whatever for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence of any character whatever.

If my bill above could be enacted into law, it would, in my judgment, destroy the gambling exchanges and prevent the evils which have so long been complained of by the cotton producers. I offered this bill as a substitute for the pending bill in the Committee on Agriculture; my friend from Arkansas [Mr. JACOWAY] stood with me, but the committee refused to adopt my bill and reported the pending bill. But for the parliamentary status which prohibits the offering of an amendment to the pending bill, I would offer my bill in the House as a substitute for the bill under consideration and vote for it and give the House an opportunity to vote on it, but no amendments are in order and therefore I am unable to do so. Under the present situation we are forced into the position of taking the present bill without amendment or securing no legislation of any kind whatever and leaving the exchanges untrammeled and with no law upon the statute books to go on in their outrageous and damaging practices. The whole matter resolves itself, therefore, into the question as to whether it is better to leave the exchanges as they are, with no law at all, or to pass the pending bill. A vote for the pending bill is a vote against present conditions and practices of the exchanges. My constituents know and all my friends here know that I am earnestly and sincerely opposed to gambling in farm products of every kind, and that I favor destroying it and not regulating it, and I am anxious to secure if possible some legislation to prevent it. I agree with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] "That there is no economic outrage in the United States equal to that of gambling in cotton, and it should be suppressed." [Applause.] He calls attention to the fact that 20 years ago Mr. Hatch, of Missouri, succeeded in passing through this House a bill prohibiting gambling in cotton.

The bill passed the Senate and should have become a law, but it having been amended in the Senate it had to come back to the House, where the amendments were not agreed to, and therefore the bill failed to become a law. From that day until this efforts have been made to pass some legislation on this subject, but all have failed. We now have a chance to secure at least some legislation on the subject, not as drastic as I desire, because I would destroy the gambling exchanges, but I shall vote in the hope of securing some helpful legislation rather than to leave the exchanges to continue their gambling as they are engaged in it at the present time without any regulation or suppression whatsoever.

Now, let me state succinctly and pointedly the provisions of the pending bill, and when they are fully considered I assert without fear of successful contradiction, if this bill is passed, we will have some improvement over present conditions. It levies a tax of $5 a bale on every bale of cotton included in any and all illegal future contracts; that is, contracts where it is the intention and purpose of the parties to deal in cotton futures without any idea of the delivery of any cotton and without owning any cotton. This is believed to be a prohibitive tax, and, if so, will suppress this character of business. It requires every contract in reference to cotton for future delivery to be in writing. It provides, further, what the contract shall contain. It prohibits the delivery of all "dog-tail," "stained," "gin-cut," "repacked," "false-packed," "mix-packed," and "water-packed" cotton, or any cotton under the grade of "good ordinary." It provides that all tenders of cotton shall be the full number of bales specified, and the party tendering it shall furnish to the person receiving it written notice giving the grade of each bale to be delivered; and in case of disagreement as to the grade either party may refer the question to the Secretary of Agriculture to determine the grade, and his decision shall be prima facie evidence in all proceedings in reference thereto. It provides that all settlements shall be made on actual commercial differences upon the sixth business day, prior to the date fixed for delivery in the spot market where the sale is made, and if not made in a spot market then upon the sixth business day prior to the business day fixed for delivery in the spot markets of not less than five places designated from time to time for the purpose by the Secretary of Agriculture.

It establishes the Government grades of cotton, to be designated "middling fair," "strict good middling," "good middling," "strict middling," "middling," "strict low middling" "low middling," "strict good ordinary," and "good ordinary," and designates them as the "official cotton standards" of the United States. It provides that no tax shall be levied on contracts for future delivery of actual cotton, and provides in its face, "This act shall not be construed to impose a tax on any sale of spot cotton." "Spot cotton" is actual cotton in the hands of the farmer, merchant, or owner of cotton. I would not vote for this bill if it taxed cotton. It requires a record to be kept of every sale, open to Government inspection. Now, these are the salient features of the present bill, and I submit to every Member of this House the question as to whether or not, if these features are enacted into law, the cotton producers of the country will not be to some extent benefited. The features requiring a record to be kept of every contract made, the adoption of the Government standards, the right to appeal to the Secretary of Agriculture when dispute arises as to grade, the settlements on commercial differences, the abolition absolutely of settlements on fixed differences, and forbidding the delivery of "dog-tail" and other inferior grades of cotton are enough good features in the bill to justify every man interested in the welfare of the cotton farmer to vote for the bill, and in voting for it vote against the present outrageous gambling practices of the cotton exchanges. I shall vote for the bill only because of the good features in it; but I wish it was a drastic bill destroying and suppressing all possibility of gambling of every kind, and then I could vote for it with delight. The good Lord knows that what I want to do is to help the cotton farmers, who have by their products, in round numbers, added a billion dollars a year to the wealth of this country and helped in the exportation of cotton to bring the yellow gold from foreign countries to our shores to increase the balance of trade in favor of the United States of America. [Applause.] If I did not believe in my heart that this bill would benefit the cotton farmers, I would not under any circumstance vote for it; but believing that it would benefit them and that it is the only chance to secure any legislation whatever at this session, I shall vote for it, and if it becomes a law and proves inadequate to meet conditions we will amend it just as soon as that fact is ascertained and amendatory legislation can be enacted.

The great trouble in finding out exactly what the exchanges do and the extent of their gambling operations has been that they kept no records which were open to inspection, and we could not get from them any definite statement of how many bales of cotton, not in existence, they bought and sold. They admit they probably bought and sold a hundred million bales and possibly a hundred and fifty millions or two hundred millions a year. If this bill becomes a law they will have to keep a record, open to inspection, and by this record we will be able to know the extent of their operations. As this is the only chance for legislation let us now by law at least take some step in the direction of correcting and suppressing if possible their outrageous practices. Let us stop the long delay and give heed to the appeals of the farmers made during all these years, and respond to their request, and at least enact the good provisions of this bill, and then if necessary go further in the future. The issue is made up. Shall we vote for this bill and secure some legislation—and it is in the hope of securing some legislation that I will vote for it—or vote against it, and in doing so vote to continue present conditions and allow gambling in cotton futures to go on without hindrance of any kind whatsoever? I submit this issue to you, and by your vote you will answer it. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] practically puts himself in the attitude of being in favor of no legislation at this time on the subject of cotton exchanges. I want to say to the gentleman in the outset that this is the only chance that we will have to pass a bill on this subject at this session of Congress, and I appeal to him and others who really want legislation on this subject to cease their obstructive tactics in this House and let us get something on the statute books, and then, if the law does not work as well in every particular as we think it ought to work, amend it at the next session of Congress. [Applause.] I represent the largest cotton-producing district in my State, and I speak for the farmers not only of my State but of Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina, Florida, North Carolina, and of every other cotton-producing State in the Union, when I say to you gentlemen that there are provisions in this bill that they want enacted into law. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

[Mr. WINGO addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to lose my good friend from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] from the House, but if he shall persist in the position which he takes, he will be compelled to resign, because we have to legislate by seesawing with the Senate.

Mr. WINGO. To relieve the gentleman's anxiety, I will say that I do not intend to resign.

Mr. SISSON. I am glad of it, for he is a valuable Member of the House. I am going to support this bill, not because it is what we want, but it is a beginning, and there are some features of it that every man from the South must indorse. And there are features of this bill that must go into any bill that will be enacted, and when we get it written on the statute books we can take advantage of the next session of Congress, as suggested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], and can amend it.

I supported the Scott bill which passed the House a few years ago, and which was a very much better bill than this one. I think it a better bill, because it sought to prohibit gambling in cotton on the cotton exchanges. This bill seeks to regulate the cotton exchange, with the hope that by taxing gambling contracts that this will force the gambler off the exchange. I very much fear that this will not happen. I trust that it will.

But the many features in reference to establishing and fixing grades, in reference to the regulation and inspection of contracts and the information which can be gained by Congress for the purpose of securing the Federal tax placed on gambling contracts, will enable the Government, and through the Government will enable the people, to know what is going on.

We have passed through the House on several occasions bills looking to the suppression of gambling in cotton futures. In every case the bill has died in the Senate within the last 15 or 20 years, and usually in the Senate committee. About 20 years ago a bill very similar to the Scott bill was passed by the Senate while Senator J. Z. George, of my own State, was a Member of that body, and this bill had his approval. But this good piece of legislation died in the House of Representatives.

Senator CLARKE of Arkansas had tacked onto the Underwood tariff bill a provision which would have taxed out of existence all cotton gambling, but this provision was lost somehow in the conference committee between the House and Senate; at any rate, it never became a law.

I am getting weary of these futile attempts at legislation. What the farmers of the South want is some legislation that will prevent gambling in cotton futures; and while this bill does not go as far as I would like to have it go, and has some features in it that I do not like, it has some merit in it and is a beginning. If it does not work well, we will have committed the Government to the proposition of controlling the cotton exchanges; and having done this, I believe that the Federal Government, under the pressure of public opinion, will be compelled to finally write the proper law on the statute books.

The most unfortunate thing about the parliamentary situation now is that a bill of this much importance is taken up under the suspension of the rules, which will not permit any amendments to be offered, and which will compel each Member of Congress to either vote for or against the bill; and if we vote against the bill it may mean that it will kill all chances for legislation on this subject at this session, and if we vote for the bill it will mean that we have to take it just as it is reported to the House from the Committee on Agriculture. I regret very much that the membership of this House are denied the privilege of voting on some amendments which could make this bill a good one. Personally I am violently opposed to that feature of the bill which to some extent legalizes dealing in futures, which may sometimes be a pure gambling transaction. No Member of this House would think of taxing a legitimate sale of cotton. This would be an outrage. But the purpose of the bill is to tax illegal sales of cotton, to tax sales when no delivery was contemplated; and if this taxing feature was not in the bill the courts would be compelled to declare it unconstitutional, because the New York exchange is purely a New York institution and the New Orleans exchange a purely Louisiana institution, both under the control of the laws of the respective States, and the Federal Government has no right to invade the domain of the States for the purpose of destroying these gambling institutions. It therefore becomes necessary that you destroy them with the taxing power or destroy them by denying them the use of interstate means of communication, such as denying them the right to use the mails, the telephone, and telegraph lines.

The attempt to destroy the gambling in agricultural products through the taxing power is fraught with danger, because it may sometimes be difficult to determine when a transaction is legal and when it is illegal, when it is a gambling contract and when it is not a gambling contract, and the enemies of this good legislation will muddy the waters as much as possible so as to make this method unpopular with the cotton producers of the country. In fact, unless it is administered with great care the cotton gambler and the cotton speculator might be able to unload this tax upon the cotton farmer. This is my most serious objection to the bill presented to us in this manner by the Committee on Agriculture. But if the bill is properly administered and the law properly enforced this evil can be eliminated. If the Committee on Agriculture had presented to the House the Scott bill, it would have been utterly impossible for the cotton gambler and the cotton speculator to have unloaded the burden on the cotton producer, because the Scott bill would not become effective until the provisions of the law had been violated, and this violation of the law was a criminal violation, and the party violating it would be punished in the criminal court by heavy fine, and might have been punished by imprisonment. I believe that this is the proper method of compelling observance of a law.

This bill proceeds upon the principle of regulation and not upon the principle of destruction. There can be no objection to a legitimate place being established by men for the exchange of their commodities with each other. A bill that would try to prevent this would be clearly unconstitutional. So I would not favor a proposition to destroy a legitimate business, but I would favor a proposition that would totally destroy, root and branch, every feature of gambling connected with all of the agricultural products of the country.

But since I can not at this time support a proposition of this sort, I will with reluctance give my support to this bill, stating at the time that I have some misgivings as to the results, and have some doubts as to its accomplishing very much good. But I do not believe that it can possibly make the situation any worse than it is now, and if it helps the condition in the least, then I feel that my vote is justified. At any rate, it will tend to turn the light on the situation, and I am perfectly willing to give the Secretary of Agriculture all the powers that he is vested with under this bill and give him all of the district attorneys he needs to properly enforce this law and give it a fair trial.

I fear that the fact that the committee saw fit to change completely the bill that passed the Senate may result in a total miscarriage of legislation on this subject at this time. So I feel that it would have been wiser for the committee to have made an effort to remove the objectionable features of the Smith bill rather than to have brought in a complete substitute for the Smith bill.

These are some of the reasons, Mr. Speaker, briefly stated, which cause me to give my support to this bill. I am not in favor of quitting now and not doing anything. I want to write something on the statute books at this time. We have been trying and trying for 20 years, so I say in conclusion let us do something now. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] to use some of his time.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, have I any time remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa has used all of his time.

Mr. LEVER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I think some of the gentlemen who have been considering this bill have confused the use of the power with the merits of the bill. It is proposed to either suppress entirely the exchanges of the country or to regulate them. That is one proposition. The other proposition is to use some power of the Government to accomplish one or the other result. Now, you may have the same bill, whether you call it the Scott bill or the Lever bill or the Bell bill, to accomplish certain results, and you may apply to that bill the taxing power to enforce the law, or the interstate-commerce law to enforce the law, or the power of the use of the mail—the post-office power—to enforce the law. My contention is that the particular power that you use with which to enforce the law is a secondary proposition. But if you want to use the most effective power to enforce any law, there is no greater power in this Government than the power to tax. [Applause.] It is the most effective power that you can use to enforce any legislation. So I think that answers any objection to the mere use of a power to enforce the law. Now, coming down to the real merits of the bill, the question of whether you want the Scott bill, which wipes out, or is intended to wipe out, the cotton exchanges, or the Lever bill, which is intended to regulate the exchanges so only the evils in the exchanges shall be wiped out and good remain, is the real question before the House. Now, outside of going to the merits, in two different Congresses I have supported a bill along the lines of the Scott bill—first, the Scott bill in one Congress, and next a similar bill, the Bell bill, in another Congress—and we have sent them to the Senate of the United States, where they died in committee or on the calendar of the Senate. A similar bill passing the House this time would meet with the same result. But there is an opportunity now to pass a bill that will wipe out the evils of the cotton exchange, the use of the cotton exchange against the cotton producer of this country, and that bill is before the House to-day. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the practices of the New York Cotton Exchange are costing the cotton producers of the South annually $100,000,000. This bill proposes to eliminate from the New York and other cotton exchanges such practices as are laying upon our people this enormous burden. The man who votes against this bill places himself—unconsciously, of course—in the attitude of favoring the continuance of a system which has been denounced in every cotton-growing State of this Union. The man who votes against this bill says, in effect, "I am willing, rather than have this regulatory bill, to stand for the continuance of the evil practices of the New York Cotton Exchange, which have been burdening our people for more than half a century." No man who understands the parliamentary situation in this House can say that it is wise to vote this bill down and send it back to the committee, in the hope of bringing from that committee a more drastic proposition. The man who believes that, or who thinks he believes that, confesses to a culpable ignorance of the situation in this House. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] told you truly that you have an opportunity here in the passage of this bill to send the whole proposition to conference, where the differences between the two Houses can be worked out and some legislation had. Vote this bill down, and every man who knows anything at all about the situation knows that there will be no legislation on the subject at all at this session of Congress. And in the meantime your people and my people will go on suffering an annual loss of $100,000,000 on their cotton crop. I ask that the friends of the farmers, these Bombastes Furiosos that are willing to stand here and refuse to vote for this bill, which they admit is better than the present system, because they can not get precisely what they want——

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I yield for a question.

Mr. TRIBBLE. If the friends of the farmers will vote to send this bill to conference, will the chairman of the Agricultural Committee tell us that he will do what he can to produce another bill that will be satisfactory to the farmers?

Mr. LEVER. The Chairman of the Agricultural Committee will do what he has been doing ever since he has been in Congress. He will bring from conference the best bill of which he is capable in the interests of agriculture. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, these gentlemen who do not support this bill confess themselves to be in favor of a continuance of the multiplicity of standards that prevail in the marketing of cotton. They confess themselves to be in favor of the present fixed-difference system of the New York Cotton Exchange.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. LEVER. I will yield.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I wanted to say this: That I am opposed to the general features of this bill. I admit that some are good and some are bad, but I am opposed to it on account of the bad features.

Mr. LEVER. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will see enough good features in this bill to support it.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I do not.

Mr. LEVER. I thought the gentleman from Georgia saw in this bill a system which was better than the present New York Cotton Exchange system.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. If you kill this bill, you will get a better one.

Mr. LEVER. It will be a mighty long while. Now, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Agriculture has given weeks and weeks to the study of this bill. We have brought cotton experts from every corner of this country to testify. We have engaged the best experts of the Department of Agriculture. We have invited the farmers to appear before this committee, and we believe that we have worked out a bill which will regulate conservatively, sanely, and sensibly, and in the interest of the cotton producers, the evil practices of the cotton exchanges.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. LEVER. And I hope that every friend of the farmer here will vote for this bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. All time has expired.

Mr. ASWELL. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ASWELL. I hold in my hand a bill I introduced on May 24 on this subject written by the national officers of the Farmers' Union of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. ASWELL. And I want to know if there is any opportunity under this parliamentary situation to introduced it as a substitute for the Lever bill? I am for the Lever bill as the best we can do now, if I can not get in this substitute.

The SPEAKER. Not under this bill.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. HULINGS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HULINGS. I have been denied an opportunity to speak on this bill, which I am very deeply interested in, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. LEVER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has already objected.

Mr. LEVER. I was just about to present a request that everybody who desires to do so may be allowed to extend his remarks on this bill.

Mr. MANN. On this side we have been allowed only 20 minutes' debate on this bill, and I am going to object in order to show that that is all the time that was allowed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the document read by the Clerk.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MURDOCK) there were—ayes 84, noes 21.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the ayes are 84 and the noes are 21.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas withdraws the point of no quorum. On this vote the ayes are 84, the noes are 21. Two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules are suspended and the bill is passed.

CONSOLIDATION OF VETERINARY SERVICE, UNITED STATES ARMY.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass House bill 4541 with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill, reading the amendment into it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4541) to consolidate the veterinary service, United States Army, and to increase its efficiency.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint veterinarians and assistant veterinarians in the Army, not to exceed 2 such officers for each regiment of Cavalry and Field Artillery, 15 as inspectors of horses and mules and as veterinarians in the Quartermaster Corps, and 5 as inspectors of meats for the Quartermaster Corps, not to exceed 62 in all.

SEC. 2. That hereafter a candidate for appointment as assistant veterinarian must be a citizen of the United States, between the ages of 21 and 27 years, a graduate of a recognized veterinary college or university, and that he shall not be appointed until he shall have passed a satisfactory examination as to character, physical condition, general education, and professional qualifications.

SEC. 3. That an assistant veterinarian appointed under section 2 of this act shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of second lieutenant; that after five years of service an assistant veterinarian shall be promoted to the rank, pay, and allowances of first lieutenant; that after 15 years of service an assistant veterinarian shall be promoted to veterinarian with the rank, pay, and allowances of captain: Provided, That he passes a satisfactory examination under such rules as the President may prescribe as to professional qualifications and adaptability for the mounted service; or, if found deficient, he shall be discharged from the Army with one year's pay, and have no further claim on the Government.

SEC. 4. That the veterinarians of Cavalry and Field Artillery now in the Army, together with such veterinarians of the Quartermaster Corps provided for in section 1 of this act, now employed, who at the date of the approval of this act shall have less than five years' service, be reappointed as assistant veterinarians with the rank, pay, and allowances of second lieutenant; that the veterinarians who have over five years of service be reappointed and commissioned as assistant veterinarians with the rank, pay, and allowances of first lieutenant; that veterinarians with 15 years of service be reappointed and commissioned as veterinarians with the rank, pay, and allowances of captain: Provided, That they pass a prescribed practical professional examination as to fitness for mounted field service: Provided further, That veterinarians now in the Army and in the employ of the Quartermaster Corps who fail to pass the prescribed physical examination, due to disability incident to the service, and who have been incapacitated from rendering satisfactory service to the Government, shall be retired from active service with 75 per cent of pay corresponding to length of service as prescribed herein.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of War, upon recommendation of the Surgeon General of the Army, may appoint, for such time as their services may be required, such number of reserve veterinarians as may be necessary to attend public animals pertaining to the Quartermaster Corps, who shall have the pay and allowances of second lieutenant during such period of service, and no longer: Provided, That such reserve veterinarians be graduates of a recognized veterinary college or university and have previously passed a satisfactory examination as to character, physical condition, general education, and professional qualifications in like manner as required of assistant veterinarians; such veterinarians (reserve) to constitute a list of eligibles for appointment as assistant veterinarians under the same condition as to age, probationary service, etc., as provided for in section 2 of this act, and such examinations as may be deemed necessary by the Secretary of War for the proper performance of their duties.

SEC. 6. That candidates passing the examinations as prescribed in section 2 of this act shall be appointed, in the order of merit in which they passed such examination, to vacancies as they occur, such appointment to be a probationary one for six months, after which time, if the services of the probationer have been satisfactory, he shall be permanently appointed with commission antedated to embrace such probationary service. Probationary veterinarians whose services are found unsatisfactory shall be discharged at any time during the probationary period, or at the end thereof, without any further claim against the Government.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of War is authorized to appoint a board of examiners to conduct the examinations prescribed herein, one member of which shall be a field officer, one a surgeon, and two veterinarians.

SEC. 8. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and are hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER. The question to be voted on is to suspend the rules and pass this bill. Is a second demanded?

Mr. FOSTER. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. FOSTER. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. Any gentleman who is opposed to it has the preference in demanding a second.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. MANN. Is any amendment reported except the amendment contained in the bill?

Mr. HAY. Only the amendment that is in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Would not the gentleman very briefly tell us what the bill covers?

Mr. HAY. I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] wants to ask me a question.

Mr. FOSTER. The proviso in section 3 means that those who are now in the service who have passed a mental and physical test shall be placed on the retired list?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. And they shall receive only 25 per cent of the pay they are now receiving?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Do they get just 25 per cent all the time, or does the time they have spent in the service make any difference?

Mr. HAY. I do not think section 3 applies to those now in the service. The gentleman means section 4?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I meant section 4. I got on the wrong section.

Mr. HAY. That means that they shall be retired upon three-quarters pay in accordance with length of service. Understand that in the Army a man after serving 5 years gets 10 per cent additional to his flat pay. When he serves 10 years he gets 20 per cent. When he serves 15 years he gets 30 per cent, and when he has served 20 years he gets 40 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. I see also in section 5 this service is placed under the Surgeon General of the Army?

Mr. HAY. Yes. That was recommended by the Secretary of War, both the present Secretary of War and the previous Secretary of War. If the gentleman will read the report, he will find that it is based upon the ground that the Surgeon General's department will be better able to deal with veterinary surgeons than the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. FOSTER. The Medical Department has no one in the office acquainted with the veterinary business?

Mr. HAY. No. They are all physicians and surgeons.

Mr. FOSTER. So that a detail would be made from his office?

Mr. HAY. No. It gives the authority to appoint for this particular corps, but they would not be detailed to the Surgeon General's office.

Mr. FOSTER. Who holds these examinations of these men?

Mr. HAY. A board, as provided for in section 7. The board comprises a field officer, who may be a major or a lieutenant colonel or a colonel, a surgeon, and two veterinarians.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all I care to ask.

Mr. HAY. If there is no further question, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WILLIS. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] to the language in the proviso beginning with line 13 on page 2:

Provided, That he passes a satisfactory examination under such rules as the President may prescribe as to professional qualifications and adaptability for the mounted service; or, if found deficient, he shall be discharged from the Army with one year's pay and have no further claim on the Government.

Would that bar a claim for pension, or would he be entitled to the time in any case?

Mr. HAY. He would only be entitled to a pension if he incurred some disability in line of duty.

Mr. WILLIS. If he has incurred the disability, this would not be a bar to a pension?

Mr. HAY. I think not. If he incurred a disability in line of duty before the five years expired, he would be entitled, then, to a pension.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In that particular, I wish to inquire of the gentleman as to when the language of the proviso applies, requiring that these assistant veterinarians must pass a satisfactory examination, under such rules as the President may prescribe, as to professional qualifications and adaptability for the mounted service?

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman ask how does it apply?

Mr. STAFFORD. When is it intended that the assistant veterinarian shall be examined for appointment?

Mr. HAY. They will be examined as soon as this bill becomes a law—the veterinarians now in the service.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am quite well acquainted with that fact. We are now considering this provision, which relates also to those who are to come into the service.

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are they at the time of their entrance examination to be examined as to their adaptability for mounted service?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I suppose they will not be discharged from the Army with one year's pay?

Mr. HAY. Oh, no. That relates to men who are to be examined for promotion. If they are examined and found deficient, then they are discharged with one year's pay.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume this requirement pertains to the examination when he enters the service as to all those who come into the service hereafter?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. And that there can not be a case of a person found physically unadapted to mounted service after he has been in the service.

Mr. HAY. Yes; if after five years he comes up for promotion.

Mr. WILLIS. I think I did not quite understand the gentleman's answer, or he did not understand my question. The language to which I am calling attention begins with the proviso in line 13:

Provided, That he passes a satisfactory examination under such rules as the President may prescribe as to professional qualifications and adaptability for the mounted service; or, if found deficient, he shall be discharged from the Army with one year's pay and have no further claim on the Government.

Now, if the officer in question had incurred disease or suffered wounds in the service so as to be entitled to a pension under existing law, I do not understand why this would not bar his claim for a pension.

Mr. HAY. As I understand it, if he incurred a disability in the line of duty he would be discharged for that disability.

Mr. WILLIS. Not necessarily so. The mere fact that he got a pension, would that necessarily bar him from the service?

Mr. HAY. I should think so. I do not think anybody in active service gets a pension. I do not know of any such case.

Mr. WILLIS. It occurred to me that there might be some possibility that that would not be sufficient——

Mr. HAY. Any disability that would be sufficient to give him a pension would be sufficient to discharge him for disability.

Mr. WILLIS. If that is the case, that answers my question.

Mr. HAY. I think so, undoubtedly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, further——

Mr. HAY. In answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin, I call attention to the fact that this section applies to people who have already served, and it applies to the examination of these officers for promotion. It says that after five years of service an assistant veterinarian shall be promoted to the rank, pay, and allowances of a first lieutenant. He can only be promoted, however, if he passes a satisfactory examination, and so forth.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, section 2 provides for the examination of candidates for appointment as assistant veterinarians in the future.

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Section 3 refers to section 2, and to those appointed under section 2. Those two sections refer to those who are to be appointed in the future. Now, when I read this bill the query came to me whether they would be compelled to take this examination as to adaptability for mounted service only when they were candidates for the rank of captain after 15 years' service, or whether they would be submitted to that test when first appointed to the grade of second lieutenant.

Mr. HAY. No; when they are first appointed they pass an examination as provided in section 2, as to character, physical condition, general education, and professional qualifications. After they have been in the service 5 years they come up for promotion to the rank of first lieutenant. Then they must pass a satisfactory examination as to professional qualifications and adaptability for mounted service.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is not that only after they have been in the service 15 years, when they are candidates for captaincies?

Mr. HAY. No; it applies to those who have been in the service 5 years as second lieutenants, when they come up for examination for promotion to be first lieutenants.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why would not this same examination cover the requirement for adaptability to mounted service?

Mr. HAY. Because when they first come in it is only prescribed that they shall be examined as to character, physical condition, general education, and professional qualifications.

Mr. STAFFORD. Physical condition does not embody the idea that they shall be physically qualified for mounted service?

Mr. HAY. It does not, because they might not have had any experience in riding.

Mr. STAFFORD. So a man must show that he has that ability at the end of 5 years.

Mr. HAY. During the first 5 years.

Mr. STAFFORD. During the 5 years he has the rank of a second lieutenant?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Another question: As I read the bill, the committee did not follow the recommendation of the department to make this an adjunct to the Medical Corps of the Army?

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman will read the report, he will see that under the bill——

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inform the gentleman that I have read the report, and I favor the bill instead of the suggestion of the Surgeon General—that this be made a part of the Medical Corps. You attach it to the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. HAY. The report at the bottom of page 6 states this:

> The War Department has given its approval to this bill. The Secretary of War recommends that the veterinarians be placed in the Medical Corps. This bill is so drawn that the Secretary of War will be able to place these officers under the control of any department which he may deem best for the interests and efficiency of this service.

Now, if you will read the bill carefully, you will see that nowhere does the bill place any part of this corps under any particular bureau of the War Department, but places it under the Secretary of War, and the reserve veterinarians who are to be appointed by the Surgeon General.

Mr. STAFFORD. But you do permit them to be assigned to the Quartermaster's Corps.

Mr. HAY. They have to be, because the Quartermaster's Corps has a large number of animals.

Mr. STAFFORD. That feature of the bill appeals to me very much.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. What does the gentleman say to this: Suppose an examination is held, as provided in the proviso, and it is found that the officer in question is deficient, and he is discharged from the service; suppose that subsequently to this the officer should apply for a pension on the ground that he incurred disease in the service which had not manifested itself until after he was discharged, that he was discharged for some other reason, but disease developed and he offered to prove that he contracted the disease in the service?

Mr. HAY. If he could prove that he contracted the disease in the service, I think he would be entitled to a pension.

Mr. WILLIS. But here is the language—that if he is discharged he shall have no further claim against the Government.

Mr. HAY. I do not think a pension is regarded technically as a claim against the Government. I do not think there is any question, if he could prove that while in the Army he incurred a disease in the line of duty, that he will be entitled to a pension.

Mr. WILLIS. What is the necessity for this language, then?

Mr. HAY. This language is the exact language carried in the bill providing for appointment to the Medical Corps. Where a man is examined for promotion in that corps and is found deficient, he is discharged with one year's pay, and the law goes on to say he shall have no further claim against the Government.

Mr. WILLIS. I am anxious to get the gentleman's opinion, for it may be of value hereafter in interpreting the statute. It is the gentleman's opinion that if he incurred a disease in the Army in the line of duty——

Mr. HAY. If he incurred a disease in the line of duty and could prove it——

Mr. WILLIS. He will be entitled to a pension, notwithstanding this language?

Mr. HAY. I think so.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken, and two-thirds voting in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider in the House, as in Committee of the Whole House, House joint resolution 286, extending appropriations for the operation of the Government beyond the end of the fiscal year.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to consider House joint resolution 286, providing for extending appropriations for a certain length of time. Is there objection?

Mr. MURDOCK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I was on the point this morning of asking the gentleman a question which I would like to ask now. What is the reason for this resolution reaching the appropriations made for the Interstate Commerce Commission for the valuation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The appropriations for the physical valuations of railroads during the current fiscal year amount to $489,627.09. If there be made available only one twenty-fourth of the amount for the first 15 days in July, it would give them only $20,000. They contemplate spending during the month of July about $125,000, so that we are providing for the first 15 days $65,000.

Mr. MURDOCK. Making an exception of them?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; giving them more than they otherwise would have.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of requests for information regarding appropriation bills as they have passed the House up to this time. I have prepared a statement and I will ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in order that I may print it in the RECORD at this place so that the information will be available for Members.

The total amount of appropriations carried by the 13 regular annual appropriation bills, including he river and harbor bill, for the support of the Government for the fiscal year 1915, as passed by the House at this session, is $943,754,713.47; in addition to that sum there is authorized to be expended during that year the further estimated amount of $131,196,407 under permanent appropriations, or a total authorized expenditure, so far as the House has expressed its will at this session, of $1,074,951,120.47 for the support of the public service during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1914, and ending June 30, 1915.

The total estimates submitted by the executive departments at the beginning of the session in December last, and in supplemental documents since that time, amount to $1,114,383,619.24.

The whole sum granted in the regular annual appropriation bills as passed by the House, together with the estimated amount expendable under permanent appropriations, is $39,432,498.77 less than the total estimates submitted to Congress.

The sums stated as total estimates submitted to Congress and the amount of the annual bills as passed by the House includes $60,717,000 to meet the public debt sinking-fund requirements for the fiscal year 1915.

The total of the appropriations as passed by the House, together with the permanent appropriations, exclusive of the $60,717,000 for the sinking fund, is $1,014,234,120.47.

The total revenues of the Government were estimated at the beginning of the session last December at $1,035,000,000, or an excess or surplus of $20,765,879.53 over the appropriations approved by the House, if the sum for the sinking fund is not taken into account.

The total reduction of the public debt under the sinking-fund requirements has not reached the sum of $1,000,000 under any one of the last four fiscal years and scarcely exceeded $100,000 for the fiscal year 1913.

The state of the public debt is such that it is a matter of no great concern whether the regular annual requirements of the sinking fund either as a whole or in substantial part be met during the next fiscal year, for the reason that we have no outstanding bonds maturing before 1918. Of the Spanish War loan of 1908, under which bonds amounting to $198,792,660 were issued redeemable after 1908 but not payable until 1918, there remain outstanding now only $63,945,460.

Without any purpose of instituting invidious distinctions, it is not uninteresting to note, as shown by the record of the regular annual appropriation bills at this session, that the total regular annual estimates were reduced in the sum of $39,432,498.77, or 4 per cent.

The estimates under the regular annual bills prepared by the Committee on Appropriations, amounting to $357,832,372.73, which sum is 36.3 per cent of the total of all estimates submitted to Congress, were reduced in the total sum of $27,592,553.26, or nearly 8 per cent, or, to be exact, the reduction is 7.7 per cent.

The estimates under the regular annual bills prepared by other committees of the House, controlling one bill each, amounting to $625,354,839.51, which sum is 63.6 per cent of the total of all estimates submitted to Congress, were reduced in the total sum of $11,839,945.51, or less than 2 per cent, and, to be exact, only 1.8 per cent.

The most notable reductions made in any single bill below the estimates submitted for that bill occur in the sundry civil and Army bills, which were reduced by $17,535,289.77 and $10,757,181.49, respectively.

If the total estimates submitted for the regular annual appropriation bills had been reduced by 7.7 per cent, as were the estimates for bills prepared by the Committee on Appropriations, the total reduction in all of the regular annual estimates would have been $75,705,415.34 instead of only $39,432,498.77.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. This resolution extends the appropriations until the middle of July?

Mr. FITZGERALD. For 15 days.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that the appropriation bills generally will be disposed of at that time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We hope that they will be. The appropriation bills now undisposed of are the Agricultural, the legislative, the District, the Indian, and the sundry civil.

Mr. MANN. I thought that the Agricultural bill had been disposed of.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Senate has not yet acted on the conference report.

Mr. MANN. I think the conference report was agreed to on Saturday.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] stated to me this morning that it had not been acted upon by the Senate. In the District bill there are three items still in dispute. The Indian appropriation bill has not gone to conference, the legislative bill is in conference, and the sundry civil has not passed the Senate. We hope in two weeks' time that they may all be passed, so that at least the appropriation bills will be out of the way.

Mr. MANN. Suppose this resolution were not to pass. Under the law would the Government stop—I do not mean actually, but as far as the law is concerned—or would they have authority to proceed without appropriation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In a great many instances it would be necessary to stop the employment of innumerable employees in the service.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

CELEBRATION OF TREATY OF GHENT.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 13922) to approve of the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the signing of the treaty of Ghent between the United States of America and Great Britain and Ireland, and of the century of peace and amity between the United States and other nations, as amended, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to appoint three members, the Vice President three members, who shall be Members of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives three members, who shall be Members of the House of Representatives, of a commission to be known as the Peace Centenary Celebration Commission, and that the Vice President of the United States and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall be ex officio members of said commission.

It shall be the duty of the commission to confer with such other commissions or committees as may have been or shall be constituted for similar purposes in the United States, Great Britain, Canada, and other countries, and to report to the Congress a plan for the appropriate celebration in the National Capital and elsewhere of the one hundredth anniversary of the signing of the treaty of Ghent.

SEC. 2. That the commissioners shall serve without compensation. For the expenses of the commission, including salary of a secretary, clerical service, traveling and office expenses, printing, and the preparation of plans, etc., the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to be immediately available.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAY). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. DONOVAN. Is it too late to enter an objection to the consideration of this bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to 20 minutes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to appoint a commission to arrange for the celebration of the hundredth anniversary of peace between this country and Great Britain.

On December 24, 1814, a treaty between this country and Great Britain was concluded in the city of Ghent, Belgium, and was ratified on February 17, 1815, which has resulted in 100 years of peace between the English-speaking countries of the world.

Patriotic citizens in this country, Great Britain, and Canada conceived the idea of celebrating this century of peace. Committees were formed in all of these countries to carry out this purpose. The American committee has on its membership the President of the United States, ex-President Taft, ex-President Roosevelt, Vice President Marshall, Hon. William Jennings Bryan, Hon. Alton B. Parker, Hon. Levi P. Morton, Hon. Charles W. Fairbanks, Hon. Elihu Root, Mr. Andrew Carnegie, Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Mr. Nicholas Murray Butler, and many other distinguished citizens. These gentlemen favor an appropriate celebration of this event and have given the influence of their great names to bring about this result.

This committee proposed, in a bill introduced in the House by Mr. SMITH of New York, to provide for the appointment of a peace centenary celebration commission, to consist of 15 members, 11 of whom should be appointed by the President and 4 of whom should be ex officio members, namely, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the President pro tempore of the Senate, and the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. This commission was to report a plan for an appropriate celebration in Washington and elsewhere, and asked for an appropriation of $150,000 for this preliminary work. None of the 15 members provided for in that bill would have had any connection with Congress except the Vice President, the President pro tempore of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House, and the commission thus constituted would probably have recommended a very ambitious plan for this celebration.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs believes that there should be a proper celebration of this great occasion. The subject has been more sympathetically taken up in Canada by the leading citizens and public officials in that Dominion. It has been taken up enthusiastically in Great Britain, and a very large and important committee, comprising the leading men in public and private life in Great Britain, have associated themselves together as the British committee for the celebration of the one hundred years of peace.

The British committee has moved forward in a very practical way and has already made the purchase of Sulgrave Manor, the home of the Washingtons, which is to be preserved as a public monument to the family of our first President and for the glory of both countries.

What is necessary for us to do at this time is to give some official recognition and the proof of official interest on the part of our Government in the furtherance of this plan.

The pending bill is for this purpose; and further, it provides for the appointment of a commission to arrange for the proper character of celebration to be held in Washington and elsewhere in this country.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs decided it would be better to have a number of Members of Congress on this commission, in order to hold down the suggestions for appropriations to such an amount as Congress would be likely to appropriate. It also felt that the appropriation for the preliminary work should not be very large. The committee therefore reported the pending bill, which provides for a commission of 11, consisting of the Vice President, the Speaker of this House, three members to be appointed by the President, three members by the Vice President from the membership of the Senate, and three by the Speaker from the membership of the House; and provides for an appropriation of $25,000 to meet the necessary expenses of this commission.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs feels that this is an important event and should be properly celebrated. It is not intended to confine this commemoration to the countries involved, viz, the United States and Great Britain, but it is the hope of those who project this scheme that there will be associated in the commemoration the leading nations of the world, and that every opportunity and inducement will be given to them, and we feel confident that they will gladly associate themselves with the celebration which is significant to the whole peace-loving world.

It is a particularly interesting occasion to the citizens of this country. Great Britain never accepted the verdict at Yorktown and a second war was therefore necessary to fully establish the results of the great triumph of our Revolutionary War and our integrity as a Nation.

The outcome of the War of 1812 irrevocably decided that question for all time, and its acceptance by Great Britain was set forth in the treaty of Ghent.

When we think of the devastation and the wasteful effects of war, with all of its present and following evils, we may well take the time and make the expenditure necessary to glorify the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of peace between these great nations.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there is a constant temptation whenever the fiftieth or the one hundredth or the two hundredth or the three hundredth or the four hundredth anniversary of something occurs for people to ask the Government to pay some money out of the Treasury so that they may be exploited. As a rule, the people who ask it ask it because they want to get the advertisement, the notoriety, to have their names printed in the paper, to be able to tell what great people they are, at the expense of the rest of the people, who do not care very much about it. We are now getting along to the time when everything connected with the War of 1812 and any victories we had some one will want to celebrate. Every year they will desire a celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of this or that event, and some of them even want to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary. Modestly here they first asked for $150,000 for preliminary suggestions. I think the committee did well in cutting it down to $25,000, and yet if the original request had been for $25,000 for preliminary suggestions it seems to me a very large amount of money could have been saved. Of course they will ask that we appropriate a half a million or a million dollars for some kind of doings in Washington, where these good people—and I do not doubt they are good people—will have a chance to ride in a parade and some of them to make speeches, which we will print at the public expense, binding it in half morocco, so that they can distribute them. What does it all amount to? Whom does it do any good? Of what benefit is it to anyone? It does not make a particle of difference, so far as our relations with Great Britain are concerned. If we could entirely forget the war of 100 years ago we would be better friends with Great Britain. Every time you have one of these celebrations you revive the animosity which comes out of the conduct of the English people a hundred years ago. Why not celebrate the day they burned the Capitol Building? Do them honor; do it brown; tell them what great people they were when they marched up to Washington and burned the Capitol Building. For my part, I would like to forget all about it. I do not see any good accomplished in wasting money now on that subject.

I yield five minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER].

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion this is a splendid scheme on the part of some individuals who want to promote themselves as advocates of peace. It is nothing but a bunco game that is going to be worked off on the American public, because anybody who has read history knows that there has never been 100 years of peace between this country and Great Britain. Everyone knows the attitude of Great Britain toward this country in every crisis that our Government has been in. To expend $25,000 for a matter of this kind is simply wasting the money of the people, because the whole movement is unwarranted by every fact. I can not understand who conceived the idea of trying to bunco the American people by any such move, and I hope that the Congress will defeat this resolution and refuse the expenditure of money for any such purpose. I hope that gentlemen here will oppose the appointment of this commission. I do not believe it is warranted. I do not believe that the Congress ought to expend money for any such purpose. Talk about peace with America! Talk about England being at peace with any country! She is at peace only when it is to her advantage to be at peace. Who wants this celebration in this country? I know the people of my district do not want it, and I hope that you folks, who represent American constituencies, will oppose any such movement to spend the money of the American people.

Mr. Speaker, the passage of this law would be a sham upon history; it would fly into the teeth of historic fact, and proclaim to the country and to the world a glaring lie.

One hundred years ago the British invaders, under Gen. Ross, with a force of 4,000 men, appeared in the Potomac, captured Washington, and before evacuating the city burned the public buildings to the ground, razing to the ground this magnificent Capitol in which we assemble to guide the destinies of the Republic. Few more shameful acts are recorded in civilized history, and it was the more disgustingly shameful in the fact that this atrocious act of vandalism was done under strict orders issued direct from the Government in England.

And now we hear men born in America, and some who were not, prating pusillanimously about "hands across the sea," "one blood, one language, one race," and rot of that kind, and actually within these honored walls asking for an extravagant appropriation of the public moneys to celebrate an alleged century of peace—peace with the nation that perpetrated these atrocities.

Peace! Peace! There has not been a hundred years of peace between Britain and this country. Perfidious Albion has always been ready to make war upon us—not by indulgence in open and overt acts of war, but by secret, treacherous conspiracies to weaken and destroy us.

When, during our late rebellion, she found her opportunity to strike, she did not hesitate to deliver the deadly blow. She attempted to form a European coalition against the Union; and if it were not for the determined front of the Emperor of all the Russias, her scheme would have been consummated.

In the Spanish-American War her diplomacy, ever active to weaken our prestige, exerted her agencies against us. Wherever, in all our trials and foreign complications, Britain found it conducive to her own interest—and that was ever the case—she never hesitated to show her animosity toward us, either actively or secretly; and now we are asked by legislation of this kind to proclaim to the world that profound peace has prevailed between the United States and Britain for 100 years. It is not true; it is not the fact; and as a body of legislators, legislating for a decent, progressive, and self-respecting people, anxious to be at peace with all the world, it is our duty to ourselves and to the country to defeat this bill by a majority so overwhelming and decisive that its advocates will never have the temerity to call it up again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds not having voted——

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 19, noes 44.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-nine gentlemen are present, not a quorum, and the Doorkeeper——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The House was dividing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There being no quorum, and a question being before the House, the call is automatic. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 52, nays 187, answered "present" 8, not voting 186, as follows:

The name of Mr. SLOAN was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, and the Doorkeeper will open the doors.

REMISSION OF PORTION OF CHINESE INDEMNITY.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I move the rules be suspended and that House joint resolution 173 be passed with committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. Are they committee amendments or individual amendments?

Mr. TOWNSEND. They are committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution with the committee amendments in it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 173, to amend the joint resolution of May 25, 1908, providing for the remission of a portion of the Chinese indemnity.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer from the sum of $2,000,000 reserved from the "Chinese indemnity, 1900," by provisions of the joint resolution of May 25, 1908, and place to the credit of the fund for "defending suits in claims against the United States" such sums as the Attorney General may from time to time certify to said Secretary as having been expended under his authority and direction in defending claims of citizens of the United States against said Chinese indemnity fund in the Court of Claims of the United States, exclusive of salaries; also that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the credit of the said Court of Claims with the Public Printer, from the said reservation of $2,000,000, upon the certificate of the chief justice of said court, such sums as the said court may have spent, or shall hereafter spend, for printing testimony in the trial of the said claims; and further, that there shall be allowed as costs in the suits in which recoveries have been, or may hereafter be, had under the said joint resolution of May 25, 1908, such expenses of the claimants, including reasonable counsel fees, as the said Court of Claims may adjudge to be fair and just, and such costs so allowed shall be paid out of the said reserved sum of $2,000,000 by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the certificate of the said court: Provided, That within three months from the passage of this act applications for such costs shall be filed as supplementary motions in the said court by or on behalf of the persons who have recovered judgments under the said joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the resolution?

Mr. MANN. I certainly am.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands a second.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from New Jersey is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois to 20 minutes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, after the award by China to the individuals and nations that suffered from the antiforeign outbreak known as the Boxer uprising a commission, consisting of delegates from the various interested nations, decided upon the manner of distributing the damages claimed, and for which China held itself responsible and paid. That commission, among other things, laid down this rule for the administration of the fund for reimbursement:

> Damages shall be assessed, as far as possible, in conformity with the above-mentioned principles, with a view to putting Governments, societies, companies, and private individuals back in the position in which they would have been if the antiforeign movement of 1900 had not taken place.

The claims for damages were heard by this commission, and in 1903 Congress gave jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to adjudicate these claims for damages. Some 8 or 10 of the claimants, out of a total of 20 or more, were allowed damages by the Court of Claims under the jurisdiction given it by this act of Congress. The act, however, did not give the Court of Claims authority to consider claims for costs. These costs in this particular set of circumstances, as Members will readily understand, are extraordinary and inevitable. Some of these claimants were not people who were damaged because they were living and doing business in China, but were responsible and old-established commercial institutions not expatriated but paying taxes and doing business in this country.

They were, however, very large shippers of American products to China. One that I have in mind, a representative of which appeared before our committee, sells in the Far East annually very many million dollars' worth of the products of American factories and shops. Among the goods they sell are many million dollars' worth of the kind of cotton manufactured in the South, and it was through the industry and energy and enterprise of this commercial institution that I refer to that the southern cotton mills first obtained their now very profitable business in their grade of cotton in the Far East. This institution, among others, was put to a very large cost in collecting evidence, for which, of course, they had to send to China, and, naturally, there were very large fees for the prosecutions of their suits. I know that among lawyers here the objection has been made that reasonable fees should not be paid, because it is not customary; but in this case you will understand it is not the claim of a litigant to be allowed fees to be charged against another litigant. These fees are collectible from a fund now in the Treasury of the United States, which fund was so distributed to those who lost because of this antiforeign outbreak, as I have read, with the view of putting such governments, companies, societies, and individuals back into the position they would have been in if the antiforeign movement of 1900 had not taken place.

Now, obviously, if these claimants are not permitted to recover from the court the very extraordinary and unusual expenses they were forced to incur, they are denied just that much share of justice.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. TOWNSEND. With pleasure.

Mr. RAKER. I see two classes of cases. First, where recovery has been had, namely, the cost of litigation and attorneys' fees. Now, in those cases where recovery has been had, what is the estimated cost to-day? Does the gentleman know?

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; I do not know accurately, because our hearing was attended by representatives of only 2 of these 8 or 10 claimants.

Mr. RAKER. Now, taking this same class of claimants where recovery has already been had, what is the estimated or claimed amount of attorneys' fees to be taken in these cases where judgment has been had?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have not the hearings before me. I will say to the gentleman from California, but I think that the estimate made before our committee was $90,000, or something like that—complete bills, of course. How much of that would be attorneys' fees I do not know, although I will say to the gentleman from California that these attorney fees were large—and justly and necessarily large—and, of course, I believe that the innocent parties who suffered because of these antiforeign outbreaks are justified in collecting these fees.

Mr. RAKER. Taking the other class—the second one—where recovery has not yet been had, can you make any estimate of the probable cost?

Mr. TOWNSEND. There will be no more cases brought before the Court of Claims.

Mr. RAKER. In this second class of cases, what are the probable or estimated attorneys' fees?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Why, they are not permitted under this act to make their claims. Only those who have recovered from the court are permitted to make their claims. Only those who have recovered from the court are permitted by this resolution now to make claims before the court for costs.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ].

Mr. RAKER. I would like to ask the gentleman in regard to this: It is provided on lines 10 to 12, on page 2—

> That there shall be allowed no costs in the suits in which recoveries have been, or may hereafter be, had under the said joint resolution

Now, that refers not only to costs, but attorneys' fees, namely, in the cases where recovery has been had, and second, attorneys' fees where recovery has been had as well as where recovery has not been had.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will say to the gentleman that that is the language of the resolution, but, as a matter of fact, the cases in which recovery has not been had have practically been disposed of by the court.

I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ].

Mr. DUPRÉ. I want to ask if the gentleman from New Jersey was quite sure of the correctness of the statement made in the reports, that even if the claims of the United States were allowed, 50 per cent of the amount that was set aside would be remitted to China?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is quite true. A very large sum has already been remitted, and there is $2,000,000 held in the Treasury for further payments.

I only want to say at the present that the committee has had this resolution under consideration for some time. Twice it has referred it to the State Department. In each instance it has received a favorable report one from the Secretary of State, Mr. Knox, and one from John Bassett Moore, then counselor for the department. I will not read these favorable reports, but such is the case.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has reserved 12 minutes. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the Boxer insurrection in China was in 1900. At the end of that insurrection the various powers of the world that were interested in it exacted some indemnity from China. The Government of the United States exacted a considerable indemnity—$24,000,000, or something like that, I believe. The powers declared that this fund which was exacted from China was for the purpose of refunding to the Governments their expenses. The purpose of the indemnity was to put the Governments back into the positions they occupied, so far as expenses were concerned, before the uprising, and for taking care of the societies, corporations, and private individuals who had been injured by the insurrection. A commission was appointed for the purpose of determining the damages to which American citizens and American corporations had been subjected in the Boxer insurrection.

One of the principal claimants before that commission was the China & Japan Trading Co., which had a claim of something more than half a million dollars. The commission turned down the claim and refused to allow it. I do not recall whether they allowed any portion of it, but I know the bulk of it was not allowed.

The China & Japan Trading Co. has some very active people connected with it in the United States as well as in China, and they proceeded to get busy about legislation, and secured the passage of an act, in 1908, which permitted any claimant whose claim had been refused by the commissioners to file a claim in the Court of Claims, and this company filed its claim in the Court of Claims, with a number of other concerns. The Court of Claims has allowed on these different claims, I believe, something over $700,000.

In this bill of 1908 it was provided that while most of this indemnity which we had exacted from China, over and above that which was necessary to refund to the Government its expenses and the other claimants, should be paid back to China; but in the act of 1908 we also provided that we should retain out of this sum, which amounted to ten or twelve million dollars, $2,000,000 in the Treasury to meet the amounts which the Court of Claims might allow.

As I said, they have allowed about $700,000. I do not recall the exact amount allowed to the China & Japan Trading Co., but I am informed by them that it was about 80 per cent of their claim.

Mr. STAFFORD. The amount of their claim was $501,320, and they were allowed $640,855, including interest.

Mr. MANN. So that, out of a total of $782,000 allowed in claims, this company was allowed a claim of over $600,000.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The total that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] read was not the total allowance of the court, was it?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have here a memorandum from the clerk of the Court of Claims, in which he says that the amount of the judgment in favor of the China & Japan Trading Co. was $640,855.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understood the gentleman to say that was the amount of the claim.

Mr. MANN. That is the amount allowed by the Court of Claims.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is the amount allowed by the Court of Claims, but it is not the amount of their suffering by two or three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. MANN. That is another thing. The first commissioners refused to allow them any sum at all. Then they secured action by Congress which permitted them to file their claims in the Court of Claims. They were not specifically named; there were a few other claimants for small amounts; but they were the ones that secured the action of Congress. They filed their claim in the Court of Claims, and the Court of Claims allowed them $640,855. I think it was about 80 per cent of their original claim, and their original claim was $564,779.20, exclusive of interest.

Now, what do they want? I read from the statement made by the company:

> In May, 1901, the United States minister at Pekin invited claims from American merchants in China for their losses. These claims were passed upon by two commissioners appointed by the legation. The awards by the commissioners in 1902 were made under a misapprehension, and for six years we were constant in our attempt to get adjudication of our claim. That was finally given us by Congress by act of May 25, 1908, sending us to the Court of Claims. After a trial extending over a year and exhaustive in all details we were given by the court an award of about 80 per cent, certain items being changed by the court under the interpretation of the act. We may say in passing that these expenses of ours are moderate—about 15 per cent of the award—and there is no other interest outside of our own in their recovery.

Now, they have received the amount of the award. They have had two trials at this. Having been defeated in the first trial before the commissioners appointed by our Government, they secured a chance to file their claim in the Court of Claims, as thousands of other claims are filed. They have received a special favor from Congress, allowing them to make a second effort to collect their claim; and having received that and collected their claim, they now want us to reverse every precedent that the Government has made from the beginning of the Government down to this hour and pay their expenses and their counsel fees. And that is all there is involved in this matter.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will yield for a question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What precedent has the gentleman in mind of such a set of circumstances as this—a claim against a Government indemnity fund?

Mr. MANN. We had exacted from China an indemnity of $24,000,000, which probably would not have placed this Government in the position it was in before the insurrection, but we desired to show to China our generosity and our gracious interest in China, and we decided to refund about half of that indemnity to China for that purpose. We were endeavoring to show our generosity to China by refunding as much of this fund as possible after paying the amount of the claims actually awarded. I consider that fund even more sacred than the ordinary money in the Treasury. My friend from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] thinks that because the money does not belong to the United States—though it does, as a matter of fact—because we propose to pay China the balance, we ought to pay counsel fees out of it. We would not pay counsel fees if the money was a claim against the United States. To me it is that much more reason why we should not pay counsel fees out of a fund which we propose to give back to China as a matter of generous treatment.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. If we allow these claims, or practically this one claim, this will be the only claim on which the Government will allow expenses and attorneys' fees, and all the rest of them will not have that benefit.

Mr. MANN. No; they all come in.

Mr. TOWNER. I mean on those that have preceded—those that are allowed by the commission.

Mr. MANN. On those which the commission allowed under the original indemnity no counsel fees would be permitted. On those claims that the original commission turned down and then Congress permitted the claimants to file their claims in the Court of Claims, it is proposed to allow counsel fees. On those claims which were good without doubt it is not proposed to allow any counsel fees. On those claims which were doubtful, that the commission threw out and the Court of Claims allowed, it is proposed to set a precedent by allowing counsel fees amounting to about 15 per cent, as these gentlemen inform us, of their claim. I can see no reason why we should depart from the traditional policy of our Government, which is not to allow counsel fees in suits brought against the Government for claims against the Government.

They say this $2,000,000 belonged to China. Well, it is in the Treasury of the United States. I hope some time soon we will be able to refund what is left of it, something over $1,000,000; but if all the people who had these claims to begin with find it so easy to work Congress on claims of this kind, we will have a whole lot of outlawed claims brought in again, and we will turn them over to the Court of Claims until there will be nothing left of the million or so dollars in the Treasury.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman why this money has not been refunded? For what purpose is it being held now? I was under the impression——

Mr. MANN. I can answer the gentleman's question. When the original commissioners turned down a lot of claims, including the one I have specifically referred to, which is the largest, those claimants urged Congress to pass a law, which was passed May 25, 1908, reserving $2,000,000 of the fund in the Treasury until the claims which might be brought in the Court of Claims had been disposed of.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is that the Howard bill, or the Foster bill, perhaps?

Mr. TOWNSEND. This is the Foster bill. I inherited it. I did not originate it, but I am very fond of it.

Mr. MANN. This resolution now pending is a Foster resolution, not the original act that was passed.

Mr. McCOY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. McCOY. Can the gentleman tell us whether or not the claims referred to in this measure were turned down by the original commission because the commission claimed that they did not have the power to pass on that specific kind of claims?

Mr. MANN. I understand not, from a letter which I hold in my hand, a portion of which I have read, from the China & Japan Co. The original commission did not think the claims were proper, as I understand.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, the solicitude of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] for the integrity of the remaining million and a third of this Chinese indemnity fund is interesting and in some aspects touching. I have a solicitude for the commercial industries and commercial concerns of this country that by enterprise and daring and the use of capital expand the commerce of our country.

I have no special anxiety that $1,300,000 of this $2,000,000 shall be returned to China so long as there is any justice in any claim which may be filed against it. I call attention to the fact that we are not deciding here that this Japan-Chinese Trading Co. shall be allowed any costs. This is merely preliminary. This merely allows these claimants, who have fallen from 20 to 50 per cent short of being put back into the position in which they would have been had it not been for this antiforeign outbreak, to present their claims to the Court of Claims and permit that court to decide whether there is any justice in their claims. If there is justice in those claims I am quite content that the amount shall be taken out of the $1,300,000 of the Chinese indemnity fund thus far unexpended. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] speaks of only one of the 11 claimants who have recovered. In proportion to his loss the least of these claimants is entitled to as much consideration, in my estimation, as is the largest claimant.

This does not overturn any long-established system of court practice, as I understand it, to allow the claimant against an indemnity fund to recover damages under these circumstances. This fund was created for the purpose in part sought to be accomplished by this resolution. In view of what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has just stated, I want once again to direct the attention of gentlemen to this instruction to the Court of Claims that they should finally make a distribution from this fund, so that, as far as possible, the governments, societies, companies, and private individuals shall be placed back in the position in which they would have been if the antiforeign movement of 1900 had not taken place.

Now, I have referred, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has referred, especially to this trading company. It asks the permission of Congress to go into the court and present a state of affairs upon which it wants that court to pass. What is this wicked company? It is an association of merchants formed three-quarters of a century ago in Boston, having its headquarters in Burley's Slip, New York. It is a corporation whose stock is somewhat widely scattered, but held chiefly by people in Boston and New York, and who have gladly invested their funds in a company of this high standing, which has existed for three-quarters of a century, which began at a time when steamships to Japan were unheard of. It began sending out miscellaneous cargoes of the different small manufacturing industries of New England, but now it occupies more freight space than any other American concern in the great ships that cross the Pacific with the products of our mills and factories, our forges and our looms.

Now, this old and respectable institution comes to Congress and simply asks Congress to permit them to go into the Court of Claims and reestablish themselves financially in the position they would have occupied had not the foreign outbreak occurred.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman, as I understood it, alluded to this bill as being for the purpose of allowing costs. I understand that that is not the terms of the bill, but that it allows to be taxed as costs these additional expenses. Am I correct?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. TOWNER. Have costs been taxed as a part of the judgment?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Not at all. The Court of Claims considered that under the jurisdictional act they could not consider the question of taxing costs.

Mr. TOWNER. The bill says that there shall be allowed such expenses of claimants, including reasonable counsel fees, as the said Court of Claims may adjudge to be fair and just. That merely extends the right of taxing as costs expenses which may be incurred. I judge that will include the sending over of an agent for finding testimony or anything of that kind.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; that appeared in the hearings that it should include the unusual expenses these companies were subjected to. Attorneys and agents accompanying them had to go to China and hunt up various points in relation to damages and insurance, the amount of damage done to these people, and of course that is not like costs incurred in an ordinary matter of litigation.

Mr. TOWNER. There would be no question that if the bill was passed the Court of Claims would feel justified in allowing all such expenses as the gentleman has named and counsel fees besides.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Of course I am not in the confidence of the Court of Claims and do not know what they would do or feel justified in allowing, but certainly they would be restricted to the allowances under the terms of this bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. Is it not a fact that the claimants allowed by the original commission were given expenses and counsel fees?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not think any allowance has ever been made for the unusual expenses.

Mr. WILLIS. That was my understanding. If the original claimants were not permitted to have counsel fees and expenses, what reason does the gentleman give for subsequent claimants going to the Court of Claims and having counsel fees and privileges which the original claimants did not have?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The original commission is not in existence, and it could not be resurrected to give these people counsel fees; but I will remind the gentleman that that commission sat in China, and the difficulty of obtaining evidence was less than it was eight years later for two reasons: First, the evidence was at hand, and, secondly, the lapse of time had not increased the difficulty.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand there are $2,000,000, and if it is not paid out to these claimants it will be refunded to the Chinese Government?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It will be.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it not a fact that the matter had been approved by a former Secretary of State, who has said that this legislation ought to be passed?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; I have that letter.

Mr. HARRISON. And this bill puts it up to the Court of Claims to say whether the claimants should have these expenses?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is true.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. BOOHER. Does this bill contemplate paying the attorneys in the suits before the original commissioner?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It contemplates paying the claimants for costs before the Court of Claims such as they would have presented had not the Court of Claims said that the jurisdictional act prohibited them from allowing them.

Mr. BOOHER. Why should these claimants have attorneys' fees when other claimants did not have the same right?

Mr. TOWNSEND. We are not to do an act of injustice to these claimants because an injustice was done to others.

Mr. BOOHER. Why not provide that all claimants shall have attorneys' fees?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Because these claimants had been put to unusual expenses, which the claimants theretofore had not been required to meet. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, how much time has been used?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has seven minutes remaining, and the gentleman from New Jersey one minute remaining.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, everyone here recalls the action of our Government in refunding $10,800,000 of the $24,400,000 which China agreed to reimburse our Government for the losses sustained by our Government and by our citizens arising out of the Boxer rebellion. When a Senate resolution in May, 1908, was brought before the House to refund to China this $10,800,000 there were certain claimants who induced the House to set aside $2,000,000 of that amount that their claims might be passed upon in the Court of Claims.

There were innumerable claimants, and the aggregate amount of the claims was something like $2,000,000. These claims have all been presented, and the total amount of the 23 claims that have been allowed aggregates something like $800,000. There remains $1,200,000 that under the original agreement and under the original resolution, if we are to keep faith with China, should be returned to China.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I can not yield. This is only a question of keeping faith with China. The original commission that was appointed by our State Department to pass upon all claims arising out of the Boxer uprising, a commission consisting of the American minister to China and one other, allowed claims aggregating $13,650,000, and each claimant whose claim had been rejected or who was dissatisfied with the amount had the right to appeal to the Secretary of State and a rehearing was allowed.

The two principal rejected claims those of the China & Japan Trading Co. and the American Trading Co., presented their claims anew to the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State refused to allow them. They then came before Congress, as I said, in May, 1908, and they secured in this House an amendment providing that all persons whose claims had been presented and which had been rejected should be given a further hearing before the Court of Claims, and the basis for determination was that they should be fully and substantially compensated for actual losses and expenses. I have in my hand the decision of the Court of Claims in one of those cases, namely, the American Trading Co. The total amount of their claim allowed is $118,676. At the end of the decision is shown the principal amount of their claim, $68,949, and the interest allowed on the respective items aggregate $49,726, making a total of $118,676. These claimants have had three chances to prove their claims. They had the interest at 7 per cent allowed, and now, having had that allowed, they have the effrontery, the gall——

Mr. TOWNSEND. The cheek—call it cheek, as they are only American traders.

Mr. STAFFORD. To come to Congress again and say that we should establish a precedent never before known in the history of the Government and allow them their attorneys' fees. I wish to submit this proposition to the House: If these claimants, who have had three chances to have their claims proven, should be allowed attorneys' fees, why should not these other claimants, whose claims aggregate $13,350,000, be equally entitled to attorneys' fees? Is it fair treatment to those who have good claims to allow these persons who have somewhat doubtful ones to be allowed their attorneys' fees, just because it was rather hard for them to prove their case?

They failed twice in proving their case, once before the commission and again before the Secretary of State, Mr. Root, and then they succeeded in having a new rule passed in this House whereby they should be granted a third hearing before the Court of Claims, where the rule to be followed was that they should be fully compensated for actual losses and expenses. Then, after the whole matter has been adjudicated and this $1,200,000 is ready to be sent back to China to keep faith under our promise, these claimants say: "No; we wish to hold this amount up and we want our attorneys' fees paid." If these claimants are entitled to their attorneys' fees, then there should be an amendment that all who ever presented claims should have attorneys' fees, and instead of our having $1,200,000 available to return to China, we would be calling upon China to return to us some of the money already sent to her.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. What was the nature of their claim? Why was it necessary for Congress to enlarge the scope under which they might make proof?

Mr. STAFFORD. These claimants, one the Japan Trading Co. and the other the American Trading Co., presented their claims to these two commissioners appointed by the Department of State to pass on all claims, and the commissioners rejected them.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Why?

Mr. STAFFORD. I could not give you the reason why. They did not believe they had any right to this indemnity fund.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Whom does the gentleman quote, or what, when he says that they had no right?

Mr. STAFFORD. When this matter was under consideration six years ago, in April, 1908, I went and had a consultation with the then Secretary of State, Mr. Root. I had in my possession at that time all of these papers, and they disclosed that the claims had been rejected by the commission.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Because they had no right?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not at this moment. The papers showed that they then took an appeal to the Secretary of State and that Mr. Root rejected their claims, and that then they came to Congress after the original resolution had been framed in the Senate, providing for the return of this $10,800,000, and had a provision carried in this House setting aside $2,000,000, which was the total face value of all of those claims. They went to the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims has passed on them and the matter is now settled, and they want to hold up this fund still longer, so that we can not return the remainder of this fund to China.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I will use the minute that I have remaining to read this from Secretary of State Knox:

It seems but just that, since the claimants have been put to this extra expense through no fault of their own, the charge should be borne by the indemnity fund which was demanded from China in part for the payment of such claims.

And this from Mr. John Bassett Moore, recently of the State Department:

Inasmuch as Congress in 1908 provided under a joint resolution for the reopening by the Court of Claims of the awards made by this department and the making of new awards "fully and substantially compensatory for actual losses and expenses of the claimants caused by the antiforeign disturbances in China during the year 1900, excluding merely speculative claims or elements of damage," it would seem that it is for Congress to determine when its will in this matter shall have been met and what means shall be adopted for meeting it.

And the passage of this resolution is that means.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TOWNSEND) there were—ayes 35, noes 42.

So two-thirds not voting in favor thereof, the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was rejected.

IMMIGRATION STATION, BALTIMORE, MD.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 11625, to increase the appropriation for the erection of an immigration station at Baltimore, Md., as amended by the committee, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 29 of the public building act approved March 4, 1913, providing for an immigration station at Baltimore, Md., is hereby amended so as to increase the limit of cost from $280,000 to $550,000.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin opposed to the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Wisconsin is entitled to 20 minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, the bill before the House at the present provides for the erection of an immigration station in the city of Baltimore, where we have no station whatever, although we are receiving something around 40,000 immigrants this year. We had last year 294 sick people in the hospital, of whom we lost 49. The hospital is an improvised one, being an old building used for that purpose, and it has been for several years past, notwithstanding that it is absolutely unfit for the purpose.

The bill before us has been amended by the committee. It originally appropriated $600,000, and was cut down to the amount of $550,000. By its provisions, which are set forth in the report, only $425,000 goes into buildings, this amount allowing for the erection of a receiving building, a hospital building, an administration building, a power house, and some other buildings for minor purposes. The balance of the money goes into a pier and wharves and things accessory to this site. Thirteen thousand two hundred and fifty dollars we do not get at all, because it was appropriated for the purchase of the site which, after being purchased, was found absolutely unavailable, and which is to be sold, according to the bill passed last year, the amount derived therefrom to go back to the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous fund. Twenty thousand dollars is for a right of way to the site we now have, and I will say it is a most excellent site, being at Fort McHenry. I want to say to this House that this is a matter which is absolutely necessary if we are to conduct our immigration business at Baltimore as it should be conducted. We have not a pier; we have not a building; we have nothing, but are absolutely dependent upon the courtesies and good offices of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad and the North German Lloyd Steamship Co. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes——

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I would rather the gentleman use his own time.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can take it out of my time.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Simply to ask a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not wish to take up the gentleman's time, but I wish to get a clear conception of this case——

Mr. LINTHICUM. As I understand the gentleman—why does not the gentleman use that out of his own time. I think that would be preferred. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I have been once or twice, I believe twice, with members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to look over the present quarters in Baltimore, and while every Member of the House, I suppose, knows my views with regard to the restriction of immigration, I have always believed that when those people come they ought to be met with accommodations that would not make their first impression adverse and averse to our country. I have no doubt but what this is the worst condition, so far as the treatment of immigrants is concerned, that exists on the American coast anywhere, either on the Atlantic or the Pacific. The hospital facilities are miserable——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; for a question; I have only four minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to ask the gentleman if he thinks that condition is any worse than conditions are at Seattle?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; I think so. I have never visited Seattle, but from the presentation of the case and from what I have seen of the condition at Baltimore, I think so. Seattle, in order to make their accommodation ample, would require a great deal more expenditure, in my judgment, than would be necessary at this time, but one reason why the expenditure was not made for Seattle last year by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I think, was because of the fact that with the opening of the Panama Canal there will be no doubt a much greater influx of immigration there than there ever has been, and therefore the demands that will be made for these improvements at that time will be greater than gentlemen could foreshadow or foresee at the time when the proposition was presented.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to ask him one more question?

Mr. BURNETT. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Is it not a fact the reason the committee did not recommend one at Seattle was because I asked for an appropriation for another building in the district and the committee would not permit but one building in a district? Is not that true?

Mr. BURNETT. The committee believed—I did as a member of the committee—for the reasons I have mentioned, that the building had better wait until a more opportune time. I think the gentleman will make a meritorious case. Now I desire to go on just a little further on this. One reason why this appropriation ought to be made is that the pier now where these immigrants land is owned by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. This station, if it is constructed at Fort McHenry, will be upon other lines of railroad. The result of having the station at that place was that one railroad has the exploitation of all these immigrants as they come in. Now, I felt like $600,000 was too much, because they asked $100,000 for a hospital. I felt $50,000 was enough for a hospital, and it was on my motion, according to my recollection now, the committee reduced the amount from $600,000 to $550,000. The Supervising Architect has itemized in a statement here, which is made part of this report, the items which would carry the sum of $600,000. We felt that one of the items should be cut down, and I do not believe from what I have seen personally, and my good friend from Iowa, Judge TOWNER, was with us on one of our trips, and I believe he will agree with the statement that has been made by the gentleman from Maryland and myself, that the conditions there are perhaps more deleterious and insanitary than any other station he has observed, or any other I have observed on the Atlantic coast. I do hope when we are erecting these stations we will do so in such a manner as to provide comfortable receptions for those people who do come to our shores. As I say, I would like to keep back a great many of them, but when they do come, as they are coming, let us have them received properly. I have been in favor of enlarging the accommodations of the steamship companies and everything of that kind in order to accommodate——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that this bill will pass. While I was a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I was also a member of the subcommittee that went to Baltimore to examine the conditions there. I confess that I was not only surprised but wounded in my national pride at the conditions that we found there to exist. There is no immigration station at Baltimore except a shed that has been erected by a railroad company, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., which grants the use of it to the United States. There is no immigration station of the United States or any place that is subject to its jurisdiction or control except for the use that is given by the railroad company, of course primarily for its own benefit.

It is a condition that ought not to exist anywhere. This matter ought not to be considered in the light of a favor to the city of Baltimore. It ought to be considered an act of necessity on the part of the Government of the United States to maintain its dignified self-respect in the treatment of its own offices. I sincerely hope that this Congress will not have any idea that it is conferring, or is to be considered as conferring, a favor on Baltimore when they consider whether or not they ought to pass this bill. We ought to have, we must have, a station there for this Immigration Service. National dignity and pride, as well as the ordinary national requirements, should cause us to do this, and I hope there will be no hesitancy on the part of Congress in that respect. Why it has been so long delayed I have never been able to understand. Certainly it ought now to pass and to pass speedily, because the need is immediate and great, and I hope Congress will see it in that light.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] to consume some of his time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this proposition has been before the House on several occasions during the present session. The gentlemen who have spoken would give the impression that the reason for the failure to erect a proper immigration station at Baltimore was because of the dereliction of duty on the part of Congress. Yet there has been no dereliction of duty on the part of Congress. The fault lies somewhere else, because at this present moment and for years there has been available $280,000 that could be used at any time for the erection of a proper and adequate immigration station. That $280,000, if I am not mistaken, was appropriated to be used for building a station at the present quarters, proximate to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. This Congress earlier in this session, in its magnanimity to Baltimore, donated for its use the Fort McHenry grounds, and also permitted them to use those grounds for an immigration site.

Mr. COADY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. COADY. Do you not think it is a very good thing for the Government that Baltimore City has taken over Fort McHenry?

Mr. STAFFORD. I certainly approve of that project, and I want to see this immigration station erected at Fort McHenry, and I do not see why Baltimore has been hesitating all these months in going ahead with the erection of this immigration station when it has $280,000 available. Originally, when this project first came before the Congress——

Mr. COADY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will not yield just at this moment. When this project first came before Congress there was appropriated something over $100,000; later $280,000 was appropriated; and then they wanted $600,000. Now they are receding and asking for $550,000. And yet the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, in a letter dated March 19, 1914, if I read his letter right, and that was a matter about which I wished to quiz the gentleman with his permission, states that $475,000 only is needed for the construction of this building. I direct the gentleman's attention to that. I suppose he has the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, and I direct his attention to the following language, referring to the $600,000:

> Inasmuch as this is an increase in the original limit, it necessarily includes the cost of the original site; deducting that and other items which are necessary incident to the construction but are not buildings, and deducting also the limit for the right of way, leaves the balance of $475,000 available for the construction of the receiving building, the hospital building, the administration building, and the power house.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will say to the gentleman that that was on the hypothesis that it was $600,000, but it has been cut down, as the gentleman will recognize.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why, the Secretary of the Treasury says that only $475,000 is needed for purposes of a modern hospital, and yet the gentleman is now asking for $550,000.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman from Wisconsin fails to include the other items in there, such as the pier, dredging, and things of that kind, which are necessary. They are not a part of the building, but are necessary adjuncts for the immigration station.

Mr. STAFFORD. With the new policy adopted by this House favoring restriction of immigration, favoring a literacy test that will bar out many worthy immigrants from this country, if it should become a law, I can not see the need of spending $550,000 on a station when there will be no immigrants coming to Baltimore. I will agree it will be an ornament to Baltimore, to have these ornate buildings erected at Fort McHenry, but where is there any need of expending at this time $550,000? Show to us that $280,000 is not adequate for the proper kind of a station. I am just as much in favor of a proper station with adequate accommodations for those immigrants at all our ports as anyone in this House. I sympathize with immigrants. I want them to receive fair treatment, and the best kind of treatment, when they come to these shores; but with the announced policy of this House of limiting immigration, what is the reason for erecting ornate buildings for this service along the Atlantic coast? Baltimore has $280,000 available now. There is no showing that it is not adequate to provide for the immigrants coming there.

Mr. TOWNER. Do you not think that if it shall ever become a law and we add the literacy test that that will make necessary more employees and better accommodations?

Mr. STAFFORD. As soon as the literacy test is placed in the law we know that the moral effect of that will be to keep away from these shores thousands of worthy immigrants.

How much time have I consumed, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to oppose this bill simply because of the fact that we need an immigration station at Seattle just as badly as they need one at Baltimore. I listened to the remarks of my friend, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], in which he pointed out the conditions over at Baltimore and said that the building over there belonged to the railroad. That is exactly the condition at Seattle. The building belongs to the Great Northern Railway at Seattle, and it is on railroad property. It is an old wooden shack, and I can not conceive how it is possible for conditions to be worse at Baltimore than they are at Seattle. I visited the station at the latter place at one time, and I found in one room, about 14 by 16 feet square, 16 women who had been kept there for several days. They were white women, waiting to be tried as to whether or not they were to be deported. Now, if you can describe a condition worse than that at Baltimore, or anywhere else, I will be willing to say that Seattle ought to wait. Now, the fact about it is—and we might as well tell the truth—they refused to make the appropriation for the station at Seattle because there was another public building appropriated for in the same district that I happen to represent. You were dividing up your favors, not according to need but according to congressional districts. You were making appropriations, not where they were needed but because of political favors. And I am not saying you did not extend these favors to both sides of the House. But that is the fact about it. The station at Seattle is a disgrace, and it is a shame, as the gentleman from Iowa has said, that this great Government has to rent old wooden shacks from a railroad in which to keep people until they are examined to know whether they shall be deported or not.

Mr. SABATH. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he has ever visited the immigration station at Baltimore?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have not.

Mr. SABATH. I assure the gentleman that if he will take the time and investigate the conditions there, he would not oppose it for a moment. If there is need of more room or accommodation at any station, it is at Baltimore.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman is in the same position with respect to Seattle that I am with regard to Baltimore. If the gentleman had visited the Seattle immigrant station, he would not oppose my bill. I am not going to oppose this bill, but I want to call attention to the fact that by some means or other the gentlemen from Maryland can get their bill reported, whereas the bill I have before that committee can not be gotten out of the committee.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman should, perhaps, use good judgment in getting the bill out of the committee.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think I used good judgment. At my request the Commissioner of Immigration went before the committee and pointed out the fact that a great emergency existed at Seattle and that that station ought to be built immediately.

Mr. SABATH. The commissioner did urge this some years ago, did he not?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; and I think he has urged it ever since. He appeared before the committee a short time ago and urged an appropriation for the immigrant station at Seattle. It is absolutely impossible for conditions to be any worse at Baltimore than they are out there. But, as I say, I am not willing to play dog in the manger and vote against this bill because I can not get one at Seattle, although we are equally entitled to it, but I do want to emphasize the fact that the committee ought to report my bill.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. GALLAGHER. The gentleman will admit that in a place where between four and five million dollars is raised from the head tax annually suitable accommodations ought to be made for the people landing there, instead of turning over nearly one-half of that sum into the General Treasury of the Government?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Certainly; suitable accommodations ought to be provided at Baltimore and at Seattle and at every other place where the commissioner has said it is necessary, and he has especially selected both Baltimore and Seattle.

Mr. GALLAGHER. At present the Government is taking the money from those people and turning it into the Treasury, instead of providing suitable accommodations for those people.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I expect to take only a minute or so in saying what I desire on this bill. I am not opposed to proper quarters for these immigrants that come to our shores. I believe they should be properly cared for, but I think that in this case we have probably been a little more generous than is necessary. I do not particularly blame our good friends from Baltimore for endeavoring to secure in their city a monument in the way of an immigrant station. They came over here and were just as anxious to procure a situation for the building on the old site as on the one that was bought.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I would like to say to the gentleman——

Mr. FOSTER. In a moment I will yield. After awhile they came back and wanted another site, and it was given them, and then they wanted an increase of the appropriation, and that was given to them. Now, they are back here again, and I do not know how many times they will be back before they finally secure a building. When they get this appropriation I hope they will be satisfied, and will not come back to Congress for any more money in the future for that purpose. I hope they will secure this building and relieve the situation at Baltimore, which they all certify is so bad.

Mr. LINTHICUM. It was not our fault that we did not use the $280,000. In the first place, $13,250 was taken off. The architect absolutely refused to go ahead unless he had enough money to go to work. I will say to the gentleman that we shall not come back to Congress asking for another dollar for this purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to the gentleman that $110,000 was unnecessary to put into a hospital building. I thought $60,000 was sufficient. Now they propose to increase it by $35,000. I am taking the gentleman's word.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I said that.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that to take care of the immigrants at Baltimore you need a hospital costing $75,000. I do not think you need that much. Yet in this bill you are getting $110,000.

Mr. LINTHICUM. They have taken off $50,000.

Mr. FOSTER. And there are a whole lot of expenses that go along with these public buildings, and sometimes the money is easy to get.

I remember in the last Congress we allowed for a public building, quite a large sum additional for something fancy that happened to suit the people out in that particular locality, and then when the building was about to be completed it was said to me by a gentleman privately that he thought we had thrown away the additional amount. I want the people in Baltimore to have this immigration station, but I do suggest and believe in all fairness to the city of Baltimore and to the immigrants who land at that particular place that it is not necessary that we should build an immigration station there for the amount that is provided in this bill.

Mr. BURNETT. My recollection is that the department have said positively that they can not build a building at all commensurate with the needs of the situation with that $285,000 that you refer to, and these are the items, one by one, furnished by the Treasury Department.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to the gentleman that I have observed what they said about that; but then I think sometimes if they were given to understand that they must build for a little less money, they could do it. We know how those things go.

Mr. BURNETT. We cut them $50,000.

Mr. FOSTER. My good friend understands how that happens. In all candor, I do not believe they need $270,000 additional for the station at Baltimore, and I think we are appropriating an extra amount of money for that station, which is not needed and probably ought not to be given. Yet I judge the bill will pass, and I desired only to express my views on the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] has nine minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I yield three minutes to my colleague [Mr. COADY].

Mr. COADY. Mr. Speaker, the bill now before the House for its consideration as amended by the committee provides for an appropriation of $550,000 for the erection and completion of buildings and a pier at the immigration station at Baltimore.

Congress has already made provision for $280,000 for this purpose, and this amount is now available, so that the passage of this bill will mean an additional appropriation of $270,000.

It seems to me there are only two questions to consider with respect to this measure.

The first is, Are these buildings and pier needed there?

The second is, Is the amount asked for a proper and reasonable allowance for the purpose?

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in its report submitted to this House a few days ago answers to both of these questions in the affirmative and recommends the passage of the bill as amended.

They did this after making a trip to Baltimore and seeing for themselves the lamentable lack of facilities for the handling and care of the immigrants.

The buildings and pier are needed for the reason that at present the Government has neither there, and the immigrants land on the private property of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., and the Government inspection of the immigrants takes place on this private property.

Is this the right and proper thing for this great Government of ours to do—to use the private property of a railroad company for its purposes?

Besides, as the situation now is no other railroad company can use this pier without the consent of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., the owner.

This company therefore now has, if it cares to exercise it, a monopoly of the business of transporting the immigrants landing there.

Boston, Philadelphia, and other cities have Government owned and controlled immigration stations, and the refusal of Congress to give Baltimore one would be a discrimination against the latter city, though through its gates there pass annually over 33,000 aliens of the most desirable type.

The hospital and the place of detention are under one roof, and are housed in an old private house rented, I believe, by the steamship company.

The building is an old one, without any modern conveniences, and with the most uninviting surroundings. It is one of those places where the first thing you want to do when you get in it is to get out.

The so-called hospital is hardly fitted for a stable. The whole place is a disgrace to our country.

As to the amount, it is $50,000 less than the amount estimated by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury to be necessary for the buildings and pier, as set out in the report of the committee.

I sincerely trust that this bill as amended by the committee will pass, because the proposed buildings and pier are absolutely needed and because, as a matter of simple justice, Baltimore is entitled to them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] has seven minutes and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] six minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman intend to conclude in one speech?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LOGUE].

Mr. LOGUE. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I visited the city of Baltimore. That there is a necessity for the establishment of proper buildings there no one can doubt. The conditions at Seattle may be bad. I do not think they quite equal the bad conditions that confronted us at Baltimore. There is an alleged hospital there. I think it could more properly be styled a morgue if any sick human being was put in it and permitted to remain for a few hours. It is quite distant from the wharf. We were there on a very inclement day. It was really more comfortable outside the hospital than in it. The entire condition of things there should not be allowed to continue to exist. For the health of the immigrants this hospital should not be allowed to remain. Humanity should prompt us to pass this bill. For a statement of the amount required we are dependent upon the proper source, the Treasury Department. We have received from the Secretary of the Treasury information as to the amount to be expended. The action of the committee, therefore, has been prompted by the needs and necessities which were manifest to us, and, secondly, as to the amount required, we have recommended the amount stated to us as being requisite for the purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, if under the existing procedure we were given the privilege of offering an amendment to reduce the amount carried in this bill, I believe the House would vote to reduce the $550,000 that the bill carries. I wish to direct attention to two items which I think are extravagant in character. The committee of its own motion has reduced the estimate of $110,000 for a hospital building to $60,000, and here we have $50,0000 provided for an administration building. That will indeed provide a pretty nice building for the few officials that will have their offices there. Again, there is $40,000 for a power house. Power to keep the immigrants from landing? How can you conceive that there will be such a large appropriation for a power house? Everyone in this House wishes to provide adequate accommodations for the receiving building. We do not want to be niggardly in our appropriations; but when the gentleman comes here and insists that he should have these large amounts for these respective services, I think he is failing sadly in proving his case.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I believe the gentleman wants to be perfectly fair.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I had the architect go there, and I tried to hold him down as much as I could to the lowest point. He said he could not do it. The ground is low; and I expect we will have to put the building on piling for a foundation. I did my best to hold him down to the last cent, because I knew that if the amount was large I would have trouble in getting it. I have not been lax in keeping it down to the lowest figure possible.

Mr. STAFFORD. My only criticism of the gentleman is that he stopped in his efforts. He only applied his efforts to shaving down the appropriation for the hospital building. For that building there was an estimate of $110,000, and he acknowledged that that was $50,000 too large. He was willing to shave that, and if he had only gone down the list a little more and shaved some of the other estimates there would have been no disposition here to criticize this bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Has the gentleman any information as to the receipts of the Government from the immigration?

Mr. STAFFORD. When this bill was under consideration before, if I remember the statement at that time, the maximum number that would come in to the port at Baltimore on any one occasion was 2,000 to 3,000, and that on very rare occasions. Baltimore has not been a large immigrant port. I sympathize with the gentleman from Maryland in his desire to have an ornate building at this public park, but I do not think they should overdo it. I think we should not provide extravagantly for a building at this public park.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I would like to state to the gentleman that I have the figures from the Immigration Bureau as to six months of this fiscal year, and it amounted to $3,009,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. At Baltimore?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. No; from all over the country.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes; but Baltimore is only an incidental port, and if the new rule is to be established and the literacy test applied there will not be any use for this building at all. It will be a nice monument in a public park that the Government has donated for municipal purposes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to say that during 1913 there were 33,596 immigrants that came in at $4 a head, and it is estimated that 40,000 will come in this year. On March 4, 1909, we turned over to the National Government $500,000 in the Treasury to our credit.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman furnishes the committee with the figures for last year, and he estimates 40,000 immigrants during the present year. Can the gentleman give any estimate as to how many will come in when we have the literacy test applied? There will not be 10,000.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think nearly as many will come into Baltimore, because the immigrants that come to that section will not be barred by the literacy test.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is what they all say; but we know that the literacy test will keep out a very large number.

Mr. COADY. Does the gentleman think it will become a law?

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope it does not.

Mr. BURNETT rose.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield to the gentleman from Alabama, chairman of the Committee on Immigration, who knows more about that than I do.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I did not rise to answer that question, because I do not know any more about it than does the gentleman from Wisconsin, but I want to say that the class of immigration that comes into Baltimore is almost entirely from the northwestern part of the country and will not be affected by the literacy test, if it becomes a law.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, I would inform him that within the last few months the North German Lloyd Steamship Co. that operates between Baltimore and Bremen has put on three additional ships, big ships of about 12,000 tons each, and they are now building two more ships for that trade.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the burden of the argument on the other side is this: At present they have very ill-suited quarters. We admit that. We gave Baltimore the ground, and there is available, and has been for a long time, $280,000. They now come here and show their estimates are too large, and still they ask us to appropriate the full amount. I leave the question to the decision of the House.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BARTON].

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and as one who has inspected this building, and also as one of the members of the committee who has sat on the opposite side of the table fighting against expenses most of the time and against propositions submitted to us, I want to say that I think this is one of the most meritorious measures that we have had before us for our consideration. If gentlemen could see the people from foreign countries coming into what out in our country would be called cattle sheds, and those sheds owned by a railroad, and that one railroad which has an absolute monopoly of the business there, I believe the House would not hesitate to build a suitable place to receive the people who are coming from foreign countries and landing on American soil.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Did I understand the gentleman to say that he had personally inspected the building?

Mr. BARTON. Yes. With the committee I made a minute examination, and the sick babies in the old rookery called a hospital is a disgrace to this Nation. The immigrants that land at Baltimore will not be bothered by the immigration bill. Look at the record and you will see that less than 1 per cent can not read or write.

This is a just measure, and I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been before the House several times, and if there ever has been a bill that has been thoroughly examined by the committee and has been thoroughly investigated by the department and every effort possible made in the interest of economy in framing it, this is that bill. I want to say, in justice to the committee, that the omnibus bill which was framed during the last Congress was not framed on the lines intimated by the gentleman from Washington.

The committee did not put into that bill any item which they did not believe was justified by the facts and by the demands of the community. I want to say that in the present Congress this committee has operated under certain rules, and the bill of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] comes squarely within the emergency rules laid down by the committee. One of those rules is that where an authorization for a building has been heretofore made and the department in good faith has attempted to let a contract for its construction, and has found after advertisement for bids that there was not money sufficient to construct it, then this committee would consider an increase in the authorization, and in this instance the effort has been made, bids have been asked for, and it has been found utterly impossible to construct the character of station which the department and the committee desires and which ought to be constructed out of the appropriation already made. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I am astounded that my friend from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] and my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], who are not builders, who are not architects, although they may be gentlemen of very wide and diversified information, but who are not specially skilled in those directions, should stand here and place their judgment against the investigations of the committee and the deliberate opinion and well-considered judgment of the Supervising Architect's Office and the Treasury Department as to what these buildings ought to cost.

As I say, every effort has been made and it is the desire of the department, and the committee concurred in that, to erect at Baltimore a model immigrant station, one that will be a model for the ports of this country hereafter, one that will be complete in every detail, one that will be a credit to the country and that will be looked upon as a model for construction at Seattle and those other places which are to follow. The statement which the committee required of the Supervising Architect's Office has been itemized, and there is only in the neighborhood of $400,000 going into the buildings. The balance is to go into the purchase of land and into the construction of other appurtenances and into the purchase and construction of a railway for the use of the station, and all these things together aggregate this amount. As I say, we have made every effort to cut down the appropriation, but we are informed by the officials charged with that duty that it is utterly impossible to construct at Baltimore the kind of station needed in all of its departments, which will be a credit to the country and which will be sufficiently adequate to answer the purposes of its construction, with the present appropriation. I hope the House will pass this bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

REPEALING SECTION 3480, REVISED STATUTES, UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill Senate 751.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 751) to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed so far as it affects payments for services in the Army of the United States prior to April 13, 1861.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands a second.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois 20 minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I shall occupy the attention of the House only for a very few minutes. I found in the Judiciary Committee a bill intended to remove a penalty from the men who had fought in the army of the South in the late Civil War. Upon examination I asked the committee to take it up and consider it, believing that it was a patriotic duty to pass this measure. The committee unanimously reported it, and asked me to take charge of the bill and present it to the House. I do this with great pleasure and satisfaction. The bill is intended to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes, which imposed a penalty upon those men, graduates of West Point, who served in the Confederacy. It included among the roll names like those of Lee, Jackson, Wheeler, and Pickett a long line of honorable and brave men.

We all know, for I can just remember that period, when the war closed, the bitterness of feeling that existed, and naturally existed, and existed upon both sides, with reference to each other. Out of that spirit came this punitive statute. Things have changed since then. The half century and more which has passed has brought together the warring combatants of Gettysburg to weep and cheer in unison upon that fateful field. [Applause.] I had the privilege and pleasure of attending at Arlington the scenes incident to the dedication of a beautiful Confederate monument, erected in a Government burial place, dedicated to the soldiers and men of the South who fought against and who lie side by side with the Union soldiers of that war. Memorial day has just passed, with all its hallowed associations and memories. In the beginning every flower that fell upon a soldier's grave was drenched with grief and perhaps touched with bitterness. But here again the scene changes; we of the North began to better understand the men of the South and they of the South to understand us; soon we saw northern attendants upon this ceremony decorating graves of Confederate dead, and then the chivalrous people of the South, responding in like spirit and decorating the graves of Union soldiers. [Applause.] We have witnessed within a very few months scenes of reconciliation, harmony, and love at Gettysburg, and frequently noted men on one side surrendering to men on the other side the battle flags which were torn from each other in the heat of battle. Everywhere was that spirit which the immortal Lincoln referred to when he said:

We are not enemies, but friends. We must not be enemies. The mystic chords of memory, stretching from every battle field and patriot grave to every living heart and hearthstone all over this broad land, will yet swell the chorus of the Union when again touched, as they surely will be, by the better angels of our nature.

[Applause.]

I feel that the spirit of the immortal Lincoln is invoking us in the exercise of our better selves to play upon those "mystic chords of memory" to-day. Let us unanimously, if it may, wipe from the statute books this penalty, the offspring of the feelings which the bitter strife of war engendered and left now for more than half a century upon the statute books of the Nation. This will promote a finer feeling everywhere, North and South. He who gives is twice blessed; he who receives has the spirit of gratitude created. I could read from a number of letters here, but will only quote from one, from no less distinguished a person than the widow of that brave, grand soldier of the Confederacy, "Stonewall" Jackson. [Applause.] Speaking of this movement, she said:

It creates a feeling of gratitude in my heart that you, a northern man, should advocate the passage of this bill.

[Applause.]

No one but a northern man should advocate its passage, but every man with red blood, whether from the North or from the South, should vote to pass the bill and thus help to eliminate one of the last vestiges of those things which make a distinction between the men of the North and the men of the South. [Applause.] "Fighting Joe" Wheeler and Fitzhugh Lee put on the uniform of the Nation and fought under the Stars and Stripes in the Spanish War. The descendants of these very people from whom we are removing this penalty also served their country and showed their willingness to die in her defense. [Applause.] Surely under such circumstances Congress should ungrudgingly and cheerfully wipe this penalty away, and say: "In this act we speak for the eternal concord and unity of our country." Such acts, such thoughts, such sentiments will make us repeat the scene I once witnessed in a southern city. I walked through a graveyard and I found the tombstones marked with the names of men from this State of the South and that State of the North and other States from all over the Union. Soldiers of these States had met to battle for New Orleans and to save her from the British Army in the War of 1812. That scene will be repeated perhaps, who knows, in the history of our country when we war with some foreign foe, and the men of the North and the men of the South, one in heart, one in courage, one in valor, will vie with each other in defense of every city and every foot of land in our blessed Republic. Side by side, one in patriotism, one in loyalty, one in death, those who fall may lie like they do to-day in the old graveyard at New Orleans. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demanded a second in order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] might explain the bill. Unless some one who is opposed to the bill desires time, I do not desire to consume any of mine.

The SPEAKER. Is there any gentleman opposed to the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. As a matter of fact, the vote is unanimous in favor of suspending the rules. [Applause.]

So the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

UNVEILING OF JOHN TYLER MONUMENT.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate concurrent resolution No. 22, which authorizes the appointment of a committee of Congress to attend the unveiling of a monument to John Tyler, the tenth President of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 22.

Whereas the Government of the United States has erected a monument in Hollywood Cemetery, at Richmond, Va., over the grave of President John Tyler; and

Whereas exercises will be held very soon to unveil the said monument, and it being considered very appropriate that the Senate and House of Representatives should be properly represented on this occasion: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a committee of 10 Members be appointed, 5 by the President of the Senate and 5 by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to represent the Congress of the United States to attend said ceremonies; and authority is hereby given to expend $250 from the contingent fund of the Senate and $250 from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives to defray the expenses of said committee, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and the Committee on Accounts of the House of Representatives, respectively.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] demands a second.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, permit me to state, if the House did not catch the full reading of the resolution, that it is a resolution heretofore agreed to by the Senate, whereby there is appropriated out of the contingent fund of the two Houses, respectively, the sum of $250 for the appointment of a committee of five from the Senate and five from the House to attend the exercises incident to the unveiling of a monument to John Tyler, the tenth President of the United States, in Hollywood Cemetery in Richmond, Va.

In pursuance to an act of March 4, 1911, the Government appropriated $10,000 for the building of this monument, and some time in the course of the next two or three months—the exact date I can not now apprise the House—the unveiling will occur, and I hope it will be the sense of the House, and I imagine it will be by their unanimous consent, to authorize this particular expenditure.

Mr. Speaker, may I observe that it is not inconsonant with the very eloquent remarks just submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] that I ask to print as a part of my remarks the memorial oration upon John Tyler by the late R. M. T. Hunter, formerly Speaker of this House, and latterly and for a long time one of the most conspicuous Members of the Senate of the United States, delivered in the Senate of the Confederate States on January 20, 1862, two days after the death of President Tyler. This address is a remarkably eloquent appreciation of its distinguished subject.

The address is as follows:

THE LATE EX-PRESIDENT TYLER.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS.

At the close of the very appropriate tribute by Mr. Macfarland, published in the Whig of yesterday, Mr. Hunter, of Virginia, rose and said:

"I rise to offer my tribute of respect to the memory of the deceased.

"As has been well said, the name of John Tyler, now passed into the possession of history, has an order of its own in that great sanctuary. Its sojourn is over. Nothing can now dim its luster as it passes down the tide of time.

"It is said, sir, there is something in the story of the humblest life, which, if rightly told, will afford food for profitable study. With how much of interest, then, do we turn to the contemplation of the lives of those who have been martyrs of their kind, who have left examples for the imitation of posterity; of those whose voices have been the most persuasive and convincing in council, and whose shout, like that of the king, has been most potent in marshaling the hosts!

"Among the public men of our day, John Tyler has been one of the most marked and distinguished. With him disappears the last, save one who now sits in this Chamber, of those great men who adorned the Senate of the United States when I first entered upon public life with him. We shall bury the last of the line, the illustrious line of Southern Presidents whose names have connected us with the highest honors of the Union from which we have just parted. Does not this deepen the sense of our separation as we see one by one pass away not only the material links but the ties of personal association which bound us to those whom we have lately left?

"No man, Mr. President, has more fully completed the circle of honors which were opened to the aspirations of our public men than John Tyler. Scarcely had he attained his majority when he was sent to the House of Delegates in Virginia. After a service of a few years there, he was successively elected a member of the executive council, a Member of the House of Representatives of the United States, governor of the State of Virginia, Senator of the United States, Vice President of the United States, from which, by the death of Gen. Harrison, and through the operation of the Constitution, he was elevated to the Chief Magistracy of the land. Nor, sir, did his career end even there. When secession began and presaged the storm which is now sweeping over the land, he was sent to the convention of Virginia, and by that body to the peace congress, over the deliberations of which he presided; thence to this Congress, and afterwards was elected by his constituents to the House of Representatives of the Confederate Congress, soon to assemble in this place.

"But, full as was his life of honors, it was not more distinguished by them than by its achievements. From the commencement of his public career, he distinguished himself in whatever body he was serving, and by his eloquence and ability won an honorable place in the estimation of all with whom he associated. An advocate of the doctrines of the State rights school of Virginia, he for the most part adhered to those doctrines with consistency throughout a long and arduous career. Few men exerted themselves more to preserve the Constitution of the United States. He was among the first of our public men who, with the great Calhoun, declared that 'the Constitution and the union of the States was one and inseparable.' From the period of the nullification controversy, from the time when he gave his solitary vote against the force bill in the Congress of the United States, to his last appearance in Washington at the peace conference, he declared the Union and the Constitution must live or perish together.

"He exerted his utmost powers to preserve the Constitution and the administration of the executive affairs of the United States. Forced to choose between the desire to gratify the wishes of his personal friends, who had elevated him to the office, on the one hand, and a sense of constitutional obligation on the other, he determined finally to sacrifice the friends with whom he had been associated. From that time forward it was his lot to administer the affairs of the Nation, over which he presided in the midst of the severest party struggles the country had ever known, without the cordial support of either great political division by which the people were then divided; and he had to discharge his high duties in the face of such difficulties as had never been encountered by any of his predecessors. But, in despite of that spirit, he called around him some of the ablest intellects of the land—Webster, Upshur, Legaré, Calhoun—who aided him in one of the most successful administrations which appears in the annals of American affairs.

"It was this administration that added Texas, an empire, to the Confederacy; and it was this administration that successfully accomplished the Ashburton treaty between Great Britain and the United States. It was in this administration that Mr. Calhoun, in his celebrated letter to Mr. King, for the first time made a public demonstration in favor of the right of the slave-holding States to respect and protection; and it was this administration which gave a final and fatal blow to the United States Bank. But prominent, sir, as was this administration, it was, perhaps, not so distinguished as his closing career. He had already reached the year of threescore and ten, when he was called from his retirement to aid in making up that great issue of human destiny which is now being submitted to the arbitrament of trial, as it is said, between nearly a million of armed men. True to the life-long professions of the past, his first effort was to preserve the Constitution, and, if possible, to save the Union with it; but when disappointed in that hope none was more determined than he to cut loose his native State from its perilous connection with enemies in disguise—none more resolved to make common cause with the South and take whatever might be the consequence of the act.

"We all know he threw himself into the cause with his whole soul. Gentlemen here present will testify to the truth of what I say when I affirm that to the last he devoted himself to it with a courage that did not quail, with a hope that did not falter, and with a purpose that held out to the last extremity and relaxed not to the end.

"Mr. President, it may truly be said that with John Tyler there has fallen a great man. I know, sir, that the death of any good man is the cause of grief to the friendly survivors; and yet I feel I do not err when I say that my deceased colleague was as fortunate in his death as in his life. As a soldier on the field of battle falls, he fell at the post of duty. A life, when it was full of years and honors, passed away. He left us before age had bowed his form or dimmed the luster of his intellect; when the future course of his life was about to promise him more of pleasure than grief. To-morrow we shall deposit him beneath the sod of that soil which he loved so well—on the beautiful banks of the James, where his slumbers will be soothed by the sound of its falling waters. Day after day, in the years yet to come, the morning and evening shadows shall lend a silent and varied charm to the scene; and when her hour of struggle is over, Virginia, as she leans upon her bloody spear to contemplate the past, and beholding the rising glories of her day, will lift her gauntleted hand to brush away the tear for the loss of him who, in the decline of life, exhausted his dying energies in her behalf, and staked his life, his fortune, his reputation upon the result, which will bring her safety and honor. Sir, she will embalm his memory in her best affections, and hand it down to her generations yet to come; and their children's children will transmit his honored name as an inheritance of princely value—an heirloom which his already run through more than two generations of distinguished men.

"But it is not my purpose, sir, to draw a portrait of this great man. His is a character which men will choose to study themselves; and they will seek it in the monuments of his own creation rather than in the testimonials of his friends; but perhaps, sir, it will not be deemed as usurping the historian's place were I to say of him he was kind and genial in all the relations of private life, and that he used the gift of the eloquence with which he was so highly endowed in the public service, and not for selfish purposes; that his faculties for usefulness seemed always to rise to the level of the demand upon them; that he was most able to discharge his duty under the most difficult circumstances, and that he served his native State with a love and fidelity which are beyond all praise.

"Mr. President, is there no useful lesson which we ourselves may draw from this occasion? Is there nothing in it that will deepen our sense of the uncertainty of human life and the instability of human affairs? Within how short a period has death sent its summons in our very midst? Does not this impress us with the utter worthlessness of the span of life allotted to any one of us, unless we use it for the purpose of preparing for another and better and more enduring state? Do not the scenes passing before us impress on us still more forcibly the sublime truth, 'The duties of life are to be preferred to life itself'?"

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing Senate concurrent resolution 22.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the Senate concurrent resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carr, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 286. Joint resolution extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia under certain contingencies.

MOTHER'S DAY ASSOCIATION.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from further consideration of the bill H. R. 16298 and suspend the rules and pass the bill as recommended by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

A bill (H. R. 16298) to incorporate the Mother's Day Association.

Be it enacted, etc., That Anna Jarvis, George W. Bailey, C. J. Hexamer, Louis Lukes, Francis B. Reeves, and Claude S. Jarvis, all of Philadelphia, Pa.; and L. L. Loar, of Grafton, W. Va.; and Charles Seldon, of Baltimore, Md.; together with such persons as they may associate with themselves, and their successors, be, and they hereby are, constituted a body corporate of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That the name of such body corporate shall be "Mother's Day Association," and by this name it shall have perpetual succession, save as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 3. That the objects and purposes of said association shall be to establish, promote, and perpetuate the association's work for the well-being of the home and to further establish, promote, and perpetuate the all-nations' observance of Mother's Day and any work incident thereto and arising therefrom.

SEC. 4. That the principal office of said association shall be in the District of Columbia, but the association, through its representatives, shall have the power to establish and maintain such other offices throughout the United States and its exterior possessions as the business of the association may require.

SEC. 5. That the control of such corporation shall be vested in a board of not less than three governors, their associates and successors. The incorporators hereof shall elect the board of governors for the first year. The board of governors shall have the power to adopt a constitution and to make such prudential by-laws and regulations as it may deem proper for the management and control of the business and affairs of said association, the powers and duties of its officers and agents, and from time to time to repeal or alter such constitution, by-laws, rules, and regulations.

SEC. 6. That this association shall further have power to have and use a common seal and to alter and change same at its pleasure; to sue and be sued in any court of the United States or other court of competent jurisdiction; to take, receive, and hold for the purposes of the association any gift, grant, devise, bequest, or purchase, and to accept and administer any trust for the purpose of said association.

SEC. 7. That this act shall be subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal at the pleasure of the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 8. That this act shall take effect immediately on its passage.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk has the report of the committee, and I would like to have it read.

The SPEAKER. There is no use in reading the report. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. I demand a second.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, section 4 of the original bill is left out?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; the entire section is stricken out.

Mr. MANN. And that in section 7 of the bill as introduced there is left out the provision about the real estate of the corporation not being liable to any debt or obligation of the corporation?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And, further, that the bill as presented, with these amendments, has been passed through and approved by the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes. It was unanimously reported by the committee with these provisions, mentioned by the gentleman from Illinois, stricken out.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman at all familiar with the persons who are named in the bill as the incorporators?

Mr. HEFLIN. I only know one of the persons named in the bill, and that is Miss Anna Jarvis, of Philadelphia, who is at the head of this great work in the United States. She is a constituent of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], and I presume that he knows the persons named in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I may supplement the information of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] by saying that, so far as Miss Jarvis, George W. Bailey, Francis B. Reeves, and C. J. Hexamer are concerned, they are prominent Philadelphians, identified with the civic life of that city. C. J. Hexamer is the president of the German Alliance.

Mr. HEFLIN. Miss Jarvis discussed this with me and told me that the persons named with her in the bill are high-class gentlemen, and some of them are now engaged in philanthropic work, and all are worthy of the positions given them in this bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. What was done with section 4? Was that stricken out? Some of the language there may be subject to criticism.

Mr. HEFLIN. All of that section was stricken out.

Mr. WILLIS. And lines 13, 14, 15, and 16 of section 7 are stricken out?

Mr. HEFLIN. They are.

Mr. WILLIS. I have no objection to it.

Mr. HEFLIN. The bill as amended was unanimously reported by the committee, and naming, as it does, Miss Anna Jarvis as the president of this Mothers' Day Association, it contains a beautiful tribute to and merited recognition of the good woman who has for years devoted herself to the sweet and beautiful task of securing congressional recognition for the Mothers' Day Association of America. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for one moment. I have here a resolution, which I received with the request that I read it into the RECORD by the 8th of July. I ask unanimous consent at this time, Mr. Speaker, to insert this resolution, which was passed by a number of ladies in Seattle, Wash., in a convention said to represent 10,000 women, in reference to their view of advancing the cause of woman in this country. It involves the subject of woman suffrage.

In this day of recruits to the cause of suffrage, such as we had the other day in the Speaker's office, the Speaker of this House, Hon. CHAMP CLARK, in his usual straightforward way, asserting that he was for equal suffrage in the State of Missouri, and would so vote in that State, it is well that we put something into the RECORD that is practical; not only pure and ennobling and speaking for motherhood, but something that speaks for real, vital advancement of woman, whether she is a mother or not.

The resolution is as follows:

NATIONAL AMERICAN WOMAN SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION.

We, the citizens of Seattle, Wash., have assembled to-day to voice our demands that women, as citizens of the United States, be accorded the full right of such citizenship. We congratulate the 4,000,000 women voters who have won their right to the ballot in 10 States, and confidently expect to see 5 more States under the franchise banner after the November elections.

We hereby declare that suffrage for women has become a national as well as a local issue, and we urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to enact Federal legislation which will insure to women political equal rights with men.

We therefore ask the Congress of the United States to proceed without delay in the most feasible and practical manner to remove the barriers which prevent American women from the exercise of full franchise, and to make our country not a Government in which half the people are denied the right of participation, but in truth and reality a democracy.

The above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution passed at a mass meeting held at Allen Dale's cafeteria this 2d day of May, 1914.

Mrs. P. D. HUGHES,
Presiding Officer.

Attested:

Mrs. GEO. N. MCLOUGHLIN,
Secretary.

Mr. BRYAN. The following report of the meeting above referred to appears in the Seattle Sun of May 2:

WOMEN CELEBRATE SUFFRAGE ADVANCE—SEATTLE SUFFRAGE CLUB AT LUNCHEON ASKS CONGRESS TO TAKE ACTION TO ENFRANCHISE WOMEN VOTERS.

"Women's Day," established at the request of Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, of the National Suffrage Association, as a nation-wide event to promote the cause of woman suffrage, was celebrated by the Seattle Suffrage Club to-day by a luncheon at the Allen Dale Cafeteria.

After suffrage songs, uniform with those used at similar celebrations all over the continent, five-minute talks were given by Mrs. G. N. McLoughlin, representing the Seattle Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. Austin E. Griffiths, Mothers' Congress; Miss Adele M. Fielde, Washington women's legislative committee; Mrs. M. D. Harker, Women's Democratic Club; Mrs. E. M. Rhodes, Women's Commercial Club; Mrs. E. P. Fick, Seattle Suffrage Club; Mrs. Zamora C. Cauffman, Home Consumers' League; Miss Lucia Crangle, Grade Teachers' Club; Miss Lucy Case, Women's College Club; Mrs. John L. Burnside, King County legislative committee; Miss Adella M. Parker, Woman's Good Government League; Mrs. S. L. W. Clarke, North End Progressive Club; Mrs. P. Hughes, King County Progressive League.

Resolutions were adopted asking Congress to enfranchise women.

Abigail Adams Chapter of the National Council of Women Voters met at 12.30 at the office of Dr. Sarah Kendall, in the Arcade Building, to make plans for its "Why" breakfast May 9.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] yield additional time to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of House bill 16298, to suspend the rules, and pass the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Why is that motion necessary? I understand the bill has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary and is on the Calendar of the House.

The SPEAKER. No; it is not on the calendar. It came in only to-day.

Mr. MANN. I understand a report has been written up, but not presented to the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the Committee on the Judiciary has passed on it, there is no use in making that request to discharge the committee.

The SPEAKER. The House has no knowledge that the Committee on the Judiciary has done anything with it until the committee reports. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16298, to suspend the rules, and pass the bill as read by the Clerk.

Mr. HEFLIN. As amended.

The question was taken; and two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. What was the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I asked to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the resolution which I mentioned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

INCOME TAX ON RAILROADS IN ALASKA.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 9770, to levy and collect an income tax on railroads in Alaska, and for other purposes, with committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the amended bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in addition to the normal income tax of 1 per cent on net income there shall be levied and collected 1 per cent on the gross annual income of all railroad corporations doing business in Alaska, on business done in Alaska, which shall be computed and collected in the manner provided in the act of Congress approved October 3, 1913, entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," the proceeds of which tax when collected shall be paid to the treasurer of Alaska and be applicable to general Territorial purposes. So much of the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to define and punish crimes in the District of Alaska and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said district," or acts amendatory thereof, as impose a license tax of $100 per mile per annum on railroads operated in Alaska is hereby repealed, and all penalties for nonpayment thereof are hereby remitted.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM].

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, substantially the bill before the House levies 1 per cent tax upon the gross income of railroads in the Territory of Alaska. In that respect it is different from the law that has heretofore prevailed in that Territory. I call the attention of the House to the law as it now exists, so that you may get the difference between the two acts.

In the act of 1900 a license tax of $100 per mile is levied upon railroads in that Territory, which is a reasonably small tax in some cases but prohibitive in others. The tax itself is not so serious as the penalty inflicted for nonpayment. The penalty fixed by law for nonpayment is the amount of the annual tax for the first day, double the amount of the annual tax for the second day, treble the amount for the third day, and imprisonment in jail for not more than six months. So the small railroads in Alaska that have not heretofore been able to make it pay, running into a new country where there is neither trade nor population, find themselves covered up by millions of dollars of penalties, and it is for the purpose, primarily, of getting rid of those penalties that we are offering this bill. The taxes have nearly all been paid up to this moment. Those that are not paid are not remitted, but only the excessive penalties are remitted. This matter has been before the House so many times that I am sure the House understands it thoroughly.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman think that with the 4 per cent on the net income the Government is going to realize much out of it?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I think the gentleman has not quite caught the reading of the bill. The bill has been changed to 1 per cent on the gross income. That is double the amount of the Philippine tax, and practically in the same words.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill with the amendments read into it.

The question was taken; and two-third having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

INTERNATIONAL DRY-FARMING CONGRESS.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass House joint resolution 255, authorizing the President to extend invitations to other nations to send representatives to the International Dry-Farming Congress, to be held at Wichita, Kans., October 7 to 17, inclusive, 1914, as amended by the committee.

The Clerk read the amended resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to extend invitations to other nations to appoint delegates or representatives to the International Dry-Farming Congress, to be held at Wichita, Kans., October 7 to 17, inclusive, 1914: Provided, That no appropriation shall be granted for the expenses of delegates or for other expenses incurred in connection with the said congress.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. FOSTER and Mr. FERRIS demanded a second.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Illinois opposed to the bill?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Oklahoma opposed to the bill?

Mr. FERRIS. No.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How did the gentleman from Kansas manage to catch the Speaker's eye so as to be recognized to suspend the rules?

Mr. MURDOCK. I occupied a seat close to the center aisle and agitated myself sufficient to catch his eye. It was merely a matter of agitation. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I do not see why one red-headed man should ask that question of another red-headed man; both are conspicuous. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. This seems to be a live demonstration that the gentleman from Kansas, when he has a meritorious bill, can catch the Speaker's eye.

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; if I get in a proper place and agitate myself sufficiently. That is true.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The bill provides that the United States will be at no expense in the way of entertaining delegates?

Mr. MURDOCK. None.

Mr. GARNER. Is it the intention of the gentleman to come back later and ask for an appropriation?

Mr. MURDOCK. It is not.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. MANN. I meant to speak about this before. The bill provides—

That no appropriation shall be granted for the expenses of delegates or for other expenses incurred in connection with the said congress.

Now, we have appropriated $20,000 for that Congress.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is for an exhibit by the Agricultural Department.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think there will be no contradiction here?

Mr. MURDOCK. This is the first time that has been called to my attention. I do not think there will be any.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing House joint resolution 255 with the amendments which have been read.

Mr. MURDOCK. Including the amendment to the title, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Oh, certainly.

The question was taken; and two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the joint resolution passed.

BUILDING REGULATIONS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 8593) amending the building regulations of the District of Columbia by providing for the better protection of persons engaged in and about the construction, repairing, alterations, or removal of buildings, bridges, viaducts, and other structures, as amended by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 8593 with the committee amendments, which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any house, building, bridge, viaduct, or other structure being constructed or erected by any person, firm, or corporation in the District of Columbia shall be so erected and constructed as to give proper and adequate protection to the life and limb of any person or persons employed or engaged thereon or passing under or by the same.

SEC. 2. That all scaffolds, hoists, cranes, stays, ladders, supports, or other mechanical contrivances erected or constructed by any person, firm, or corporation in the District of Columbia for use in the erection, repairing, alteration, removal, or painting of any house, building, bridge, viaduct, or other structure shall be erected and constructed in a safe, suitable, and proper manner, and shall be so erected and constructed, placed, and operated as to give proper and adequate protection to the life and limb of any person or persons employed or engaged thereon or passing under or by the same.

SEC. 3. That scaffolding or staging, swung or suspended from an overhead support, more than 20 feet from the ground or floor, shall have, where practicable, a safety rail bolted, secured, and braced, rising at least 34 inches above the floor or main portion of such scaffolding or staging and extending along the entire length of the outside and ends thereof and properly attached thereto, and such scaffolding or staging shall be so fastened as to prevent the same from swaying from the building or structure.

SEC. 4. That all swinging and stationary scaffolding, platforms, and other devices shall be so constructed as to bear four times the maximum weight required to be depended therein or placed thereon when in use, and such swinging scaffolding, platforms, or other device shall not be so overloaded or overcrowded as to render the same unsafe or dangerous.

SEC. 5. That any workman or mechanic whose duties require him to use a scaffold, hoist, crane, ladder, or other contrivance in connection with the construction, alteration, repairing, removing, cleaning, or painting of any building, bridge, viaduct, or other structure may notify the inspector of buildings, calling attention to any defect or weakness which, in the employee's opinion, renders the scaffold dangerous, and such communication shall be strictly confidential.

SEC. 6. That when it shall come to the notice of the inspector of buildings that the scaffolding or the slings, hangers, blocks, pulleys, stays, braces, ladders, irons, or ropes of any swinging or stationary scaffolding, platform, or other similar device used in the construction, alteration, repairing, removing, cleaning, or painting of buildings, bridges, or viaducts within the District of Columbia are unsafe or liable to prove dangerous to the life or limb of any person, the said inspector shall immediately cause an inspection to be made of such scaffolding, platform, or device, or the slings, hangers, blocks, pulleys, stays, braces, ladders, irons, or other parts connected therewith. If after examination such scaffolding, platform, or device, or any of such parts is found to be dangerous to the life or limb of any person, the inspector shall at once notify the person responsible for its erection or maintenance of such fact, and warn him against the use, maintenance, or operation thereof and prohibit the use thereof, and require the same to be altered and reconstructed so as to avoid such danger. Such notice may be served personally upon the person responsible for its erection or maintenance or by conspicuously affixing it to the scaffolding, platform, or other such device or the part thereof declared to be unsafe. After such notice has been so served or affixed the person responsible therefor shall immediately alter or strengthen such scaffolding, platform, or other device in such manner as to render it safe or remove it. The building inspector or any of his deputies shall have free access at all reasonable hours to any building or structure or premises containing scaffolding, platforms, or other similar device or parts thereof or where they may be in use.

SEC. 7. That any owner, contractor, subcontractor, foreman, or other person having charge of the erection, construction, repairing, alteration, removal, or painting of any building, bridge, viaduct, or other structure within the provisions of this act shall comply with all the terms thereof, and any such owner, contractor, subcontractor, foreman, or other person violating any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than $25 nor more than $500 or imprisoned for not less than three months nor more than two years, or both fined and imprisoned, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of the owner of every house, building, or structure (except a private house, used or to be used exclusively as a private residence) now under construction, or hereafter to be constructed, to affix and display conspicuously on each floor of such building during construction, a placard stating the load per square foot of floor surface which may with safety be applied to that particular floor during such construction, or if the strength of different parts of the floor varies, then there shall be such placards for each varying part of such floor. It shall be unlawful to load any such floors or any part thereof to a greater extent than the load indicated on such placards. All such placards shall be verified and approved by the inspector of buildings.

SEC. 9. That in all buildings in the District of Columbia in the course of construction and in all buildings having elevators intended for freight lifts only, and not constructed, protected, and operated as required for passenger elevators, it shall be unlawful to use hoists and elevators for hoisting materials, etc., in any such building or buildings unless the well holes or openings for such elevators or hoists on each and every floor of the building shall be closed to a height of at least 6 feet, with no opening greater than 2½ inches; and semiautomatic gates or doors at least 5 feet, with no opening greater than 2½ inches. By semiautomatic gates or doors it is meant to provide gates or doors which will close automatically when the car leaves the landing. All such elevators shall have a notice conspicuously painted or securely attached thereon, so as to be read clearly at all times, which notice shall read as follows:

"No person is allowed to ride on this elevator," which such notice shall at all times be maintained on elevators of this class. Such other safety or equivalent appliances as the inspector of buildings may determine to be necessary for the protection of life and limb shall also be provided.

SEC. 10. That any hoisting machine or engine used in building construction shall, where practicable, be set up or placed on the ground, and where it is necessary in the construction of such building to place such hoisting machine or engine on some floor above the ground floor, such machine or engine must be properly and securely supported with a foundation capable of safely sustaining twice the weight of such machine or engine. If a building in course of construction is three stories or more in height, no material needed for such construction shall be hoisted or lifted over a public street or alley unless 15 feet or more of such street or alley shall be barricaded from use by the public.

SEC. 11. That if elevating machines or hoisting apparatus operated or controlled by other than hand power are used in the construction, alteration, or removal of any building or other structure, a complete and adequate system of communication by means of signals shall be provided and maintained by the owner, contractor, or subcontractor during the use and operation of such elevating machines or hoisting apparatus in order that prompt and effective communication may be had at all times between the operator or engine or motive power of such elevating machine and hoisting apparatus and the employees or persons engaged thereon or in using or operating the same.

SEC. 12. That where the plans and specifications require the floors to be arched between the beams thereof, or where the floors or filling in between the floors are fireproof material or brickwork, the owner, contractor, or subcontractor shall complete the flooring or filling in as the building progresses to not less than within three tiers or beams below that on which the ironwork is being erected. If the plans and specifications of such buildings do not require filling in between the beams of floors with brick or fireproof material, the owner, contractor, or subcontractor for work in course of construction shall lay the underflooring thereof or a safe temporary floor on each story as the building progresses to not less than within two stories or floors below the one to which such building has been erected. Where double floors are not to be used, the owner or contractor shall keep planked over the floor two stories or floors below the story where the work is being performed. If the floor beams are of iron or steel, the contractor for the iron or steel work of a building in the course of construction, or the owner of such building, shall thoroughly plank over the entire tier of iron or steel beams on which the structural iron or steel work is being erected, except at such spaces as may be reasonably required for the proper construction of such iron or steel work and for the raising and lowering of materials to be used in the construction of such buildings and such spaces as may be designated by the plans and specifications for stairways and elevator shafts.

SEC. 13. That it shall be the duty of all architects, or draftsmen engaged in preparing plans, specifications, or drawings to be used in the erection, repairing, altering, or removing of any building or structure within the District of Columbia to provide in such plans, specifications, and drawings for all permanent structural features or requirements specified in the District of Columbia building regulations; and any failure to comply with these requirements shall subject the architect or draftsman to a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $200 for each offense.

SEC. 14. That for any injury to person or property occasioned by any violations of this act or failure to comply with any of its provisions, a right of action shall accrue to the party injured for any damages sustained thereby, and in case of loss of life by reason of such violation or failure as aforesaid, a right of action shall accrue to the widow of the person so killed, his lineal heirs, or adopted children, or to any other person or persons who were, before such loss of life, dependent for support on the person or persons so killed, for a like recovery of damages for the injuries sustained by reason of such loss of life or lives.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. No; I do not demand a second. We are willing to vote.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill H. R. 8593 as amended and read by the Clerk.

The question was taken; and two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas) there were—ayes 28, noes 41.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold that long enough to allow the Chair to lay before the House a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I withhold it for that purpose.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 14034. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 15762. An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER. On the vote to adjourn, the ayes are 28 and the noes are 41.

Mr. MANN. I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky has suggested that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BRYAN. If the gentleman will withhold that point while the vote is taken by tellers——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I want to say——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, this is not debatable.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, June 30, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 30, 1914.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek the inspiration that comes from Thee alone that we may have courage for life's great struggles. We would be unafraid amidst the conflicts of interests and purposes and passions of life. We would not only conquer the adverse and accidental conditions of life, but we would have supremacy over the heartless forces of nature. Thou hast called us to be kings and priests unto Thyself. Thou hast made us to have dominion over the works of Thy hand. But Thy power alone is sufficient for these things, and we seek Thy power and Thy grace that wisely and well we may administer the trusts committed to our hands. Hear us in our prayer, guide us by Thy spirit this day, we ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PUBLIC-BUILDING SERVICE (S. DOC. NO. 527).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriation relative to the public-building service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. May I inquire what the communication in relation to public buildings is?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would be glad to notify the Senator from Connecticut, but it consists of about 25 pages.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I merely wanted to know if it is a report from the commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it is an estimate of appropriation relative to the public-building service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is the estimate of the department?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes. The communication will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 751) to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 110) to regulate trading in cotton futures and provide for the standardization of "upland" and "gulf" cottons separately, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. CRAWFORD presented memorials of sundry citizens of Elk Point, S. Dak., remonstrating against the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DU PONT presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Wilmington, Del., remonstrating against national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHIVELY presented memorials of George Otto, W. A. Schmitt, Charles H. Wallace, and 100 other citizens of Vanderburg, Dearborn, and Marion Counties, all in the State of Indiana, remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the French-American Society of Allen County, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for the retirement of superannuated civil-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Indiana, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BURLEIGH presented a petition of sundry citizens of Bangor, Me., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of H. W. Longfellow Lodge, No. 82, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Portland, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GOFF presented petitions of 53 citizens of Harrison County, 127 citizens of Pendleton County, 25 citizens of Ohio County, and 48 citizens of Bridgeport and Wallace, all in the State of West Virginia, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE ANTITRUST LAW.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have here an article published in the New York World of day before yesterday by Samuel Untermyer relating to section 7 of what is popularly known as the Clayton bill, being House bill 16567, now before the Senate Judiciary Committee. It is a very instructive and edifying comment upon one phase of section 7. I ask unanimous consent to have it inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNTERMYER WOULD EXEMPT LABOR FROM THE ANTITRUST LAW.

[By Samuel Untermyer.]

Referring to Mr. Wickersham's interesting article in the editorial section of the World of Sunday, June 21, permit me to take issue with his construction of sections 7 and 18 of House bill No. 16657, known as the Clayton bill, now pending in the Senate. The charge is made that this is open to the constitutional objection of being class legislation. I take issue with that, and with each of the other contentions aimed against this legislation.

The subject is of so far-reaching importance that I feel that the public interest requires a full discussion of both sides of the question.

There is no such relation between competition in industry and in the labor of that industry as justifies the application of the same rules to assure the one as the other. Laws to regulate combinations of capital must necessarily differ from those that regulate combinations of labor. They require radically different treatment and do not belong to the same class of legislation. The law may be vicious as applied to capital, and essential to social and industrial progress as applied to labor. The perils that lurk in the one do not exist in the other. Granting that there are dangers in the suppression of competition in both, they are not the same dangers and should not be treated with the same remedies. The use that a man may be permitted to make of his faculties should not be subjected to the same rules and restrictions as those that should govern the use of his property.

If Congress may not lawfully enact laws for the latter purpose that shall not, and from the very nature of the case often can not, apply to the latter, it can never effectively legislate on any branch of human endeavor with special reference to the proper treatment of that particular subject. Its action would always be open to the charge that the failure to apply the same rule, however inapt and harmful, to varying economic conditions constitutes class legislation.

Such arguments proceed from a mistaken conception of the term. They are, I believe, now generally recognized as the last gasp of the special interests against progressive legislation that is intended to curtail their hitherto unrestrained license to exploit the community. The "constitutional" bugaboo is singularly out of place here. There is no serious question of constitutionality involved.

Mr. Wickersham claims that the sections in question have the effect of not only unduly exempting labor organizations from the operations of the antitrust law and of legalizing the so-called "secondary boycott," but that they also sanction acts of actual violence on the part of labor organizations.

MR. WICKERSHAM'S CONTENTION.

In order to grasp the full import of this extraordinary contention it is necessary to requote section 7, which reads as follows:

"That nothing contained in the antitrust laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of fraternal, labor, consumers', agricultural, or horticultural organizations, orders, or associations instituted for the purposes of mutual help, and not having capital stock or conducted for profit, or to forbid or restrain individual members of such organizations, orders, or associations from carrying out the legitimate objects thereof; nor shall such organizations, orders, or associations or the members thereof be held or construed to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade under the antitrust laws."

Commenting upon this provision, Mr. Wickersham says:

"It will be observed that the language employed in this bill not only provides that nothing in any of the antitrust laws shall be taken to forbid the existence and operation of labor organizations for mutual self-help, but that they shall not be construed to forbid or restrain such organizations or their members from carrying out, not 'the lawful objects thereof,' but 'the legitimate objects thereof.' The legitimate object of an organization is the natural or logical purpose for which it is formed. As the organization of laborers for the purpose of mutual help is made lawful, any logical or natural means which they may adopt for the purposes of helping themselves are by this act given legality.

"If the first clause of the section stood alone, the fact that labor organizations were declared lawful could not be construed to authorize them or their members to carry out the objects of their organization by unlawful means. But this consequence is expressly removed by the provision that the antitrust laws shall not be taken to forbid or restrain individual members of such organization from carrying out the legitimate objects thereof. In general the law punishes the carrying out of an unlawful purpose by any means, lawful or unlawful, and the carrying out of a lawful purpose by unlawful means. The natural meaning of the clause under consideration is to make lawful acts of members of these organizations done to carry out the purposes which this bill declares 'legitimate' even if the acts in themselves are unlawful."

ANOMALOUS STATUS OF LABOR.

The crux of Mr. Wickersham's very able and ingenious but, as it seems to me, wholly untenable construction of section 7 revolves around the definition of the word "legitimate." If he is wrong as to that, his entire contention falls to the ground.

No fair judgment upon the proposed legislation is possible without bearing prominently in mind the anomalous existing status of labor organizations under the decisions of our courts which the proposals that are criticized seek to correct. As the primary purpose of every labor union is by combined action between its members to better conditions of employment in the way of working hours, wages, and the like, the very existence of every such organization for these avowed purposes or any of them now constitutes in and of itself a violation of the antitrust law the moment the organization takes action looking to any of these ends.

The mere combination of employees in a given industry in the form of an organization to secure better wages, followed by any overt act such as the demand for a higher wage or the refusal to work unless the same is conceded, is in restraint of trade and in violation of existing law. It matters not that the demands of labor are reasonable or that the grievance is a just one. That is not a factor. The controlling circumstance that the free flow of competition in the trade in human labor has been restrained by this agreement among the workmen not to sell their labor except upon terms agreed upon between them stamps the combination as a conspiracy in restraint of trade. This is true without regard to the proportion of the available labor in that industry that is represented by membership in the organization, so long as it is sufficiently substantial to be said to constitute a restriction of the competition between the workmen.

In my judgment no such outcome was ever intended by the framers of the law, although the contrary has been vigorously and repeatedly asserted.

UNIONS THAT EXIST BY SUFFERANCE.

The fact that there have been few prosecutions where the action has been taken by peaceable means and for reasons that have met public approval has no hearing on the principle involved. The same is true of the many hundreds of unlawful combinations of capital in the forms of trusts, pools, "gentlemen's agreements," and the like that have gone unmolested because of the ineffective, haphazard, spasmodic, and unequal enforcement of the law.

The point is that, as a result of the decisions of courts, the labor unions are to-day existing in violation of law and by the mere sufferance of the Department of Justice. This is a situation which should not be tolerated. It is no longer a mooted question that organized labor properly directed performs a highly beneficent purpose in our economic system and is a dominating force in the conservation of human life and energy and of the future of the race. No one would contend to-day that it should be under the ban of the law, although it is not so many years since such contentions received serious attention. Every corporate enterprise is in a sense a combination of the capital of the shareholders in that particular industry, but it is not for that reason unlawful.

There is no reason why labor should not have the same right to combine to meet such combinations of capital, yet they have been denied that right by the construction placed upon the law which it is now sought to correct.

I insist that section 7 accomplishes this and nothing more. The use to which Mr. Wickersham puts the word "legitimate" seems to me exceedingly strained.

"LEGITIMATE" AND "LAWFUL" ENDS.

In order that a means or object shall be legitimate to a given end, it must be lawful as well as naturally or logically adapted to the purpose.

Admittedly men may organize under section 7 only for lawful purposes and only to carry out such purposes; yet it is argued that conduct that would otherwise be unlawful and criminal may be regarded as within the "legitimate" objects of a body organized solely for lawful purposes if this amendment is enacted.

It seems to me that the proposition presents a contradiction in terms. Only those objects could be regarded as "legitimate" that are within the scope of a body that is formed for purposes that are in themselves lawful. Carried to its logical conclusion, this construction of the proposed bill would render "legitimate" every crime in the calendar, from murder to sandbagging, in the course of a strike, on the theory that inasmuch "as the organization of laborers for the purpose of mutual help is made lawful, any logical or natural means" (quoting Mr. Wickersham) will be regarded as a legitimate object for carrying out the purpose. This I understand to be Mr. Wickersham's contention.

The answer to the criticism of section 18 is that it permits a labor organization to do as a unit or through its members only such acts as an individual may now lawfully do, or that a business corporation composed of an aggregation of individuals combined for profit may now do as against its rivals, and nothing more. I have never been able to understand why it should have been declared unlawful for an employee alone or in conjunction with others to bring pressure to bear on the employer by peacefully endeavoring to persuade the customers of the latter that the employer is treating his men unfairly or by withholding their patronage from the customer or inducing others to do so so long as he continues to deal with the employer with whom they are in controversy.

The individual has that right. Why should it be denied to them acting collectively?

THE DANBURY CASE NOT INVOLVED.

The section would not, in my judgment, operate to supersede the decision in the Danbury Hat case, for the reason that the acts accompanying that boycott included threats and terrorizing and were, therefore, in and of themselves unlawful. They could no more be said to be included within the term "peacefully persuading," which are the words used in the statute, than would be murder, arson, or rapine.

With all due respect to my distinguished brother Wickersham, there is nothing in this proposed legislation to justify the argument that it constitutes class legislation or legalizes violence, intimidation, or the breach of law and order in any controversy between capital and labor. The struggle of labor for a readjustment of the rewards of toil between capital and labor is sufficiently unequal without burdening it with the artificial shackles that have been put upon it by requiring organized labor to exist only by sufferance and at all times subject to the risk of reprisals for acts that were not intended to be in themselves considered unlawful.

As a believer in the industrial system of capitalism as against the impracticable program of socialism, it is hoped that these amendments will be enacted so as to render the peaceful struggle a little less unequal. Therein lies our hope of averting socialism.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, some days since, while the subject of an appropriation to establish a smokeless-powder plant at Indianhead was under discussion in the Senate, I made some comments thereon and read from Harper's Weekly an article written by Charles Johnson Post declaring that there is a Powder Trust. I cited from Harper's Weekly a statement that an understanding or agreement exists, to the detriment of the Government of the United States, with Germany, whereby Germany is apprised each day as to the quantity of smokeless powder that is manufactured by our plants and the orders each day are put in possession of the German Government.

I have received a letter from a gentleman, who is Mr. E. G. Buckner, vice president of the E. I. Du Pont de Nemours Powder Co., of Wilmington, Del. He felt that great injustice had been done him and his company, and since the quotation had been used from Harper's Weekly he felt it to be but justice to his concern that he be treated as fairly, and asked if a letter he would write would not be published in the RECORD as well. I responded to him and told him that if I stood for anything in the world it was for fairness and for fair play; that I believed the facts were true as I had stated them, but if he should write a letter I would ask that it might be printed in the RECORD, where the article I quoted had been printed.

I do not ask unanimous consent that it may be read, but I have read it over and find that it is couched in courteous language. I do not think it answers the position altogether, but I will ask that it may be published in the RECORD. It is from Mr. E. G. Buckner, vice president of the E. I. Du Pont de Nemours Powder Co.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

E. I. DU PONT DE NEMOURS POWDER CO.,
Wilmington, Del., June 27, 1914.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I do not believe there is any individual or corporation doing business with the Government that can match the record I submit herewith in our dealings with the Government. Will you do me the favor, and our company the justice, of reading this letter and filing it for future reference? It is a plain statement of fact supported by quotations from official records, in refutation of unfair, false, and libelous charges which have been oft-repeated and have gone unanswered, greatly to the injury of the Du Pont Co.

Harper's Weekly recently printed two articles, written by Charles Johnson Post, under the titles of "The Powder Trust" and "The Powder Plot," which grossly misrepresented the Du Pont Powder Co., and did it great injustice, and which we feel justifies this letter. Extracts from these articles were read in the Senate during the debate on the naval appropriation bill, and while Harper's Weekly has published an article showing how utterly unwarranted the original allegations were, I have thought it advisable to go into their refutation more in detail.

Taken in connection with the sensational cover page on the issue that contained the first article and the special advertising slips sent out for display at news stands, one would be justified in the conclusion that malice on the part of some one was back of these articles.

As a matter of fact, there is no statement, inference, or conclusion reflecting on the Du Pont Powder Co. in either article that is not wholly fallacious, and it is my purpose to recite such facts and give such quotations from official records as will establish the truth of this statement.

It was intended that the readers of Harper's Weekly should be convinced that the Du Pont Powder Co., in entering into a contract with certain powder manufacturers abroad, not only violated a Federal statute and were thereby guilty of a felony, but that "in selling abroad the identical powder used by our own Government" they committed treason. In the second article Harper's Weekly, through its contributor, specifically charges that the Du Ponts were "the monopoly paid spies of a foreign country," that they "are guilty of a criminal offense, under section 5335 of the Revised Statutes of the United States," and refers the matter to the Attorney General with the inquiry "What will the Attorney General do"?

I unhesitatingly say that if the statements and conclusions as set forth in Harper's Weekly are true, and the duty of the Attorney General is plain and he should proceed against the Du Pont Co. in accordance with Harper's Weekly's suggestion. On the other hand, if these two articles are made up largely of quotations deftly extracted from the public records, statements at variance with fact, and violent and astounding conclusions in no manner justified, but prepared and printed with malicious intent, then the duty of the Attorney General is equally plain and those responsible for the printing and circulation of these articles should be called upon to answer.

THE GERMAN CONTRACT.

(1) It is alleged that "in 1889 the powder-making Du Pont family entered into a contract with German manufacturers which was to give to the United States a monopoly, as far as German powder competition was concerned; that this contract provided for a mutual exchange of improvements, if any were made, in the processes used in the manufacture of such powder"; and, further, "the Du Ponts agreed to keep their German friends informed at all times of all powder furnished to the United States Government under this contract, stating in detail its quality and characteristics."

Now, as to the facts: Official records show that in 1889 officers of the American Navy in charge of the Ordnance Bureau in Washington had the impression that the brown prismatic powder manufactured and used in France and Germany was superior to the same type of powder manufactured by the Du Ponts and used by the Navy of the United States. These officers demanded that the Du Ponts attempt to secure the processes used by foreign manufacturers in the fabrication of this powder. Accordingly, Alfred I. Du Pont went abroad bearing a letter from James G. Blaine, Secretary of State, to our then minister to France, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 20, 1889.

Hon. HOBERT M. MCLANE,
United States Minister at Paris.

SIR: I hereby introduce to you Mr. Alfred I. Du Pont, of the firm of E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., the well-known manufacturers of explosives in Wilmington, Del., who is about proceeding to France for the purpose of gaining information in regard to a new powder for heavy guns with which the French Government is now experimenting. As any information he may be able to obtain will be at the disposition of this Government, you are requested to assist Mr. Du Pont in every proper way in accomplishing the object of his visit. I have the honor to be, sir,

Your obedient servant, JAMES G. BLAINE.

(Hearings before subcommittee, fortifications appropriation bill, 3d sess. 62d Cong., p. 325.)

Being unable to secure what he desired in France, Mr. Du Pont went to Germany, and later contracted for the processes and formulas to make this powder. Upon his return the contract was submitted to and approved by the officers of our Government.

Why were the German manufacturers kept "informed at all times of all powder furnished to the United States Government under this contract"?

Simply because the contract made with the German manufacturers and sanctioned by the Government of the United States provided that the German manufacturers should be compensated by royalty on every pound of brown prismatic powder manufactured for the United States Government. It was agreed between the Government of the United States and the Du Pont Powder Co. that this royalty was to be added to the price charged by the Du Ponts for powder, and it was further agreed that when the royalty was paid in full the price of powder to the Government per pound should be reduced by this amount. Thus the Government might be said to have been a party to the contract. All this is a matter of official record, printed in Congressional Hearings, available to anyone who may desire to know the facts.

Will Harper's Weekly kindly advise its readers how it would have been possible under this contract made on the initiative and with the approval of the Government, for the German manufacturers not to have known the exact amount of powder made by the Du Pont Powder Co. and purchased by the Government of the United States?

This contract came to an end during the Spanish-American War, after the royalties paid amounted to $100,000. It in no manner related to smokeless powder, which was not being manufactured in the United States on a commercial basis at that time.

Wherein is there any "criminal offense" associated with this transaction? What is there in it to justify the astounding allegation that the Du Ponts were "the monopoly paid spies of a foreign Government"?

ALLEGED GOVERNMENT POWDER "SECRETS."

(2) It is charged by this same contributor to Harper's Weekly that the Du Pont Powder Co. "is selling powder to foreign governments" and that this powder is the "identical powder used by our own Government," and emphasis is placed on the alleged fact that Government powder specifications are "secrets." He even goes so far as to state what may be done to people who "without the permission or authority of the Government, directly or indirectly," do such things as sell powder to foriegn nations.

The utter nonsense of all this sort of talk will be apparent when the fact is known that the Du Pont Powder Co. has never sold a pound of smokeless powder to any foreign government without first consulting with Government officials in advance of any sale, and in each instance the powder sold has been tested at the Government proving ground.

As to the alleged "secrets" involved in our smokeless powder it can be truthfully stated that there are none, and if anyone wants information, full and complete, concerning the manufacture of smokeless powder he can secure the same by buying a book on "Military Explosives," published by Erasmus M. Weaver, major, Artillery Corps, United States Army, and recently on general-staff detail. In this book all the alleged "secrets" are published, even to the minutest detail, under the authorization of the Ordnance Department of the War Department.

Likewise, if anyone desires the information, he can secure all the alleged "secrets" wrapped up in the manufacture of the powder used by Great Britain if he will purchase a book on "Explosives," printed by authority of His Majesty's Government and available to anyone who may have the money with which to buy. Great Britain's type of powder is known as cordite. The Du Pont Powder Co. is now manufacturing a batch of this powder for a South American country.

Would Great Britain's manufacturers have sold this powder—her own powder—to a foreign nation? Certainly. These manufacturers had the assistance of English army and navy officers detailed to South America to aid in securing this identical contract. This has been the policy and practice of all European nations for years. Every European nation that manufactures powder sells it wherever it can, as it sells armor and battleships and big guns and rifles and cartridge belts and everything else for which there is a demand or a market.

Within the past year the United States Government has obtained smokeless powder for purposes of examination and tests direct from England, France, and Argentine. This powder has been made on the same specifications as the smokeless powder used by the armies and navies of these nations.

As I have said, there are no real "secrets" surrounding the manufacture of smokeless powder, nor have there ever been for any great length of time. Almost any chemist could take these publications referred to and make smokeless powder, but would it be a smokeless powder that the Government would accept, and if accepted could it be manufactured with sufficient economy to justify the chemist engaging in the business? Right here is where experience comes in, which has meant research and the expenditure of vast sums of money, resulting in processes and machinery and distribution of plant units and special adaptation of certain men to certain work, the importance of which is easily understood and appreciated by those who have been engaged in such business. Any graduate of a domestic-science school can secure the specifications by which good bread can be made, but how many trials must be had before this graduate makes good bread? It is the accumulated experience of decades that has given the Du Pont Co. primacy in the manufacture of explosives, that has given it processes and machinery and economic arrangements exceedingly advantageous. This it has worked out, and this it has given to the Government for use in its plants, while the company guards the same as well as it can from the rest of the world.

The evolution and development of the smokeless powder which the Government uses covers a period of about 20 years. It originated in France in 1883, when M. Vieille produced guncotton adapted to the manufacture of smokeless powder and immediately published the particulars to the world. After Vieille told us how to make guncotton inventors in Europe and the United States directed every effort toward devising some method by which this desirable and powerful explosive might be used in guns. Prof. Mendeleef, a Russian, solved the problem, and in a magazine article told how this guncotton might be colloided; that is, mixed into a plastic mass suitable to be pressed through a die. Lieut. Bernadou, of the United States Navy, who was at that time abroad, translated this article into English, and upon his return to the United States, in conjunction with Admiral Converse, of the Navy, took out patents in the United States on the processes described.

The Government, however, never bought nor manufactured successfully any powder on the Bernadou and Converse patents nor, indeed, on the patents of Charles E. Monroe, whose work along the line of development of explosives is mentioned in the articles in Harper's Weekly. Admiral Converse himself, in a printed Government report, has stated:

"No profits accrued to me during the time that I retained an interest in the patents. No product has been sold to the Government or machines used in the manufacture of such product since I disposed of my interest in the patents. To the best of my knowledge and belief, no powder manufactured under these patents has even been furnished to the Army." (Hearings before subcommittee, fortifications appropriation bill, 3d sess. 62d Cong., p. 228.)

Meanwhile, however, the powder manufacturers of the United States had been busy, and soon they were making smokeless powder on a commercial basis. Up to this time the Government had never been able to manufacture it on a commercial basis. After Mendeleef's invention of colloidion guncotton it was recognized that the then known methods of manufacture were extremely dangerous. Many lives were sacrificed in handling it.

Then it was that Francis G. Du Pont invented and patented a process and machine for the dehydration of guncotton—that is, working it from a wet state—which eliminated the hazard associated with the handling of guncotton. Admiral Strauss, present Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, speaking of this invention at a recent congressional hearing, said:

"The Du Pont Co. invented and designed the present hydraulic press for dehydrating pyrocellulose. The Government is using this method with presses of the same design. Prior to that time, in France, dehydrating was accomplished by spraying with alcohol. The press invented by the Du Ponts made the manufacture of smokeless powder practically a safe industry." (Hearings before Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives, 1914, p. 578.)

The problem of adapting this powder to guns of different calibers now appeared. Then it was the multiperforated grain was devised, and I leave the bestowal of the credit for this discovery and invention to the Secretary of the Navy, who, in his annual report to Congress, said:

"Since the publication of the report of the Bureau of Ordnance a private firm, the Du Ponts, have developed methods of modifying the characteristics of the naval smokeless powder, having reference to a form of granulation which shall be capable of ready ignition and also to the ability to control the rate of burning. It is believed that these modifications solved the problem for all calibers, including small arms, for both propelling and bursting charges." (Hearings before subcommittee, fortifications appropriation bill, 3d sess. 62d Cong., p. 226.)

In tracing the development of smokeless powder the contributor to Harper's Weekly observed that during the early days the private manufacturer "had not been showing up very well." The above quotations from official records indicate that the Du Pont Co. has certainly been doing its part, for until this time but four great steps have been taken:

First. Vieille had produced guncotton in France.

Second. Mendeleef had told us how to colloid it.

Third. Francis G. Du Pont had told us how to eliminate danger in manufacture of guncotton and greatly reduce the cost.

Fourth. Hudson Maxim, an employee of the Du Pont Co., had invented the multiperforated grain, a form of grain that gave us absolute control over every feature of the firing.

It will be seen that of the four great steps in the development of this smokeless powder two of them stand to the credit of the Du Pont Co. Other problems presented and the Du Pont Co. solved them as they came, with the following valuable inventions:

Solvent recovery. This not greatly aided in drying the powder, but resulted in a marked economy in its manufacture, recovering the alcohol and using it again and again. Admiral Strauss, present Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department, in speaking of this invention before a congressional committee recently, said:

"When the manufacture of smokeless powder was first started for the Government, the Government furnished the alcohol used. The Du Pont Co. did at its own expense develop a method for recovering a large percentage of this solvent. A description of this method was furnished the Government without cost, and the system was installed at Indianhead, beginning with the manufacture of powder at that place." (Hearings before Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives, 1914, p. 478.)

Reworking powder. The next notable invention worked out by the Du Pont Co. was a process for reworking smokeless powder. At that time the present stabilizer was unknown and the powder deteriorated with age, imposing a great loss on the Government. This reworking process was developed in the laboratories of the Du Pont Co. and presented without cost to the Government for use in its plants. Admiral Strauss, present Chief of Bureau of Ordnance, in speaking of this invention before a congressional committee recently, said:

"The method of reworking powder now in use at Indianhead was designed by the Du Pont Co." (Hearings before Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives, 1914, p. 478.)

It might be stated in this connection that the Chiefs of Ordnance, in their annual reports to Congress, stated that the savings by reason of this process have amounted to over $1,000,000.

Stabilizer. Impressed with the necessity of introducing something into the powder to protect it against deterioration the Du Pont Co. brought to the attention of the Government a stabilizer which corrected this defect and extended the life of the smokeless powder used by the Government to approximately 20 years. Previously the life of this smokeless powder was from 6 to 10 years. Admiral Strauss, present Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, in speaking of this improvement before a congressional committee recently, said:

"The statements in regard to the Du Pont Co.'s bringing to the attention of the Government the results that could be accomplished by using diphenylamine as a stabilizer are correct; the stabilization of the powder has probably doubled its life and resulted in a very great saving to the Government." (Hearings before Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives, 1914, p. 478.)

Mechanical nitrators. The last great improvement in the process of powder manufacture is a nitrating apparatus, designed by the Du Pont Co., which not only improves the product, but greatly reduces the cost of production. This machine is now being installed at the Government plant at Indianhead. Admiral Strauss, present Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, in speaking of this invention before a congressional committee recently, said:

"The statements in regard to the new mechanical nitrators are correct. The Du Pont Powder Co. has recently given the Government the plans, the specifications, and the right to use this process for a nominal consideration, and the system is now being installed at Indianhead, where it will result in a material economy." (Hearings before Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives, 1914, p. 478.)

Before leaving this phase of the subject I would say that the present small-arms powder used by the Government and the machine with which it is made was wholly the result of efforts made by the Du Pont Co., and one of its most notable achievements. Over 100 samples of this powder were made and tested before the present satisfactory product was found. By reason of its nonerosive and other qualities, this powder extended the life of the Government stock of 600,000 rifles 10 times. That is to say, before this powder was invented the Government rifle was good for 1,500 rounds. It is now good for 15,000 rounds. Permission to manufacture this powder at its plants was given the Government without a cent's compensation. Gen. Crozier, Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, gives the Du Pont Co. the entire credit for developing this powder. He recently testified:

"Something over six years ago we changed the bullet of the small arm and at the same time greatly increased its velocity, using an increased charge of powder. Under these circumstances the barrels wore out rapidly, one barrel not being good for more than 1,000 or 1,500 rounds. I thought it necessary to make some efforts to see if we could not increase the life by changing powder. I bought some small-arms powder abroad, with which an increased life was secured, and I asked the Du Pont Co. to see if it could not produce a powder which would give an equal life to the barrels to that which was given with the foreign powder. They did so, and as a result the powder which we are now using gives a life to the barrel of over 10,000 rounds or nearly 15,000 rounds." (Testimony in suit of the United States v. Du Pont Powder Co., defendant's additional proofs, pp. 77–78.)

On his estimate, by reason of the extension of the life of the rifle, this invention added a money value of the small arms of the Government of over $15,000,000. It is useless to say that this exceeds the aggregate profits the Du Pont Powder Co. has received from the Government in all its dealings with it. After the Du Ponts have invented and presented this powder and the processes and machinery by which it is made to the Government, Congress now comes forward and places such a limitation on the appropriation bill as prohibits the War Department purchasing this powder from the Du Ponts.

Nor should the treatment accorded the Government by the Du Ponts when Congress made an appropriation to build a smokeless-powder plant for the Army be overlooked. In that instance the Du Pont Co., on the request of Gen. Crozier, invited the Government officials to their engineering department and gave them the use of every drawing it had. The company even sent its engineers out to assist in laying out the Government plant. It is impossible to place an estimate on the value of this service, the Du Pont Co. having spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in developing plans and economies that were thus freely given to the United States Government. When questioned as to the advantage of these plans, etc., to the Government, Gen. Crozier, Chief of Ordnance, at a hearing recently held, stated:

"It enabled us to rebuild our factory and to commence the manufacture of powder economically and efficiently without going through any processes of experimentation and without setbacks." (Testimony in suit of the United States against Du Pont Powder Co., defendant's additional proofs, pp. 76–77.)

Now, admit for the sake of argument that there have been or are now "secrets" associated with the manufacture of the smokeless powder used by the United States Government. If so, whose "secrets" were they or are they? Admiral Twining, former Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, at a hearing recently held, said:

"I would be glad to add to my previous statement that, so far as my personal knowledge goes and so far as I have been informed by my predecessors in office and my associates now, the Du Pont Co. has not only been always willing to assist the Army and the Navy in its work in the manufacture of powder, but has on many occasions suggested improvements and has placed them at the disposal of the Government for use in their own factories. I can not say anything more definite than that, because the things have not come to my personal attention; but my impression is that they have been entitled to just as much credit for the development of smokeless powder as the Government, and possibly more." (Hearings before subcommittee on fortifications appropriation bill, 62d Cong., 3d sess., p. 310.)

The Du Pont Co. is not using in any one of its three plants a single process or machine invented or devised by any officer connected with either the Army or Navy of the United States, and if there are any "secrets," or if there have been any "secrets," they were Du Pont "secrets" and not Government "secrets."

These steps in the development of powder cover every notable invention designed for the manufacture of powder. Criticism might be made in that no credit has been given to the Army and Navy in connection with this work. They are entitled to full credit for the part they performed. But from the very nature of things they were the testers and buyers of powder, not the makers of powder. The Du Pont Co. did not have an extensive proving ground or proper equipment for testing for ballistic results, involving pressures, velocity, wear on gun, etc. This work was performed by officers of the Army and Navy and was invaluable in the work of development. The Government never details one of these officers to shore duty long enough to enable him to become an expert powder maker. This does not mean that experience on shore and on shipboard does not equip the average ordnance officer with that knowledge calculated to make him a good judge and a good critic of powder.

SENATOR HENRY ALGERNON DU PONT.

(3) It would be made to appear that Senator HENRY ALGERNON DU PONT, who since 1906 has been identified with the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department of the Senate, has been looking after the interests of the Du Pont Powder Co., and the inference is given that because of this the Du Pont Co. had no need of a lobby in Washington.

Strange as it may seem, Senator DU PONT has never in any way, since being elected to the Senate, done anything that could be considered as serviceable to the Du Pont Powder Co. His election to the Senate was a positive detriment to the company. I am the authorized representative of the Du Pont Powder Co. in all its dealings in military powders in this and foreign countries and never but once—and that was early in Senator DU PONT'S service in Washington—have I asked a favor of him. This was in connection with a minor matter and was in no manner connected with appropriation for or sale of powder. Senator DU PONT is in no wise interested in the Du Pont Powder Co. as an officer, a director, a stockholder, or an employee, nor has he been since elected to the United States Senate.

It might be stated in this connection that during the eight years he has been in the United States Senate the price of smokeless powder for large guns has been reduced six times, from 70 cents to 53 cents per pound, and small arms powder from 84½ cents to 65 cents per pound, and such limitations have been placed upon the appropriation bills going out of Senator DU PONT'S committees as to render it all but impossible for the Army to purchase any powder from the du Ponts.

Now, I have shown—

(1) That the contract for brown prismatic powder was made at the instance and with the approval of the Government.

(2) That the specifications on which the smokeless powder is manufactured by and for the Government are published to the world and revised to date by Government officers, and if there are any "secrets" they are Du Pont "secrets" in the shape of economic processes and labor-saving machinery suggested by experience through more than a century in the manufacture of all kinds of explosives.

(3) That while HENRY ALGERNON DU PONT has been Senator not only has the price of powder greatly decreased but the Du Pont Co. has been cut off from participating in the manufacture of any powder the purchase of which is provided for by the committee with which Senator DU PONT is associated.

Having established these three facts I submit that I am justified in contending that the charges carried in the two articles in Harper's Weekly under the title of "The Powder Trust" and "The powder plot" were without warrant or excuse and grossly and outrageously unjust and unfair to the Du Pont Powder Co., and this letter is fully justified.

Yours, very truly,

E. G. BUCKNER,
Vice President.

IS THERE A POWDER PLOT?

(By E. G. Buckner, vice president Du Pont Powder Co.)

Harper's Weekly recently printed two articles, under the titles "The Powder Trust" and "The powder plot," which grossly misrepresented the Du Pont Powder Co. and did it great injustice.

As a matter of fact there is no statement, inference, or conclusion reflecting on the Du Pont Powder Co. in either article that is not wholly fallacious.

(1) It was intended that the readers of Harper's Weekly should be convinced that the Du Pont Powder Co., in entering into a certain contract with German manufacturers 25 years ago violated the Federal statute and were guilty of a felony.

What are the facts? In 1889 Admiral Folger, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department, convinced that the brown prismatic powder manufactured abroad was superior to that used in our Navy, ordered the Du Pont Powder Co. to secure these processes. Armed with letters from Mr. Blaine, then Secretary of State, to our ministers abroad explaining his mission, Alfred I. Du Pont went to Europe and contracted for the right to manufacture this powder, compensation to be made by the payment of a royalty per pound on the powder manufactured until the same aggregated $100,000. Thus our Government was not only familiar with the contract but a party to it, for it obligated itself to pay and did pay these royalties.

We did "keep the German manufacturer informed of the amount of powder manufactured for our Government." How would it have been otherwise when our Government was the only purchaser and we had to make an accounting for every pound of powder manufactured?

The records are public and I defy anyone to show from them anything justifying the astounding charge that the Du Ponts, in making or carrying out this contract, were the "monopoly paid spies of a foreign Government" and therefore guilty of treason.

This contract came to an end in 1898. It in no manner related to our present smokeless powder.

(2) It is charged that the Du Pont Co., in selling to foreign Governments the "identical powder used by our own Government," betrayed Government powder secrets and was thereby "guilty of a criminal offense."

The utter nonsence of this will be apparent when the fact is known that the Du Pont Powder Co. has never sold a pound of smokeless powder abroad without first consulting with Government officials, and in each instance the powder sold has been tested by Government officers at the Government proving ground.

There are no "powder secrets." The identical specifications on which the present Government powder is made are printed in a book published by Maj. Erasmus M. Weaver, of the Army, and on sale at bookstores. Likewise the specifications on which cordite, Great Britain's powder, is made are printed and sold by authority of His Majesty's Government. Almost any chemist could take the publications referred to and make smokeless powder, but I doubt if it would be made with economy.

Every European nation that manufactures powder sells the identical powder used by such Government wherever it can, as it sells armor, battleships, guns, and all other ordnance material. European nations even go so far as to detail their army and navy officers to go to other countries and assist their manufacturers in landing these contracts.

The development of the smokeless powder which we now manufacture for our Government covers a period of about 30 years. It originated in France in 1883, when M. Vieille produced guncotton adapted to the manufacture of smokeless powder. At once the world's inventors directed every effort toward devising some method by which this explosive could be utilized in guns. Mendeléef, a Russian, solved this problem, and in a magazine article told how this guncotton might be colloided; that is, mixed into a plastic mass suitable to be pressed through a die. Lieut. Bernadou, of the Navy, who was at that time abroad, returned home with this information, and in conjunction with Admiral Converse took out patents on these processes in the United States. No powder was ever manufactured, however, successfully under these patents, nor under the patent of Charles E. Monroe whose work is mentioned in Harper's Weekly. Admiral Converse himself, in printed Government reports, has testified that the Government never bought any powder manufactured under the Bernadou patents.

It was recognized that the then known methods of manufacture were hazardous. Then it was that Francis G. Du Pont invented and patented a process and machine for the dehydration of guncotton—that is, handling it in a wet state—that eliminated all danger, and as Admiral Strauss, of our Navy, says, "Made the manufacture of smokeless powder a safe industry."

The next problem was the adaptation of this powder to guns of different caliber. This problem was solved by Hudson Maxim, an employee of the Du Pont Co., who invented the multi-perforated grain; and the Du Pont Co was given credit for it by Mr. Tracey, Secretary of the Navy, in his annual report to Congress.

Harper's Weekly observes that during these early days private manufacturers "had not been showing up very well." Let us see:

First. Vieille had produced guncotton in France.

Second. Mendeléef, of Russia, had told us how to colloid it.

Third. Francis G. Du Pont had told us how to eliminate danger in the manufacture.

Fourth. Hudson Maxim, an employee of the Du Pont Co., had invented the multi-perforated grain that gave absolute control over the burning.

It will thus be seen that of the four great steps in the development of smokeless powder, two stand to the credit of the Du Pont Co. In rapid succession there followed valuable inventions which not only resulted in improving the powder but in reducing the cost—methods and devices for recovering alcohol, reworking powder, stabilizing the powder and more than doubling its life, nitrating guncotton, etc., which were worked out in Du Pont laboratories and experimental plants and credit for which has time and again been given to the Du Pont Co. by Army and Navy officers.

The Du Pont Co. invented a small-arms powder and a machine for its manufacture, the admitted value of which to the Government was greater than our aggregate profits on all the business we have ever done with the Government. The Government is manufacturing this powder with this machine while Congress, by limitations on appropriation bills, prohibits the purchase of this powder from the Du Ponts.

It is the accumulated experience of decades that has given the Du Ponts primacy in the manufacture of explosives, enabling them to work out processes, machinery, and economies so essential to commercial success; and let it be known and remembered that every process and invention perfected by the Du Ponts has been turned over to the Government, practically without cost, for use in its two plants.

With the above recital in mind, every item of which can be verified by official records, if there are any smokeless-powder secrets whose are they?

I would not have anyone infer that I contend that Army and Navy officers have not aided in the development of our present smokeless powder, but I deny, nor will they contend, that the service rendered by them justifies the claim in Harper's Weekly as to Government secrets. They have tested and criticized and suggested. The Du Ponts, in their laboratories and experimental plants, spent money and brought results.

(3) It would be made to appear that Senator HENRY ALGERNON DU PONT, who since 1906 has been identified with the Committees on Military Affairs and Expenditures in the War Department of the Senate, has been looking after the interests of the Du Pont Co. in Washington. This is ridiculous. Senator DU PONT is neither an officer, a director, a stockholder, or an employee of the company, nor has he been since elected to the Senate, nor has he ever made any effort to assist it in Washington. During the eight years he has been in the United States Senate the price of smokeless powder for large guns has been reduced six times, from 70 cents to 53 cents per pound, and such limitations have been placed on the bills going out of his committees as to render it impossible for the Army now to purchase any powder from the Du Ponts.

Now, the foregoing statements, every one of which can be verified and substantiated by official records, establish the following facts:

(1) That the contract for brown prismatic powder was made at the instance and with the approval of the Government.

(2) That if there are any smokeless-powder secrets they are Du Pont secrets.

(3) That while Senator HENRY ALGERNON DU PONT has been Senator nothing advantageous to the Du Pont Co. has come from his committees.

These facts being established, I submit that I am justified in contending that the charges carried in the two articles in Harper's Weekly are without warrant or excuse and are grossly and outrageously unjust and unfair.

WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY RESEARCH (S. DOC. NO. 528).

Mr. BURTON. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document a report by a British committee on wireless telegraphy research. It consists of some 17 typewritten pages.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it may be done. The Chair hears none.

SERAPIO ROMERO.

Mr. LEE of Maryland, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6014) for the relief of Serapio Romero, late postmaster at Las Vegas, N. Mex., reported it without amendment.

AMERICAN SURETY CO., OF NEW YORK.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I make a unanimous report from the Committee on Claims upon Senate bill 5978, in favor of the American Surety Co., of New York. This is a case where the committee recommends unanimously the repayment to this company of about $100,000 which it was compelled to pay by a judgment of one of the lower courts, and which has been reversed by the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States. The company loses $18,000 of interest by reason of the time the money has been in the hands of the Government. For that reason I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill. I take it as the loss of interest already has been large to these people they are entitled to immediate action.

Mr. SMOOT rose.

Mr. JAMES. I will say to the Senator from Utah that it is a judgment which was rendered in the lower court against this company for $100,000, and they paid the money under protest and appealed to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court reversed the case and directed that the money be refunded to the company. The Government has had the money of this company for three years. Of course, we do not allow them any interest, but we think the bill should be immediately passed and that the money they paid into the Treasury under this erroneous judgment should be returned to them as directed by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill is based upon a decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. JAMES. Of the Supreme Court.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JONES. Can the Senator give me any idea as to when we are likely to take up the calendar for consideration?

Mr. JAMES. Pretty soon.

Mr. THOMAS. About the 3d of March, it appears to me.

Mr. JONES. If that is the case, then all these bills had better go to the calendar.

Mr. JAMES. I hope the Senator will not object to the consideration of this bill. It is to refund money the company paid into the Treasury by reason of a decision of the lower court, which has been reversed by the Supreme Court.

Mr. JONES. I can see the justice of the bill.

Mr. JAMES. They appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that court decided that the money was wrongfully paid and therefore it should be returned to them.

Mr. JONES. I have no objection to the bill, but I know there are several bills on the calendar which involve very much smaller amounts, but which mean about as much to the individuals as this amount does to this company. I should like to see the Senate get to the calendar very soon.

Mr. JAMES. I assure the Senator that the calendar will be reached soon.

Mr. JONES. Will the Senator help us to get to the calendar?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. JONES. All right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland reports from the Committee on Claims, with amendments, a bill which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5978) to refund to the American Surety Co., of New York, an amount, with interest, paid by it to the United States under protest and to avoid the levy of an execution under a judgment against it, which judgment was subsequently reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments of the committee were, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$118,925" and to insert in lieu "$100,385.05," and in line 7 to strike out the words "with interest," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and instructed to pay to the American Surety Co., of New York, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,385.05, the amount of a judgment which the United States recovered against the American Surety Co., and which judgment, on May 15, 1911, the American Surety Co. paid, under protest and to avoid the levy and execution under said judgment, and which was covered into the Treasury, which judgment was on June 8, 1914, reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States and a new trial awarded, and upon such new trial a judgment was rendered June 19, 1914, in favor of the American Surety Co. and the petition of the United States was dismissed.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. GOFF. The words "with interest" ought to be stricken out of the title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That comes after the bill is passed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to refund to the American Surety Co., of New York, an amount paid by it to the United States under protest and to avoid the levy of an execution under a judgment against it, which judgment was subsequently reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States."

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES ON FLATHEAD IRRIGATION PROJECT.

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Public Lands, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4441) to extend the provisions of the act of June 23, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 592), authorizing assignment of reclamation homestead entries, and of the act of August 9, 1912 (37 Stat. L., 265), authorizing the issuance of patents on reclamation homestead entries, to lands in the Flathead irrigation project, Montana, and I submit a report (No. 632) thereon. I call the attention of my colleague to the report.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I dislike to object to the consideration of the bill, but I will say to the Senator the only way we will ever get to the calendar is to have bills go to the calendar and have enough Senators interested in those bills so that they will take an interest in reaching the calendar at some time in the near future.

Mr. WALSH. I think if the nature of the bill were stated for the information of the Senator from Utah, he would not object.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say frankly to the Senator I have no objection to the provisions of the bill. The only question is as to whether we should at this stage allow every bill as it is reported to the Senate to be considered by unanimous consent with the calendar as full as it is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. SMOOT. If there is any real reason why the bill should be passed, and it is an emergency measure, I certainly will withdraw my objection to it.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, I should not ask for the immediate consideration of the bill if it were not an urgent matter. The Senator will recall that in 1910 an act was passed permitting settlers upon reclamation projects generally to make assignments of their claims after having completed the requirements, so far as residence is concerned. That act was not applicable to this reclamation project conducted within an Indian reservation. Under the other provisions of the law a great many settlers have gone upon the project and are really in rather desperate circumstances by reason of the inapplicability of the law.

Mr. SMOOT. That being the case, of course I shall not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this morning a poor old woman, the widow of a soldier, called at my committee room, handing me a notice from her landlady that she must vacate the room she is occupying, not having been able to pay her rent. Her name is included in one of the bills on the calendar. There is a great impropriety in passing bills by unanimous consent and permitting the calendar to be loaded down as it is at the present time with between two and three hundred bills. I analyzed the calendar yesterday, and I am going to direct attention later on to 25 or 30 bills that are more important than the river and harbor bill, in my judgment, and certainly more important than any bill such as is now asked to be passed by unanimous consent. However, I am not going to object to this bill; but I do think that we ought not to neglect the calendar any longer. It never has happened before that there was such an accumulation of bills, some of them very important, as there are on the calendar; and I do hope that Senators who are interested in other bills will not force their consideration to the entire exclusion of the calendar.

This is all I care to say.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator from Utah and the Senator from New Hampshire whether they think there would be objection to having the calendar considered at some evening session this week or next week, or there might be two evening sessions while the weather is favorable.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. KERN. I do not yield at this moment. In that way we could make considerable progress. I have felt some times that a pretty good way to bring up the calendar would be to set apart some evening for it, and then we would not interfere with other business.

Mr. BRISTOW. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Indiana if he thinks such a proposition is just to the Senate and to Senators spending, many of us, the sixth summer in Washington? There is no use to fool yourselves; you can not get through with the business that is mapped out here before September or October. Why, then, should we hold night sessions in the very heated period here when it is not necessary to do so?

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, in response to that I will say I have not observed that night sessions have worked any great hardship on Senators; in fact, I think the most enjoyable sessions we have had during the past few months have been those held at night. Certainly there have been more attractions furnished to the public at evening sessions that at any other time. I have not observed that Senators have been any the worse for spending a couple of hours here in this Chamber in the evening If from my observation I was led to conclude that it was a hardship on anybody I would not insist upon it; but I have not so observed.

Mr. BRISTOW. It may not be a hardship on Senators who do not work of evenings, but it imposes a hardship upon Senators who do work of evenings and who attend for long hours the sessions of the Senate during the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRISTOW. I thought when I was on the floor that I was speaking through the courtesy of the Senator from Montana. I did not know that he had declined to yield further.

I do not intend to object to the Senator's bill, but I suppose that it is something that ought to be attended to, but I wanted to supplement what the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] had said. I desire to say to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] that my objection to night sessions is not a frivolous objection. I think I can stand as much work as can the average Senator, but I think in discharging our duties here we ought to have some consideration for our physical capacity.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have a number of bills on the calendar in which I am directly interested as representing those who are interested in the bills, and I am as anxious as any Senator can be to secure action upon them, particularly as I assume that there will be no objection to their consideration. I have observed that there have been a number of bills which have been called up and passed by unanimous consent. I have not asked for such a proceeding up to this time upon any of the measures to which I refer, but inasmuch as that is becoming the custom, I expect, unless we can get a call for the calendar very soon, to see what I can do by following such example.

I am quite aware of the inconvenience which a night session entails and particularly upon Senators who, like the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], are very industrious men. I am also aware of the fact that the so-called program is one which will, unless we can make greater haste than we have been doing recently, consume not only the time between now and September, but the time between now and December. The calendar, being of very large dimensions, should during that time and at intervals, if possible, be taken up.

I am perfectly willing, speaking for myself and without intending to discommode anyone, to come here at 9 o'clock in the morning and stay here until 9 o'clock every evening, if necessary, if a part of the time can be devoted to bills on the calendar. We certainly ought to get that behind us. I do not believe that there has been any calendar work done, to speak of, for the last three or four weeks perhaps. During that time the amount of business upon it has been swelling constantly, and unless we can obtain by unanimous consent, or in some other way, the privilege of calling up and disposing of some of the bills upon the calendar very soon, I propose to make a motion for more extended sessions, and submit it for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not intend to object to the consideration of the bill offered by the Senator from Montana unless it leads to debate. If it leads to debate, then I reserve the right to object.

Mr. WALSH. I will say, Mr. President, that if I had thought for a moment that it would lead to debate, I should not have asked unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. SIMMONS. I reserve the right to object if the bill does lead to debate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, there is a mistake in the notice I gave a few days ago as printed on the calendar. As it appears on the calendar it is that I gave notice that to-day, immediately following routine morning business and the taking up of the unfinished business, I would address the Senate on the trade commission bill. I want to correct that by saying that I did not expect to begin my remarks until the bill was taken up for consideration at 2 o'clock.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. JONES. I simply desire to say to the Senator from Montana that I am not going to object to the present consideration of his bill, but I hope that there will be no more requests for unanimous consent until we start with the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. In that connection, Mr. President, I want to give notice now, so that there will be no feeling about it hereafter, that from now on I shall object to every request for unanimous consent for the consideration of any bill until the calendar is regularly considered.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I exercise the privilege of saying that I shall be glad to join with the Senator in securing speedy consideration of the calendar, in the consideration of which I am very deeply interested.

Mr. KENYON. I want to ask the Senator from Utah if he would not on future days do just the same as he has done to-day, only object after the first unanimous consent has been granted, and let us get rid of one bill?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I am going to object from now on to the consideration of any bill.

Mr. KENYON. I think I have heard the Senator say that before.

Mr. SMOOT. But we did consider the calendar after I made that statement before, though not so often as I think we ought to have done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LANE. Is this the bill relating to the irrigation of the Flathead Indian Reservation?

Mr. WALSH. The object of the bill is to extend to settlers on the Flathead Indian Reservation the same right and privilege which the act of 1910 extends to settlers under reclamation projects generally.

Mr. LANE. Does this bill have to do with reservation lands that belong to the Indians?

Mr. WALSH. No; it has nothing to do with reservation lands belonging to the Indians. It has to do with reservation lands which have been appropriated by settlers.

Mr. LANE. And for which the irrigation supply is paid out of the Indian fund, which is reimbursable?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. LANE. I think this bill ought to go to the Committee on Indian Affairs, if it is that sort of bill. We had recently a good deal of discussion about the Flathead lands and the irrigation scheme there. There are one or two such bills before the Committee on Indian Affairs. I know nothing of this bill, it may be all right, I do not say it is not.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator that if he understood the bill he would make no objection to it. It merely permits the settler to assign whatever right he has to some one else, simply to stand in his shoes.

Mr. LANE. I accept the Senator's statement. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of June 23, 1910 (36 Stat., p. 592), authorizing the assignment under certain conditions of homesteads within reclamation projects, and the act of August 9, 1912 (37 Stat., p. 265), authorizing under certain conditions the issuance of patents on reclamation entries, and for other purposes, be, and the same are hereby, extended and made applicable to lands within the Flathead irrigation project, in the former Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont., but such lands shall otherwise be subject to the provisions of the act of Congress approved April 23, 1904 (33 Stat., p. 302), as amended by the act of Congress approved May 29, 1908 (35 Stat., p. 448): Provided, That the lien reserved to the United States on the land patented, as provided for in section 2 of said act of August 9, 1912, shall include all sums due or to become due to the United States on account of the Indian price of such land.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana a question in regard to the bill. What is the purpose of this proposed legislation? It refers to a statute with which I am not familiar.

Mr. WALSH. The original irrigation act provided for the payment of the entire sum due in 10 annual installments and provided that title could not be acquired to any homestead under the reclamation act until the payments had all been made. So a settler might go upon his land, comply otherwise with all the requirements of the homestead act, except that his payments had not been completed, and yet he could get no title; he could not dispose of his land; he could not borrow any money upon the security of his land until all the payments had been made. Recognizing the inequity of that provision, in 1910 an act was passed by which, after the settler had complied with all the other requirements except the making of the payments, he could assign his entry to another qualified entryman, who would stand in his shoes and be obligated to make the same payments to the Government as time went on; but that act did not extend to the reclamation projects on Indian reservations. We want to give the settler on Indian reservations the same privilege that the general act extends to all settlers under other reclamation projects.

Mr. ROBINSON. The purpose of this bill, then, is simply to permit assignments of homestead entries on the Flathead Indian Reservation in Montana where the entryman has already complied with the other provisions of the law, but has not yet completed his payments?

Mr. WALSH. That is the purpose.

Mr. ROBINSON. It will not be possible under this bill, I take it, to mass a number of homestead entries under one holding. The transfer or assignment must be made to another qualified entryman.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think so. It puts the entryman in the same attitude that any entryman would be on a homestead to which he had perfected his claim by making final proof.

Mr. ROBINSON. What I want to know is, can entrymen who want to make these assignments transfer them all to one person or any number of them to one person?

Mr. WALSH. Oh, yes; any man may go out and buy them the same as he may buy any homesteads on the public domain on which the entryman has complied with the conditions required by the law; that is to say, an entryman who has gone out and lived on his land for three years and made his final proof may then sell to anybody.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; but he has not completed his payments. Does the Senator think it good policy—he is familiar, I take it, with the conditions that exist on this reservation—does he think it good policy, for instance, to permit the acquisition of these homestead entries and the grouping of them into large areas? Is that the purpose of the legislation?

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator that the policy has already been considered by the Senate in the general reclamation act. You would have no different conditions on the Flathead Reservation than you have under any reclamation project. A man may do that now on a reclamation project. It has been disclosed, however, that no such tendency has been exhibited.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has this bill been referred to the Bureau of Indian Affairs for a report?

Mr. WALSH. It has, and their report is embodied in the report of the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. The report is favorable?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well, Mr. President, I will make no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the pension bills on the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, if the motion is confined to pension bills I shall make no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. It is confined to pension bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill (H. R. 12914) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, do I understand the calendar is before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senate decided to take up the pension bills on the calendar.

Mr. THOMAS. That is out of the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate yesterday decided that it was in order.

Mr. THOMAS. If the calendar is to be considered, it ought to be considered from its inception, beginning with No. 1.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the rule which the Senate adopted yesterday I made a motion to take up the pension bills on the calendar under Rule VIII. That motion was in order, and was agreed to by the Senate this morning.

The name of Sarah Rebecca Jones, widow of David R. Jones, late second lieutenant, Second Regiment United States Infantry, War with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will call the attention of the Senator from Indiana to this item. It is a proposition to increase the pension of a widow of a soldier in the War with Mexico from $20 to $30 per month. I observe the report states that from the evidence submitted "your committee are of the opinion" that an increase from $12 to $30 is justified in lieu of the $20 proposed by the bill.

We have been very careful, I think, heretofore not to increase the pensions of widows of private soldiers beyond $20 a month, and I think this would be an unfortunate departure, because we would have a deluge of such applications. The beneficiary in this case is a very old woman, I observe—82 years of age—yet there are a great many others approaching that age. I think we ought not to do it.

Mr. SHIVELY. I do not recall just what the evidence was. The Senator understands that this is a House bill, and it came from the House at $20 a month. Then, there was some testimony submitted to the committee which seemed to make the case a very exceptional one.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think we ought to be careful not to increase the pensions of widows of private soldiers beyond $20. We have not done it in the case of widows of soldiers of the other wars. If we do it in one case, we are going to be asked to do it in all.

Of course I merely call attention to it. I think the committee amendment ought to be disagreed to, and let it remain at $20.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I inquire the calendar number of the last bill considered?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Calendar No. 419, Senate bill 5501.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] is interested in an item in that bill. I refer to the clause granting a pension to Harriet Pierson Porter. The Senator was here a moment ago inquiring about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the votes whereby the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. THOMAS. What is the request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire requests that the votes whereby Senate bill 5501 was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now I ask that that bill be passed over temporarily.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the bill will be passed over temporarily.

The bill (H. R. 14546) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 1, line 7, after the words "United States," to strike out "Infantry" and insert "Cavalry," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Clarence B. Brown, late of Company K, Eighth Regiment United States Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 4, to strike out:

The name of Edward C. McDowell, late captain, acting quartermaster, United States Volunteers, War with Spain, commanding U. S. Army transport Rawlins, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MYERS. I do not understand this amendment. I think there must be some mistake about it. In the printed bill lines 5, 6, 7, and 8, relating to Edward C. McDowell, are stricken out as a committee amendment; and yet when I turn to the report submitted to the Senate on this bill, being report on House bill 14546, Calendar No. 451, headed "Mr. SHIVELY, from the Committee on Pensions, submitted the following report," I find that on page 6, a little below the middle of the page, the case of Edward C. McDowell is taken up, all the evidence is reviewed, and on page 7, about the middle of the page at the end of the review of the case, it is stated:

From the evidence submitted in this case it is believed that a pension of $24 per month is fully warranted, and it is so recommended.

If the committee recommends the provision, why is it stricken out?

Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator will observe that, while that statement taken from the House report is reproduced in the report of the Senate committee, if he will refer to page 83 of the document which he has in his hand, he will find there the reason for the action of the committee.

Mr. MYERS. In this report?

Mr. SHIVELY. At the end of the same report of the committee on this bill.

Mr. MYERS. I have not read that yet.

Mr. SHIVELY. That reads:

Page 2, strike out lines 5, 6, 7, and 8.

This is H. R. 1255, the case of Edward C. McDowell. Soldier served in the War with Spain from May 31, 1898, until June 30, 1901. There is no evidence that soldier contracted his present disabilities, namely, disease of kidneys and paralysis of left arm, in the military service of the United States. Your committee do not think the evidence submitted justifies the proposed pension of $24 per month, and this item is stricken from the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will also call the Senator's attention to the fact that the records of the War Department fail to show that the soldier was treated during his service for any disability. They show that no physical examination was made at the date of his discharge. In view of the records of the department and the evidence that was submitted to the committee, it was absolutely impossible for the Senate committee to allow the applicant $24 a month under the rules of the committee.

Mr. MYERS. I asked the question for information. I thank the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] for yielding; and that is all the time I will claim at this juncture.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will vote this amendment down. I think the statement in the House report justifies us in accepting the House provision. The Senator from Utah says that the Army records fail to show that the soldier was treated in the service, and yet it appears, according to the House report, that—

There is filed a certificate of the United States surgeon of the transport vessel upon which the soldier served, in which it is set forth that the soldier was under this surgeon's professional care and treatment for several weeks during March, 1901, during service, suffering from gastric irritation and intestinal indigestion to an extent to sensibly impair his health and strength. The surgeon states that in his opinion these disabilities were due to the long service of the soldier upon transports and thus being exposed to contrasts of temperature met with between New York and the West Indies. Much of the soldier's service was rendered upon transports upon these waters.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that while this provision may not be strictly within the rules of the committee, yet it is within the recollection of every Senator that those rules have not been fully adhered to. I think the last time we considered pension bills on the calendar there were two or three claims passed on their merits that were not really in accordance with the rules of the committee.

I want also to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this man is now 75 years old. He served in the Confederate Army, and then when his country was in danger or when its honor was at stake he enlisted and served in the War with Spain. I think that a man who did that is entitled to some consideration at our hands and that in such a case we ought not to adhere strictly to the rules of the committee. I recognize the merit of those rules and the reason for them; but the House report says that this soldier is 75 years of age, according to the witnesses; that he is feeble and infirm in health, unable to perform any manual labor, and is now without means. As I say, he is 75 years old, and possesses no property of any kind. He had an honorable service in the Confederate Army, and afterwards in the United States Army during the War with Spain.

I think there is sufficient there to warrant this Government in giving him $24 a month, and I hope the committee amendment will be rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, so that the Senate may know the facts in the case, I desire to say that the claimant made application for a pension on December 30, 1912, alleging certain disabilities, but in that application he did not claim that they were of service origin. The claim was rejected on January 31, 1913, on the ground of claimant's manifest inability to connect the alleged disability with his military service, as shown by his sworn statement. No appeal was taken and no effort was made to reopen the claim.

Mr. President, if we should allow this pension under the statement of the claimant himself every soldier who is in the Regular Army would be entitled to a pension; and the committee felt that it was opening a door so wide that it would be a very troublesome matter in the future. It may be a splendid charity case; my heart goes out to the man, and I should like it if in all those cases we could grant a pension, but if we undertake to do it I do not know where we would end. This is one of the cases where the committee felt it was not justified in granting the pension.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will be stricken out if it goes to conference.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I know that the Senator's sympathies are with this case and other cases of this kind, but I do not think we are in very much danger so far as concerns the precedents we set here in these special bills. As a matter of fact, every special bill is a precedent; and the only real justification for special bills before Congress is the fact that the claimant does not come under the general pension laws. If this man could have established his disability as having originated in the service, of course he would not have had to come here. He could have gone to the Pension Bureau and could have gotten his pension. It is true that he admits here that he could not trace his disability back to the service; but the testimony of the physicians, as shown here, does not make it absolutely conclusive that it was not incurred in the service. I do think Congress is not establishing a precedent that would come back to plague us, or anything of that sort, or one that we ought not to make.

Mr. SHIVELY. Let it go to conference.

Mr. JONES. I am afraid to let it go into conference. I do not think the Senate ought to cut out this item and throw it into conference, and I hope the Senate will reject the committee amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will venture to ask the Senator from Washington if he does not think the rate in this case, all things considered, is a little high?

Mr. JONES. It is made $24 in cases of this kind generally. I think where the facts are as strong as this the committee nearly always reports $30.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the regular rate would be $24, based on the disability shown, provided the service was over a year. I have not really noticed what this service was.

Mr. JONES. We do not follow an absolutely uniform rule. I have noticed a good many bills where the actual facts were not so strong as in this case, where the committee has allowed $30. I do not complain of that. I find they have allowed $40 in some cases, and I know of some cases where they have allowed $50 where the facts were not nearly so strong as they are here; so it seemed to me that under the facts here the $24 rate was about as fair as anything could be.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think it is safe to say that no pension at the rate of $50 a month has ever been allowed unless the soldier was already drawing a pension of a smaller amount.

Mr. JONES. Oh, certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. We allow $50 sometimes, but in no case unless the claimant requires constant attendance and can not take care of himself.

Mr. JONES. Of course I know that that is the rule of the committee, but I did not know that it was always followed. While I do not say this committee has done it, I know of one instance myself where the man is going along just as lively as can be; he has disabilities, and so on, but he is getting $50 a month by special legislation. Every Senator knows of such cases.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know what the testimony was before the committee?

Mr. JONES. No; but I know the condition myself. I hope this amendment will be rejected.

Mr. SHIVELY. That never occurs in a case where the applicant is ineligible to any pension at all under the general laws.

Mr. JONES. Oh, no; I do not contend that he was ineligible to any pension; but I contend that under the facts, both physical and financial, the actual condition was not nearly so bad as this.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was precisely the suggestion I made—that in those cases the soldiers were already drawing small pensions because of disability, and they were increased to $50.

Mr. JONES. That is probably true.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I hope very much the committee amendment in this instance will be rejected. I think it ought to be. I feel very earnestly and keenly about the merits and the right of this matter.

I am personally acquainted with Col. McDowell. He is a southerner and a friend of mine, born and reared in Kentucky. For a number of years he lived in Montana. He lived in my home town, where he was my neighbor, and from there he moved to the State of Washington, where he has lived for a number of years. He is a high-minded, honorable gentleman and patriotic citizen of fine qualities, as is illustrated, I believe, by the caution, even the timidity I might say, with which he makes out his own case. He shows a scrupulousness, a care, a caution in making any representations in his own favor that is refreshing and that is not often met with in pension matters, I believe. He manifests a very strong feeling that he would rather do without any pension than to err in the slightest degree, even a hair's breadth, in his own favor in an attempt to procure one.

Col. McDowell is now 75 years old, a very high-minded, honorable, and patriotic citizen, a thorough gentleman, who is a credit to his country and to every State and community in which he has ever lived. He is a man who is thoroughly honest, whose reputation, integrity, standing, and character are above the shadow of suspicion with anybody who knows him. He fought bravely for his country. Now he is 75 years old; rich in honor, but poor in this world's goods. Manifestly on account of age he is incapable of any physical labor or of doing anything for himself by which to earn a living. At his advanced age a man has no earning capacity.

I believe the House report in this case is meritorious. It is in his favor. Here you have two different reports before you—the report of the House committee, recommending a pension of $24 a month, and the report of the Senate committee, recommending that the item be stricken out and that this good man be given nothing.

Here are the verdicts of two juries, you might say, which have passed on the case—one in favor of and another against the allowance. Now, which are you going to adopt—the one that leans in favor of the old soldier, the one that is lenient with the old soldier, the one that is generous to the old soldier, or the one which is, I think, harsh, strict, and technical? To whom are you going to give the benefit of the doubt, if you have any doubt about it? Are you going to give it to this old man who shouldered his gun and served his country in its hour of peril, its time of need? And it needed men just as much in the Spanish-American War as it did during the dreadful Civil War. Which way are you going to lean if you are in doubt? I say, lean to the man who carried the gun. Lean to the old soldier. Lean to the man who fought for you and me and for our honor. I would rather err a little in favor of many old soldiers than to run any risk of doing an injustice to one of them.

I think the House report is sufficient for the Senate to follow in this case, without any reflection, of course, upon our own committee. I know our own committee is honest and scrupulous about this matter, and it has so many of these cases to deal with that it must be cautious; but I think its members sometimes, like other human beings, run a little risk of doing an injustice to somebody and sometimes may err.

The House report, after reviewing all the evidence, concludes:

> That the soldier is 75 years of age; feeble and infirm in health, and unable to perform any manual labor, and is now without means; possesses no property of any kind; and that he had an honorable service in the Confederate Army, and afterwards in the United States Army during the War with Spain.
> From the evidence submitted in this case it is believed that a pension of $24 per month is fully warranted, and it is so recommended.

In regard to whether or not Col. McDowell can trace his present disabilities to service in the Army, he says, honestly and frankly, that he is not able to swear that his present disabilities originated from his service in the Army. Well, what honest man could so swear, unless he is a physician and judges from a medical standpoint? Of course he does not know from what those disabilities originated, but he does say in his testimony that he suffered from these same disabilities for a time during his service in the Army, and then they disappeared. Now, after a lapse of some years, they have returned, and who is there that can say they did not originate in the service? He had the same affliction while he was serving in the Army and it disappeared for a time. He was younger then and abler to recuperate, but after a lapse of some years they returned. It seems to me it is very reasonable to believe that they originated during his Spanish-American War service. Indeed, there is evidence to that effect.

In addition to what I have quoted, the House report says:

> There is filed a certificate of the United States surgeon of the transport vessel upon which the soldier served, in which it is set forth that the soldier was under this surgeon's professional care and treatment for several weeks during March, 1901, during service, suffering from gastric irritation and intestinal indigestion to an extent to sensibly impair his health and strength. The surgeon states that, in his opinion, these disabilities were due to the long service of the soldier upon transports and thus being exposed to contrasts of temperature met with between New York and the West Indies. Much of the soldier's service was rendered upon transports upon these waters.

There is the evidence of an Army surgeon that he did contract the disability during his Spanish-American War service. We can not say that there is no evidence that he contracted the disability during that service. There is such evidence. It is uncontroverted. It is not denied. There is nothing to the contrary, and it seems to me that it is amply sufficient.

We hear a great deal nowadays about sinking the differences between the North and the South, wiping them out, overlooking former differences, putting all on the same footing, and all rallying about the Old Flag; and we hear much about the patriotism of the South in these days when the bloody differences of the gory past are supposed to have been wiped out. Now, here is a concrete example of it, a noble example. Here is a man who was born and raised in Kentucky, who lived in the South until the Civil War broke out, who enlisted in the Confederate Army, who followed valorously the varying fortunes of the stars and bars, who fought bravely, honorably, and efficiently as a valiant soldier and good man for the lost cause until its starry banner drooped in defeat. He would not do otherwise, I know, wherever his lot and fortunes might be cast. He fought for the right as he saw it and, in good faith, surrendered when his cause was lost. After that, when the reunited country had a war with Spain, although that man, that gallant ex-Confederate, must have been 59 years of age at the time, he responded to the call of his country, shouldered his musket, and entered the United States Army as a volunteer and served his country in its hour of need with the same courage, gallantry, and devotion as he served the Confederacy—served his country when it needed help just as much as it did during the dark days of the Civil War. Think of it! An ex-Confederate, 59 years of age, shouldering a musket and rushing to the defense of his endangered country at the first bugle call.

Here is a chance to show that this country is reunited in spirit as well as in name, in patriotism as well as in fact; that all differences have been sunken. Do you know of a nobler instance? Do you know of a better chance? This is a chance to recognize in a feeble way the well-known and spendid patriotism, the devoted loyalty, which the South feels to-day toward the Old Flag—patriotism and loyalty not surpassed in any section of this broad country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It stirs my heart with pride to think of it. I think here is a splendid chance to illustrate the generous feelings of our Government for its late foes who wore the gray. It is an extraordinary opportunity, as this old Confederate soldier has shown that he has a patriotism, a loyalty, a devotion for the common country and the Old Flag which respond to the call of his country whenever it is in the hour of danger and dire distress, and which age can not dim nor time quench. His patriotism, loyalty, and devotion to country burn as brightly to-day in his heart, beat as strongly in his breast, as did the ardor of youth course in his veins when in his young manhood he cast his fortunes with the rising star of the southern Confederacy. Can you think of it without a thrill of pride?

I think, under all the circumstances, with great kindness of feeling for the Senate committee, which is doing its duty as it sees it, that this committee amendment ought to be rejected, and I hope it will be. Vote it down and you will reward an honorable man for valiant service to his country in the hour of need. I believe you will. I believe you are going to give an illustration of the fact that all differences between the North and the South are wiped out, and of the generous feelings of the National Government toward its late foes of the South. I hope the committee amendment will be defeated. I appeal to you to defeat it.

As the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has well said, I am satisfied that there are plenty of men on the pension rolls to-day drawing pensions who are no more entitled and not as much entitled to them as is Col. McDowell. As a matter of course, if he were able to go before the Pension Bureau and offer a complete and unbroken chain of evidence, according to the rules of law, he would not be here asking a pension. He would have filed his application for pension, in that event, with the Pension Bureau, and it would have been awarded to him; but according to my understanding these special pension bills are intended to supply the lack of evidence in just such cases as is this; where there is some weakness or defect in the strict, rigid requirements of the pension laws, but where there is evidently merit, justice, and right in the claim, and when, upon the whole record, the applicant is manifestly worthy and deserving of recognition. Let us recognize this old soldier. Let us remember him kindly in his old age. He remembered us in his advanced years; remembered the honor of his country, the glory of the Old Flag; remembered patriotism and loyalty with an undying devotion, when he, an old man, marched to the front with strong young men and endured privation, hardship, exposure, disease, pestilence, and the enemy's bullets, in order to show that the heart of the old South beats true to the Union and can be depended upon in any emergency. He served us well. He deserves well of us.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the noes seem to have it.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the amendment may be again submitted to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the noes seem to have it. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 21, after the word "Mexico," to insert "and dependent mother of James L. Parris, late of Company H, Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry," and, in line 24, before the words "per month," to strike out "$30" and insert "$24," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Parmelia R. Parris, widow of Bennett Parris, late of Company D, First Regiment United States Dragoons, War with Mexico, and dependent mother of James L. Parris, late of Company H, Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 11, before the words "per month," to strike out "$24" and insert "$20," so as to make the clause read:

The name of James M. Pauley, late of Company M, Nineteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 13, before the word "Infantry," to strike out "Volunteer," so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 6, to strike out:

The name of William Feavel, late of Company E, Fourth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 13, to strike out:

The name of Edward C. Franklin, late of band, Company L, First Regiment Delaware Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 5, after line 17, to strike out:

The name of Emma J. Crocker, widow of Frank H. Crocker, late of the United States Navy, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of each of two minor children until they reach the age of 16 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 4, before the word "Infantry," to strike out "Volunteer," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Crowell Lisenby, late of Company G, Third Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 19, before the words "per month," to strike out "$24" and insert "$20," so as to make the clause read:

The name of John D. Ashley, late of Troop A, Second United States Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 23, after the word "additional," to strike out "for each minor child until it reaches the age of 16 years" and insert "on account of each of the minor children of the said Fred L. Fox until they reach the age of 16 years," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Emma Fox, widow of Fred L. Fox, late of Troop F, Seventh Regiment United States Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and $2 pre month additional on account of each of the minor children of the said Fred L. Fox until they reach the age of 16 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 15, to strike out:

The name of Marian E. Keyes, widow of Charles H. Keyes, late of the United States Marine Corps, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and $2 per month additional for each of the two minor children until they reach the age of 16 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 22, before the word "Infantry," to insert "Volunteer," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Andrew J. Wallace, late of Company G, Sixth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 13, before the word "pension," to strike out "special," so as to make the clause read:

The name of George B. Weesner, late of Company D, Thirty-second Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 17, to strike out:

The name of John Hodges, late of Company B, First Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 8, before the word "Infantry," to strike out "Volunteer," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Wiley Gullett, late of Company F, Twenty-eighth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 17, before the words "per month," to strike out "$50" and insert "$12," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Martha R. Allwein, late nurse, Regular Establishment, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 1, after the word "additional," to strike out "for" and insert "on account of"; in line 2, before the word "minor," to strike out "two" and insert "the"; and in the same line, after the word "children," to insert "of said Frank Mihalak," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Catherean Mihalak, widow of Frank Mihalak, late of Company M, Fifth Regiment United States Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of said Frank Mihalak until they reach the age of 16 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 6, before the words "per month," to strike out "$24" and insert "$12," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Pawil Wiczias, late of Companies D and C, Twenty-first Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. DU PONT. I ask the Senate to return to the bill (S. 5501) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The bill was reconsidered and passed over with the understanding that it would be called up later.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. DU PONT. On page 2, line 1, before the words "per month," I move to strike out "$50" and insert "$75," so as to read "$75 per month." This is to increase the pension of Mrs. Harriet P. Porter to $75 per month.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. DU PONT. I should like to say that I think this is a highly deserving case, and I can do no better than read a few extracts from Mrs. Porter's memorial.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Nevada agree to a proposition I am about to submit? It is that the unfinished business be laid aside for half an hour to enable us to complete the pension bills.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have no objection to that course, if it is agreeable to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], who is to speak next upon the pending bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I will appeal to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand that the request is to lay aside the commission bill for half an hour.

Mr. GALLINGER. If we can complete the pension bills during that time.

Mr. CUMMINS. Or to complete the calendar, so far as pension bills are concerned.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very willing to agree to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. It may take a little over half an hour, but we will expedite it.

Mr. SMOOT. There are only eight more of these pension bills, I will state.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall not put any limit on it, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for half an hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the unfinished business will be laid aside for 30 minutes.

Mr. GALLINGER. More or less.

The VICE PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent, the consideration of the pension bills is resumed, and the Senator from Delaware has the floor.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I think this is a highly deserving case. Mrs. Porter is a lady of advanced years, and with a total income on which to support herself and her daughter of $250 a year. She is the widow of Maj. Gen. Fitz John Porter, and it seems to me, on account of the services of her husband, that she has a special claim to the consideration of the Senate.

In the Mexican War Gen. Porter was wounded in a desperate assault upon the Belen Gate of the City of Mexico, the two other officers of his battery having been killed and 27 out of the 30 enlisted men of the battery having been killed or wounded. Of those who made the assault, only 3 came off unharmed, and he was one of those wounded.

During the Civil War he rendered conspicuous services on many occasions, and was most unjustly discharged from the service. He was reinstated with honor after an investigation. The board of inquiry stated that in their opinion "justice requires at his hands"—the hands of the President—"such action as may be necessary to annul and set aside the findings and sentence of the court-martial in the case of Maj. Gen. Fitz John Porter, and restore him to the positions of which that sentence deprived him, such restoration to take effect from the date of his dismissal from the service."

He was restored, but restored without any back pay. Upon his complete vindication and restoration to the Army Gen. Porter did not receive the back pay and emoluments, amounting to $97,310.18, to which he would have been entitled had he not been most unjustly deprived of his commission, and which he should have received under every principle of justice and equity and in conformity with the precedents established in several analogous cases.

This constitutes another strong ground, I think, why Mrs. Porter's pension should be increased from $50 to $75, and therefore I have moved the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on a former occasion when a similar bill was before the Senate I called attention to the fact that there was great prejudice in my State against Gen. Porter at the time he was dismissed. It was an intense prejudice, but a colleague of mine in the other House, Martin A. Haynes, during the Fiftieth Congress, who served under Gen. Porter, made a speech in that body which completely convinced me that the dismissal was an act of absolute injustice.

As the Senator from Delaware has said, Gen. Porter lost $97,000 because of his dismissal. That amount ought to have been paid to him when he was reinstated in the service. The change of opinion regarding Gen. Porter in New Hampshire is so pronounced that a monument has been erected in Portsmouth to his memory, and so far as I know the feeling that he had not done his full duty as a soldier has absolutely disappeared from the minds of our people.

Mrs. Porter is reduced in circumstances to the extent that she has an income of $250 a year, and she has a daughter somewhat dependent upon her. Heaven only knows how she lives. I will be glad if the Senate will permit this pension to be increased to $75 per month, and let it go to conference for more deliberate consideration than we can give it to-day.

There are not any other things I would say except that I want to have all these pension bills acted upon to-day, if possible. I will content myself with simply expressing a hope that the Senate will agree to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware. It is but an act of simple justice—a totally inadequate recognition when we consider the great services Gen. Porter rendered the Government.

Mr. THOMAS. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMOOT in the chair). The amendment proposes to increase the pension of Mrs. Harriet Pierson Porter, the widow of Gen. Fitz John Porter, from $50 to $75 per month. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Edwin P. Kyle, late of Company C, Fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 13044) to pension widows and minor and helpless children of officers and enlisted men who served during the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection or in China, between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 1, line 7, after the word "insurrection," to strike out "or in China," in line 9, after the word "inclusive," to strike out "service to be computed from date of enlistment to date of discharge, including all furloughs," so as to read:

That from and after the passage of this act if any officer or enlisted man who served 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, either as a regular or volunteer, during the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection, between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, inclusive, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, has died or shall hereafter die leaving a widow, without means of support other than her daily labor, and an actual net income not exceeding $250 per year, or leaving a minor child or children under the age of 16 years, such widow shall, upon due proof of her husband's death, without proving his death to be the result of his Army or Navy service, be placed on the pension roll from the date of the filing of her application therefor under this act, at the rate of $12 per month during her widowhood, and shall also be paid $2 per month for each child of such officer or enlisted man under 16 years of age, and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow, leaving a child or children of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, such pension shall be paid such child or children until the age of 16.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to inquire whether the unfinished business of the Senate has been laid before it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business has been temporarily laid aside for 30 minutes. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 3, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. That if any officer or enlisted man who served 90 days or more in the Army or Navy of the United States during the late Civil War and who has been honorably discharged therefrom has died or shall hereafter die, leaving a widow, such widow shall, upon due proof of her husband's death, without proving his death to be the result of his Army or Navy service, be placed upon the pension roll from the date of the filing of her application therefor under this act at the rate of $12 per month during her widowhood: Provided, That said widow shall have married said soldier or sailor prior to the passage and approval of this act; and the benefits of this section shall include those widows whose husbands, if living, would have a pensionable status under the joint resolutions of February 15, 1895, July 1, 1902, and June 28, 1906

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I wish to offer an amendment to come in as a new section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After line 6, on page 4, insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 4. That every widow who is now receiving or may hereafter be entitled to a pension under present laws of less than $20 per month by reason of the Civil War shall, upon due proof that she was the wife of a soldier at any time during said war and continued his wife until his death, be entitled to a pension of $20 per month, the same to begin from the date of filing her application under the provisions of this act.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire whether that removes the limitation which the general law now imposes, which, I think, requires the marriage to have taken place prior to a certain time in 1890?

Mr. JONES. This simply covers a case where the widow was the wife of a soldier during the Civil War. The amendment of the committee which has been adopted covers the point the Senator inquires about.

Mr. THOMAS. There is a general statute which now covers this class of cases.

Mr. JONES. They all get the same pensions. This gives to the widows who were wives of soldiers during the war $20 instead of $12. I think the amendment just adopted covers the point the Senator has in mind. The committee have reported an amendment which removes the limitation of 1890. The amendment which I have offered is a recognition to a woman who was the wife of a soldier while the war was on in her own right and gives her a little larger pension than the ordinary widow of a soldier.

Mr. THOMAS. Do I understand the Senator's construction of the amendment adopted by the committee to be, in substance, that it would cover this case, for instance, that if a pensioner should marry to-day and should die next week the wife of that pensioner would have a pensionable status?

Mr. JONES. That is the effect of the committee amendment, I understand.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee if that is the effect of the amendment?

Mr. SHIVELY. To what class of widows does the Senator refer?

Mr. THOMAS. I am referring to widows of the soldiers of the Civil War.

Mr. SHIVELY. Any widow who married the soldier prior to the passage of this bill becomes pensionable.

Mr. THOMAS. And it removes the restriction of the old law which requires a widow to have married prior to 1890?

Mr. SHIVELY. This bill employs substantially the same language as the act of 1890 and will apply to marriages prior to the passage of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. At what time does the marriage of the widow have to take place to obtain a pensionable status?

Mr. SHIVELY. Prior to the passage of this bill.

Mr. THOMAS. This bill has not passed.

Mr. SHIVELY. At present she must have married the soldier prior to June 27, 1890. To change that date is the substance and purpose of the amendment. For instance, a widow is now eligible to a pension if she married the soldier prior to June 27, 1890.

Mr. THOMAS. Under this bill the widows of all soldiers who have married since June, 1890, will be placed upon the pension rolls.

Mr. SHIVELY. They become eligible to the pension prescribed in the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Can the Senator inform me to what extent that will increase our pension expenditures?

Mr. SHIVELY. The estimate of the expense is incorporated in the report and——

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. THOMAS. In just a moment. I have asked a question.

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. THOMAS Will the Senator permit me to get this information?

Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator will find a communication on page 3 of the report signed by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, in which he estimates the total for widows of soldiers of the Spanish-American War and the new class of widows of the Civil War to be $7,500,000 per annum.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, what was the unanimous-consent agreement under which this pension bill is being considered? Did it include a general pension bill or only private pension bills?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request was for the consideration of the pension bills on the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. BRYAN. Is it too late to object to the consideration of this bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is too late at the present time.

Mr. SHIVELY. Let me make a suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Florida that the unfinished business was temporarily laid aside for 30 minutes beginning at 2 minutes past 2.

Mr. SHIVELY. It seems manifest that this bill will provoke more or less debate and take time. Only a few minutes remain under the unanimous consent to consider pension bills. It is hoped that all the private pension bills on the calendar may be disposed of to-day. Therefore, for the purpose of facilitating the passage of the bills which do not provoke extended debate, I ask that for the present this bill may be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the pending bill be passed over for the present. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES. I understand that my amendment will be pending when it comes up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When the bill again comes before the Senate the Senator's amendment will be pending. The Chair hears no objection, and the next pension bill will be presented to the Senate.

Mr. BRYAN. Was Order of Business 209 taken up and considered under the unanimous-consent agreement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Chair will state to the Senator from Florida that Order of Business 209 was not brought to the attention of the Senate. That is the bill to create in the War Department and Navy Department, respectively, a roll to be designated as "the Civil War Volunteer officers' retired list."

Mr. GALLINGER. That was not considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That bill was not considered.

Mr. BRYAN. I am surprised that this Calendar No. 494 would be undertaken to be considered when the unanimous consent was to consider private pension bills. Of course, the Senator from Indiana knows, or ought to know, that this bill can not be considered by any unanimous consent within any two hours.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator that the bill has been temporarily laid aside by unanimous consent. The next pension bill on the calendar will be proceeded with.

The bill (H. R. 14738) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 1, to strike out lines 6 to 9, in the following words:

The name of Catherine Beard, widow of Archibald Beard, late of Company A, Fifty-second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 23, before the words "per month," to strike out "$24" and insert "$20," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Amy Day, widow of Leronza Day, late of Company F, One hundred and twenty-fifth Regiment United States Colored Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY. On page 3, line 12, after the word "late," I move to strike out "of Anderson Troop" and insert "lieutenant colonel," so as to read:

The name of Margaret Spencer, widow of William Spencer, late lieutenant colonel Fifteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 18, before the word "widow," to insert "former," and in line 20, before the word "Militia," to insert "State," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Julia Derigne, former widow of Robert T. Derigne, late of Company C, Second Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 2, before the word "widow," to strike out the name "Anna E. Seaman" and insert "Hannah E. Seamans," and in the same line, after the name "John," to strike out "Seaman" and insert "Seamans, jr.," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Hannah E. Seamans, widow of John Seamans, jr., late of Company D, One hundred and thirty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 7, before the word "principal," to insert "late," and in the same line, after the word "musician," to strike out "late of," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Mary J. Smith, now Simpson, former widow of Mighill S. Smith, late principal musician, Thirty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 3, before the words "per month," to strike out "$24" and insert "$30," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Alvah Withee, late of Company H, Fifth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 7, before the word "Regiment," to strike out "forty-eighth" and insert "forty-ninth," and in the same line, before the word "Volunteer," to strike out "Ohio" and insert "Pennsylvania," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Mary L. McEntire, widow of Thomas McEntire, late of Company H, One hundred and forty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 11, before the words "per month," to strike out "$30" and insert "$36," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Thomas McCafferty, late of Company G, Fifty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY. On page 10, line 10, I move to strike out the word "Infantry" after the word "Volunteer" and insert the word "Cavalry."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 5, after the name "Washington," to strike out "Bentley" and insert "Bently," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Washington Bently, late of Company E, Twenty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 16, to strike out:

The name of Anna Webber, widow of Frederick Webber, late of Company A, Sixteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 23, to strike out:

The name of Rufus H. Hopkins, late of Company F, Seventeenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY. On page 13, line 15, after the word "Joseph," I move to insert the initial "P," so as to read.

The name of Agnes Clark, widow of Joseph P. Clark, late of Company E, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 1, before the word "late," to strike out the name "Hilbert" and insert the name "Hilfert," and in line 2, before the word "unassigned," to strike out "of Company ——," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Charles H. Hilfert, late unassigned, Third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. SHIVELY. On page 14, line 3, after the word "Infantry," I move to insert "and Company D, Twenty-first Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 1, before the word "Infantry," to insert "Volunteer," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Sarah Jane Nelson, widow of Thomas Nelson, late of Company G, Second Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY. On page 16, line 8, after the word "William," I move to strike out the initial "J" and insert the initial "C," so as to read "William C. Narron."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 22, after the words "per month," to strike out "in lieu of that she is now receiving," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Augusta Hendricks, former widow of John C. Eames, late of Company B, Twenty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY. On page 18, line 20, after the word "Volunteer," I move to strike out "Light" and insert the word "Heavy," so as to read:

The name of Sara A. Call, widow of Robert P. Call, late of Company D, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY. On page 20, line 4, after the word "Company," I move to strike out the initial "D" and insert the initial "B," so as to read:

The name of Alice E. Keating, widow of John Keating, late of Company B, Eighteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The name of John O. Drawbaugh, late of Company B, Sixty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY. On page 31, line 3, after the word "Company," I move to strike out the initial "D" and to insert in lieu thereof the initial "E."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 31, line 17, before the words "per month," to strike out "$30" and insert "$40," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Quincy A. Seibold, late of Company C, One hundredth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read a third time and passed.

The bill (S. 5899) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. Carlton Meredith, late of Companies B and K, Eleventh Regiment United States Infantry, $10 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

Mr. HUGHES. Before the Senate proceeds to the consideration of that bill, I wish to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from New Jersey that we are now working under a unanimous-consent agreement. The bill that is now before the Senate——

WILLIAM CRONLEY.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5731) for the relief of William Cronly. It will not take any time. If there is any objection to the bill, I will withdraw the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUGHES. It is a bill to correct a military record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the bill by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5731) for the relief of William Cronly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. THOMAS. Has that bill been referred to any committee?

Mr. HUGHES. It has been referred to a committee and unanimously reported. It is my opinion that it is a very worthy case.

Mr. THOMAS. To what committee has the bill been referred?

Mr. HUGHES. To the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from New Jersey that the bill states upon its face that it was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HUGHES. That was an improper reference, and the Chair has not before him the proper copy of the bill. That was merely one which was in my files. The report shows that the bill was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and reported by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. GALLINGER. Bills to correct military records are always referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, or they should properly be so referred.

Mr. HUGHES. I repeat that this is a very worthy case.

Mr. THOMAS. Is the bill upon the calendar?

Mr. HUGHES. It is upon the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, William Cronly shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private in the general mounted service, United States Army, on the 6th of July, 1865, but no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. HUGHES. On page 1, line 5, I move to strike out the name "Cronly" and to insert the name "Cronley."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; read the third time.

The title was amended so as to read "A bill for the relief of William Cronley."

RACHEL E. DANGERFIELD BOAST.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of House bill No. 16192, which will not take a minute. It is a case where a woman acquired a homestead, and after acquiring the homestead she married an alien.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the consideration of the bill will lead to no debate, I will yield; but this is the last time I shall yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There can not be any debate on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 16192) to authorize the issuance of patent to Rachel E. Dangerfield Boast for the southeast quarter of section 21 and the northeast quarter of section 28, township 1 south, range 57 west of the sixth principal meridian.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agrees to the same; insists upon its amendment to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1; further insists upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30; asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, and Mr. GOOD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 43, 47, 48, 76, 218, 219, and 220.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 28, 29, 78, 79, 176, 177, and 234, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$61,420"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 85: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, and 121: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, and 121, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"Mint at Carson, Nev.: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800; assistant assayer, $1,200; chief clerk, $1,200; in all, $4,200.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $2,000.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, $1,000.

"Assay office at Boise, Idaho: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800; assistant assayer, $1,200; chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $1,200; in all, $4,200.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $2,000.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, $1,000.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 212: That the House recede from its amendment to the amendment of the Senate numbered 212, and agree to the said Senate amendment.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and on the amendments of the Senate numbered 20 and 30.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOSEPH F. JOHNSON,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
JAMES W. GOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the chairman of the Appropriations Committee advise us as to the nature of the points in disagreement between the Senate and the House conferees?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the only difference now is in respect to the mileage of Senators and Members of the House. All other matters of difference have been agreed upon.

Mr. SHEPPARD. What is the position of the House in regard to that matter?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The House have proposed to limit the mileage of Senators to 5 cents a mile and have adhered to their provision that as to Members of the House of Representatives they shall receive actual expenses for themselves, the members of their families, and dependents.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate concur in the House provision.

Mr. THOMAS. I move to lay the motion on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. Sheppard].

Mr. SHEPPARD. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. A point of order, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas will state his point of order.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, there is no such amendment in dispute as between the two Houses. It is a mere proposition on the part of the House conferees to make that the basis of adjustment as between the two Houses. There is no amendment in the bill that provides for any such thing. The House in directing its conferees by a vote directed them to accept a proposition of that kind if it could be accepted. It never has been submitted in a legislative way to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas raise the point of order against the motion?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I raise the point of order that the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] is not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the conferees on the part of the Senate be directed to accept the proposition of the House of Representatives as to mileage.

Mr. THOMAS. I move to lay the motion on the table.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate still further insist upon its amendments, agree to the further conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. WARREN conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMOOT in the chair). The Senator from Washington suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hollis	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Bryan	Hughes	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Burton	James	Newlands	Smoot
Catron	Jones	Norris	Swanson
Chamberlain	Kenyon	O'Gorman	Thomas
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Overman	Walsh
Crawford	Lane	Page	Weeks
Cummins	Lea, Tenn.	Shafroth	White
Dillingham	Lee, Md.	Sheppard
Gallinger	McCumber	Shively
Goff	Martine, N. J.	Simmons

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST], on account of illness. This announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMOOT). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is unavoidably absent from the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is detained from the Chamber on account of sickness. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-one Senators having answered to the roll call, a quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. SAULSBURY, Mr. STONE, Mr. THOMPSON, and Mr. WARREN answered to their names.

Mr. BRADY, Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. CLAPP, Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. RANSDELL, and Mr. WORKS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. HOLLIS. I desire to place in the RECORD an article from the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin, of New York, of Monday, June 29, 1914, which bears upon the pending discussion. It is by W. H. Ingersoll, one of the managers of the Ingersoll Watch Co. I will read the headlines and then ask that the article be placed in the RECORD:

Business men resent brand of "knocker"—Claim they do not oppose reasonable trade laws—W. H. Ingersoll outlines ideas of Fair Trade League on proposed Federal trade commission bill—Proposition based on unfair competition regulations that succeed in Germany.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The article referred to is as follows:

"I believe that it is unfair to the great body of business men of this country to have the impression spread that they are unintelligently opposed to any legislation affecting business," declared William H. Ingersoll, of the American Fair Trade League, in a circular letter referring to the popular impressions surrounding the efforts of certain mercantile interests to have fair trade laws enacted by Congress.

"Let us show the President, Congress, and the country that the opposition of the majority of business men is raised only against such legislation as their first-hand commercial experience shows them to be unworthy, and that when a good bill is thought out, we are capable of recognizing it, and for the good of the country are ready to work for its promotion."

Continuing, Mr. Ingersoll argues interestingly in favor of the Federal trade commission bill, in part as follows:

"Such a bill, it appears to me, is found in the Federal trade commission act, which really ought to be called the Federal unfair competition act. The pith of the bill that I refer to is compressed into two short sentences, as follows:

"(a) That unfair competition in commerce is hereby declared unlawful.

"(b) The commission is hereby empowered and directed to prevent corporations from using unfair methods of competition in commerce."

"The Federal trade commission bill does not attempt to make impossible definitions that were undertaken in the original tentative House bills. Congress and the country at large will be satisfied if this bill is passed, and we will be relieved of the destructive provisions embodied in the Clayton bill which intended to cover similar ground, but which, by specific definitions, were under some circumstances unfair though under other circumstances entirely proper and warranted.

"The proposed act which I advocate is substantially like the unfair competition law of Germany, which has been tested and found to be a bulwark for sound trade practices. It is something that we have needed in this country for years and it is all that we need at present along this line. It is stated in the newspapers, and with apparent authority, that the administration has become convinced that this act now before the Senate is preferable to the legislation which passed the House and which will be discarded in favor of this new Federal trade commission bill if it is received well by the business interests of the country.

"I do not blindly follow the ideas of this or any other administration, but I do believe that as business men and citizens it behooves us to show our appreciation of the anxiety and desire on the part of the President to discard certain provisions which were reported by the Judiciary Committee of the House and passed by the House of Representatives.

"The other provisions of the bill, in addition to the inclosed sections, cover the creation and establishment of the Federal trade commission, gives it the same powers of investigation which the Bureau of Corporations now possesses, one very important point being that we not only have a law against unfair competition, which can be prohibited by the commission after it has investigated the conditions, but if any business house considers that the commission is mistaken it can continue its practices, and the commission must then bring the matter before the court, which is a double safeguard against precipitate or unwarranted action by the commission.

"There is an important public consideration in the fact that the expense of all proceedings for the determination and prevention of unfair competition will be necessarily borne by the Government in giving full control and power to act in the premises to the proposed Federal trade commission. This can not fail to prove a real benefaction to the manufacturer or merchant of limited resources who suffer from the predatory practices of unfair competitors.

"Having studied the subject of unfair competition at some length, I feel it my duty to call attention to the proposed act and to advocate it as widely as possible."

Mr. CUMMINS. I have long been convinced, Mr. President, that the successful regulation of the commerce of the United States involved the employment of a legislative trade tribunal or commission. We have already adopted that policy in so far as the common carriers are concerned. Our experience with the Interstate Commerce Commission has, I think, been a happy one, and its work has inspired for it the confidence of the thinking people of the United States. I believe that a trade tribunal, with proper jurisdiction and power to assist in the administration of the law respecting general industry, will be found as helpful in that field as the Interstate Commerce Commission has been found in the field of transportation. I am, therefore, thoroughly and heartily in favor of this bill.

I have sometimes doubted whether we are warranted in creating a commission of the kind provided for in the bill without investing it with greater and more comprehensive powers than this particular measure confers upon it; and I intend before a vote is had to present certain amendments which will very greatly increase its power and, as I believe, its usefulness. I had it in mind to confine my observations upon this occasion to these amendments, which will presently be offered, but the course of the debate up to this time has led me to somewhat broaden the scope of my remarks, and I intend to consider, briefly if I can, the general subject upon which we have entered.

The people of the United States produce more, consume more, and distribute more than the people of any other nation upon the face of the earth. The internal commerce of the people of this country is, I have been informed, largely more than the internal commerce of any other two countries in the world, and of the internal commerce 90 per cent or more is either directly commerce between the States or it is so associated with commerce among the States that it falls under the jurisdiction of Congress. When, therefore, Congress attempts to regulate commerce among the States, it is dealing with the greatest, the most complicated, and the most important subject concerning which Congress can employ its power.

I am one of the men who believe that the great majority of the business men of the United States are honest, law-abiding men. I believe that they desire to conduct their affairs with scrupulous regard for the rights of their fellow men; I believe that they have a sincere and earnest purpose to obey the law, and in that way perpetuate their right to be called law-abiding citizens. There are a few, and, comparatively, they are very few, who have used their great genius and the power which vast wealth has given them to oppress the people of the country by the use of means which are condemned by every right-thinking man, which are immoral in and of themselves, and which have always been held to be immoral since civilization reached its present high stage of development.

The difficulty is that many of the regulations of interstate commerce, if we accomplish what we want to accomplish, do not prohibit acts that are immoral in themselves. They prohibit relations and practices that have hitherto been considered as tolerable at least, civilized at least, in the great war for success, in the great battle of commerce.

We have adopted in this country the policy of competition. We are trying to preserve competition as a living, real force in our industrial life; that is to say, we are endeavoring to maintain among our business people that honorable rivalry which will prevent one from exacting undue profits from those who may deal with him because some one else, his competitor, will be willing to accept reasonable profits in the same business.

We are practically alone, however, in this policy. There is no other country that is endeavoring to preserve competition as we are trying to maintain it. England long ago became indifferent to it; and while that great country has not specifically adjusted her laws so as to permit monopoly they are so administered as to practically eliminate competition when the trade affected so desires. France has pursued a like course. Austria, Italy, Spain, Norway, Sweden, as well as Belgium, have all pursued the course of permitting combinations and relations which practically annihilate competition, and Germany, our most formidable rival, so far as commerce is concerned, not only authorizes by her law the formation of monopolies, the creation of combinations which restrain trade and which destroy competition, but oftentimes compels her people to enter into combinations which are in effect monopolies. We are, therefore, pursuing a course which rather distinguishes us from the remainder of the commercial world.

I pause here to say, and I say it emphatically and earnestly, that I believe in our course; I believe in the preservation of competition; I believe in the maintenance of the rule that opens the channels of trade fairly and fully to all comers. I believe it because it seems to me obvious that any other course must inevitably lead us into complete State socialism. The only monopoly which civilized mankind will ever permanently endure is the monopoly of all the people represented in the Government itself. I am reluctant to take even one step toward the confines of State socialism, and therefore for years I have been doing what little I could to keep alive the spirit of competition in our country which means individualism in business, individualism in society, individualism in every field in which energy and initiative are required.

I mention the economic policies of other countries simply to illustrate what I said a moment ago—that we are prohibiting our people from the performance of a great many acts; we are forbidding them to do a great many things that other countries not only do not forbid but actually favor; and I am suggesting it because when we do forbid those things we are regulating our commerce from the standpoint of a policy which seems to us good, which seems to me not only good but imperative, but which can be violated without any sense of moral wrong, without any consciousness of moral turpitude; and therefore a commission or a tribunal intended to aid in the administration of a rule which must necessarily be somewhat vague and uncertain becomes not only desirable but, as I think, required by an ordinary regard for the rights of mankind.

In furtherance of the policy which I have just mentioned—namely, the policy of competition and the regulation of commerce in accordance with that rule—Congress has passed many statutes. There are, however, two which are prominent above all others, and which constitute, in effect, the code of the United States for the regulation of our commerce.

The first of these statutes is the interstate commerce law adopted in 1887. The spirit of the interstate-commerce law is competition without discrimination. The prohibition against discrimination is obviously a limitation upon the former field of competition. Nevertheless, the object of the interstate-commerce law is not, as some people have suggested, to destroy competition among railway companies or common-carrier companies, but to preserve that competition, subject to the single limitation that the rates and charges and practices of the common carriers must be without discrimination.

The second statute to which I have referred, and which just now commands the chief concern of the people, is the antitrust law adopted by Congress in 1890. The one purpose and object of the antitrust law was and is to preserve, maintain, and secure full, free, fair competition in commerce, not only among the States, but with foreign nations. There is no exception to the statement I have just made.

I should not have referred to these two landmarks in our endeavor to regulate commerce had it not been for the suggestion made by my friend from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], that the effect of the bill now before the Senate would be to encourage combinations and monopolies, and to make weak the competition intended to be sustained by the antitrust law. On the contrary, Mr. President, every line and letter of the bill before the Senate is intended to strengthen the antitrust law. It is intended to enforce still more effectually the principle of the antitrust law. There is not to be found in this bill, from the beginning to the end, the thought that any concert or combination destructive of free, full competition should be permitted to exist.

I think the Senator from Idaho has misapprehended the purpose of the bill, as I am sure he is mistaken with regard to the effect of the bill; and I shall consider its provisions a little more carefully later on.

The antitrust act has played a most important part in our industrial life during the 24 years since its enactment. It is not without significance, and I will leave some other Senator to explain why it is that every great monopoly or combination that is now in existence, every great monopoly or combination against which the court has turned its processes in the last 15 years, has been formed since the enactment of the antitrust law in 1890. I do not believe a single one can be instanced that has not come into being since this statute became the law of the land.

Mr. President, it can not be assumed that men of affairs, men of responsibility, organize these combinations and these monopolies in order to invite the penalties of the antitrust law. That is so incredible that I can not entertain it for a moment. The truth is, and we might as well face it, that when the statute was passed no one knew what the words "restraint of trade or commerce" meant, as applied to our immense affairs. These words had been subjected to judicial inquiry, they had been judicially applied, but never to accomplish the purposes which we desired to accomplish when we passed the law and adopted the policy of competition. The meaning of these words is a matter of growth during 20 years, and they are still to a degree uncertain and doubtful. I believe the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States concerning this statute are as illuminating and as clear as any decisions which can be found in all the reports of that tribunal, but we do not know yet what these words mean; and I will put an example:

Suppose there are 12 industries engaged in the same business, and of substantially the same magnitude. Suppose that one of them buys five of the others, so that after the transaction is completed there are six industries where before there were 12, and that the volume of the business of the six is as great as or greater than the volume of the business done by the 12. I am assuming now that there is nothing connected with the transaction in the nature of unfair practice, unfair competition, or any other vicious mode of conducting trade. I should like to know whether that transaction constitutes a violation of the antitrust law. There is not a lawyer in the land who can do more than simply to express his own opinion; and there is no lawyer who dares to say with any assurance whether the transaction I have just mentioned will be finally determined to be a violation of the antitrust law, or whether it will be adjudged to be a wholly innocent and harmless consolidation.

Take the case of the United States Steel Corporation, which, in 1901, 11 years after the antitrust law was passed, brought together practically 50 per cent of the business in that field, 50 per cent in value of the property used in doing the business. Now, assume that thereafter it had conducted itself fairly and properly, as it is alleged it has conducted itself. Who can say whether the consolidation of 50 per cent of the iron and steel trade in the hands of one corporation violated the statute against monopolies and restraints of trade?

I am sure that when this organization came together in 1901 it was advised by able and experienced counsel that the formation of the association, if it thereafter was conducted along proper lines, did not constitute a violation of the antitrust law.

Again, suppose—as has happened in this country, I think—that there is a combination of the buyers of copper. We export more copper than any other country in the world produces. I think we produce 65 per cent of all the copper produced in the world, and we export a very large part of it. Now, suppose the buyers of copper in Germany and France and England combine, as I think they have combined on more than one occasion, violating no law of their country, and present themselves to the United States as a single buyer. Tell me whether it would be contrary to the antitrust law for sellers in the United States to act in concert in order to meet that situation. I do not know, and I do not believe there is a single Senator here who knows.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator——

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. NELSON. I simply want to say that in that case, if the product were imported from abroad under such a trust arrangement as the Senator has described it would be subject to the antitrust law, as found in two of our tariff bills.

Mr. CUMMINS. Undoubtedly; but I was not speaking of imports from abroad. I was speaking of our own copper that we were selling for export and that was destined for other markets.

In mentioning these things I have not done so for the purpose of belittling the antitrust law, for I think it is probably the most important statute that has been adopted in the United States in more than a half century. I think it is important not only for the effect that it has produced in our industrial life but because it marked an era, because it proclaimed a policy, because it is a declaration of independence in trade and commerce. I mention these things in order to indicate how inevitable it is that we shall employ uncertain phrases in our legislation dealing with commerce. We could not have used better words than "restraint of trade or commerce," and they have accomplished vast good, notwthstanding the fact that they are uncertain, that their meaning must be groped for, and, in many instances, discovered after the long process of a judicial investigation.

There are a great many offenses that have been punished or rebuked under the antitrust law that were known to be offenses when committed. I agree with that. There is a zone of certainty where the conscience of man is sufficient to guide him. There is another zone—I am now speaking of the business field—in which it is entirely clear that a given act is not a violation of the antitrust law. Then there lies between these two zones the middle ground, the twilight zone, as suggested by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]; and no matter how much we may ridicule that phrase it is most expressive, and it describes an actual condition better, probably, than any other words that could be used. There is a broad twilight zone in the business of this country in which it is difficult to see whether a given act has been condemned by the law or whether it will be sustained by the law; but, nevertheless, we must not be discouraged with regard to the regulation of commerce. We must proceed along the pathway upon which we have set our feet. We must proceed in our effort to preserve independence in business, to keep the channels of commerce open and free, to maintain that equal opportunity in business declared by the antitrust law; and we must supplement this great statute with such legislation as from time to time our experience shows is necessary in order to make its principle effectual.

Three years ago and more there was a great deal of discussion with regard to the very subject that we now have under consideration. Thoughtful men all over the United States had reached the conclusion that if we would fully preserve competition there must be some addition to the antitrust law; its weaknesses must be strengthened and its processes must be made more certain and effective. You will all remember how widespread that discussion was; and you will not forget, either, the miscarriages of justice out of which the discussion arose.

It is sufficient to say that the agitation for additional legislation finally found its way into the Senate; and I want Senators, upon this side of the Chamber especially, to observe and to remember that the insistence upon additional legislation did not begin with the incoming of the present administration. The President of the United States had a forerunner in demanding supplemental legislation, or at least in inquiring whether it were not necessary. The junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], then the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, on the 7th day of July, 1911, introduced the following resolution, which was agreed to on July 26 of the same year:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce is hereby authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to inquire into and report to the Senate at the earliest date practicable what changes are necessary or desirable in the laws of the United States relating to the creation and control of corporations engaged in interstate commerce and what changes are necessary or desirable in the laws of the United States relating to persons or firms engaged in interstate commerce; and for this purpose they are authorized to sit during the sessions or recesses of Congress—

And so forth.

Three years ago the Senate authorized the very inquiry which formed the subject of the recent message to the Congress of the United States and which since that time has formed a part of the subject dealt with in the platforms of the several political parties in 1912.

The Interstate Commerce Committee under this resolution proceeded early in the autumn of 1911 to make this investigation. During the course of four months it heard, I think, more than 100 persons, and subjected them to such cross-examination as the members of the committee thought necessary; and its work in this investigation is found in a volume, or possibly three volumes, aggregating 3,000 printed pages. I believe I am fairly familiar with the literature of this subject: I am fairly familiar with the various hearings that have been had before one branch of Congress or the other. I am not unfamiliar with the general dissertations upon the topic, but I believe the hearings before the Interstate Commerce Committee conducted by the junior Senator from Minnesota form the most valuable contribution to the literature of this policy that can be found anywhere. I hope those who have not had an opportunity to read these hearings will take the first chance they have in this beautiful summer resort to become acquainted with the opinions of many of the most distinguished thinkers in the country.

That is not all. The committee made a report, as it was its duty to do, and I intend to read very briefly from that report in order to indicate what a majority of its members believed ought to be done.

While the committee is conscious that some of the matter adduced at the hearings and submitted as a part of this report is not relevant to the questions under consideration and of little worth, it believes that, upon the whole, the hearings have furnished one of the most valuable contributions that can be found in the literature of the subject. It is not yet ready to report any of the bills which are now before it, and which propose specific modifications of or additions to the existing statute; nor is it prepared at this time to report a substitute for them. It hopes that it may be able before the close of the present session to act finally upon these bills and recommend in definite form the legislation which it may think necessary or wise to meet modern business conditions. It is, however, prepared to answer the general inquiries propounded in the resolution, and in view of the overwhelming importance of the subject it ventures to add to the direct response some observations upon the origin, purpose, and effect of the enactment commonly known as the antitrust law, to indicate wherein it is inadequate, and to suggest the general scope of further regulation.

The committee is of the opinion:

First. That the statute—

That is, the antitrust act—

should stand as the fundamental law upon the subject, and that any supplemental legislation for more effectual control and regulation of interstate and foreign commerce should be in harmony with the purpose of the existing statute.

As I have already remarked, the bill now before the Senate is in harmony with the purpose of the antitrust statute. It has no other office except to render the principle of that statute more effectual than it now is. I proceed with the quotation:

Second. That, whatever may be our views respecting the power of Congress to enact a general Federal incorporation law, it is neither necessary nor desirable at this time to provide for the organization under act of Congress of industrial corporations which propose to engage in commerce among the States and with foreign nations.

Third. That it is desirable to impose upon corporations now or hereafter organized under State law, and engaged or proposing to engage in such commerce, further conditions or regulations affecting both their organization and the conduct of their business, and also to impose further conditions or regulations upon persons, copartnerships, and other associations now engaged, or hereafter engaging, in such commerce, the general character of such regulation to be the same as those laid upon corporations, except such conditions or regulations as are in their very nature peculiar to the corporate form of commercial activity.

It is plain that the first question to be answered in considering what additional legislation upon the subject is necessary or desirable is a vital one; it is this: Should Congress attempt to maintain competitive conditions in the general interstate commerce of the country where they still exist, and to restore such conditions where they have been destroyed, or should it accept the complete or partial overthrow of competition and resort to some other method of protecting the people against the power of combination and monopoly?

I desire to read one other paragraph from the report—possibly two:

Whatever may be the opinion of the several members of the committee with respect to the soundness of the rule—

That means the rule of the Supreme Court—

as now established, the committee as a whole accepts it as the present law of the land. It is profoundly convinced that, in view of the rule and its necessary effect upon the business of the country, the inherent rights of the people, and upon the execution of the statute it has become imperative to enact additional legislation.

Further, the committee says:

The committee does not intend in this report to indicate the terms of the act or acts that should be passed to supply the court with such legislative tests and standards as will limit the scope of judicial discretion. To do so would be to report upon the bills now before it, and that the committee is not prepared to do. It is prepared, however, to say that Congress should, in as far as is possible, specifically prescribe certain conditions upon which persons and corporations shall be permitted to engage in commerce among the States and with foreign nations. These conditions should be of a character that will tend to preserve reasonable competition, or substantially competitive conditions, and to compel independence in both organization and conduct.

With respect to the formation or organization of a commission or trade tribunal the committee said:

The committee further reports that if the additional legislation, the general scope of which has been pointed out, is enacted it will be very desirable to accompany such legislation with a measure establishing a commission for the better administration of the law and to aid in its enforcement. It may be fairly said that there is need of such a commission, even though the present statute is not supplemented in any manner; but it is apparent that if the new legislation is enacted the need of a commission will become more imperative.

There are three general fields in which the commission could work to the great advantage both of the people for whose protection the law exists and the people against whom it is directed.

I will not read further, Mr. President, from this report, but will ask leave to have it printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMOOT in the chair). Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The report is as follows, omitting individual views:

[Senate Report No. 1326, Sixty-second Congress, third session.]

CONTROL OF CORPORATIONS, PERSONS, AND FIRMS ENGAGED IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CUMMINS, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, submitted the following report (pursuant to S. Res. 98):

The Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the following resolution—

"Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce is hereby authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to inquire into and report to the Senate at the earliest date practicable what changes are necessary or desirable in the laws of the United States relating to the creation and control of corporations engaged in interstate commerce, and what changes are necessary or desirable in the laws of the United States relating to persons or firms engaged in interstate commerce, and for this purpose they are authorized to sit during the sessions or recesses of Congress, at such times and places as they may deem desirable or practicable; to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, to conduct hearings and have reports of same printed for use, and to employ such clerks, stenographers, and other assistants as shall be necessary, and any expense in connection with such inquiry shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee."

begs leave to make the following report:

On the 26th day of July, 1911, the Senate adopted the foregoing resolution, and acting under the authority and in pursuance thereof the Committee on Interstate Commerce provided for open hearings upon the subject matter of the resolution. The hearings began on the 15th day of November, 1911, and were continued from day to day for more than three months, during which time 103 men appeared before the committee, and their statements, together with the exhibits and documents submitted by them, fill 2,799 printed pages. A printed copy of these statements, exhibits, and documents, including an index, laws and reference concerning industrial combinations in foreign countries, and a collection of judicial decisions touching the power of Congress in the regulation of commerce among the States, in all, five volumes, is herewith presented to the Senate.

While the committee is conscious that some of the matter adduced at the hearings and submitted as a part of this report is not relevant to the questions under consideration and of little worth, it believes that, upon the whole, the hearings have furnished one of the most valuable contributions that can be found in the literature of the subject. It is not yet ready to report any of the bills which are now before it, and which propose specific modifications of or additions to the existing statute; nor is it prepared at this time to report a substitute for them. It hopes that it may be able before the close of the present session to act finally upon these bills and recommend in definite form the legislation which it may think necessary or wise to meet modern business conditions. It is, however, prepared to answer the general inquiries propounded in the resolution, and in view of the overwhelming importance of the subject it ventures to add to the direct response some observations upon the origin, purpose, and effect of the enactment commonly known as the antitrust law, to indicate wherein it is inadequate, and to suggest the general scope of further regulation.

The committee is of the opinion—

First. That the statute should stand as the fundamental law upon the subject, and that any supplemental legislation for more effectual control and regulation of interstate and foreign commerce should be in harmony with the purpose of the existing statute.

Second. That whatever may be our views respecting the power of Congress to enact a general Federal incorporation law, it is neither necessary nor desirable at this time to provide for the organization under act of Congress of industrial corporations which propose to engage in commerce among the States and with foreign nations.

Third. That it is desirable to impose upon corporations now or hereafter organized under State law, and engaged or proposing to engage in such commerce, further conditions or regulations affecting both their organization and the conduct of their business, and also to impose further conditions or regulations upon persons, copartnerships, and other associations now engaged, or hereafter engaging, in such commerce, the general character of such regulation to be the same as those laid upon corporations, except such conditions or regulations as are in their very nature peculiar to the corporate form of commercial activity.

It is plain that the first question to be answered in considering what additional legislation upon the subject is necessary or desirable is a vital one. It is this: Should Congress attempt to maintain competitive conditions in the general interstate commerce of the country where they still exist, and to restore such conditions where they have been destroyed, or should it accept the complete or partial overthrow of competition and resort to some other method of protecting the people against the power of combination and monopoly?

Without doubt the chief, if not the only, object in mind, when the antitrust law was passed, was to maintain competition as an effective regulating force in business by making it unlawful to enter into any contract or combination in restraint of trade or commerce among the States or with foreign nations, or to monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, such trade or commerce. The bill introduced by Senator Sherman, out of which the present statute grew, was in terms directed against the suppression of competition. After a long debate and much reflection, the Judiciary Committee of the Senate reported a substitute in which "restraint of trade" was the thing forbidden instead of interference with competition. This was accepted, not because there was any abandonment of the desire to preserve competition, but because there was a common law on the subject well established and carefully elucidated in the English decisions. The common law was that both contracts and acts in restraint of trade were injurious to the public welfare and therefore opposed to public policy. The Congress of 1890 very wisely borrowed the language of the common law and with it came the learning of the judges who had from time to time declared and expounded it. It is not the purpose of the committee to recite the development of the English doctrine. It was not always stated with exact accuracy and there is some inharmony of expression, but it may be said with confidence that a restraint of trade consisted of such unreasonable restriction of competition as impaired substantially and to the public injury the freedom of trade or the freedom to trade. Interference with free competition was generally but not necessarily a restraint of trade, for there were some restrictions that could be put upon competition and upon competitors that left the competitive force as an adequate protection to the people. Hence the common law was that unreasonable, unfair, undue restraint upon or interference with competition or competitive conditions constituted a restraint of trade.

The committee has made this comment upon the common law and pointed out the distinction between "restraint of competition" and "restraint of trade" in order that it may be fully understood in its analysis of the conflict between the earlier and later opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States relating to the construction and application of the antitrust statute.

The committee will not at this time enter upon an extended argument respecting the policy of maintaining competition or competitive conditions in the business of the country. It is well understood that there are many distinguished students and highly trained thinkers who believe that the age of competition is past, and that for the struggle which competition involves there should be substituted combination and cooperation, under such regulation and supervision as will protect the people from the oppression of monopolistic power; and added to the students and thinkers who have reached this conclusion through mere observation and investigation there are many men engaged in commerce, and who therefore speak from a practical standpoint, who have also concluded that some form of regulated monopoly or concentration should be adopted. All these men, whether theorists or otherwise, admit that if we abandon the effort to maintain competition the Government must undertake, directly or indirectly, to fix prices for the combinations or monopolies. The committee feels that the time has not yet come for so radical a departure from the long-established policy of the country, and it hopes that the time may never come when it will be necessary for the Government to assume the task of establishing prices for general commodities. It believes that the progress of the world depends in a large measure upon that fair, reasonable rivalry among men which has hitherto characterized the advances of civilization.

It is frequently declared that the law can not compel men employed in like business to compete with each other. There is a sense in which this is true, but it is only technically true. What is meant when we use the phrase "maintaining competition" is maintaining competitive conditions. We can both create and maintain competitive conditions, and, until human nature is revolutionized, when competitive conditions exist there will be actual competition; but if for some extraordinary reason that should fail there will be, at least, a potential competition tending to prevent undue prices and unfair practices. Without going further into the issue between regulated competition and regulated monopoly, the committee reiterates its finding that the antitrust statute should stand, and that every possible effort to create and preserve competitive conditions should be made.

Assuming, therefore, that Congress should maintain the policy established by the antitrust law and should make it more effective by additional legislation, if it be within our power to do so, the committee calls attention to the interpretation which the Supreme Court has given to the statute and to the application of its provisions which that tribunal has made in cases which have come before it for decision. It is not the intent of the committee in this report to review the opinions of the Supreme Court one by one, but rather to select certain types which will either demonstrate the wisdom of additional legislation or show that the law is adequate as it is.

The committee selects for the purpose indicated the following cases, all of which arose under the statute now being considered:

"United States v. E. C. Knight Co. (156 U. S., 1).
"United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association (166 U. S., 290).
"United States v. Joint Traffic Association (171 U. S., 505).
"Hopkins v. United States (171 U. S., 578).
"Northern Securities Co. v. United States (193 U. S., 197).
"Standard Oil Co. v. United States (221 U. S., 1).
"United States v. American Tobacco Co. (221 U. S., 106).
"United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Co. (not yet reported, opinion delivered Dec. 2, 1912)."

The committee does not give a statement of the facts in each of these cases, for to do so would greatly prolong the report, and it will be taken for granted that those who are interested in the subject are already familiar with the facts as they appear in the Supreme Court reports.

The rule of law announced in United States v. Knight Co. and in Hopkins v. United States is that a restraint of trade, however unreasonable, is not prohibited by the antitrust statute, no matter how general or disastrous the interference or restraint may be upon commerce among the States unless it directly affects such commerce. There is a general understanding among the judges and lawyers of the country that the Knight case has been overruled or modified in subsequent decisions. Undoubtedly it can be fairly inferred from the recent opinions of the court in like cases that, if the facts of the case were now presented, it would be held that the restraint was direct; but the rule of law established has never been questioned by the court and has been emphatically reasserted in every prominent opinion hitherto rendered. The committee does not bring these cases forward for the purpose of disputing the soundness of the rule under existing legislation. Its object is to disclose, as clearly as possible, the scope of judicial discretion, and therefore of business uncertainty which it creates. In every prosecution under the act wherein there is proven or admitted a contract or combination which restrains trade among the States, the first thing that the court must ascertain and declare is whether the restraint is direct or indirect. In the Knight and Hopkins cases, and others of that type, it was held to be indirect. In the Northern Securities Co., Standard Oil Co., and American Tobacco Co. cases it was held to be direct. It is obvious that the opinion of any given man in any given case upon this question, whether he be judge or not, must depend largely, not upon his learning in the law but upon his training and bent in the economy of commerce. The result has been, and necessarily will be, that the law officer of the Government before he institutes a prosecution must determine whether the restraint is direct and immediate, and the court in order to decide the issue must employ the functions of the legislator rather than the lawyer.

The consequence is twofold: First, the Department of Justice will ignore a great many unlawful transactions because there will be doubt as to whether the interference with interstate or international trade is direct or indirect; second, the business community has found itself, and will find itself in a state of uncertainty as to whether a particular transaction is to be judged by the law of the State or the law of the Nation. It is not claimed that this undefined and undefinable field of judicial discretion can be wholly occupied by legislation, but it is manifest that it is the duty of the legislative branch of the Government to circumscribe it within the closest practicable bounds. The committee will recur to this subject in connection with another aspect of the judicial power, and contents itself now with a statement of its conclusion that there should be further legislation specifically prohibiting certain forms of association, combination, or monopoly which admittedly restrain trade and commerce among the States and with foreign nations, but which may be held by the courts to be indirect or remote interferences.

The committee has first referred to the point just mentioned, not because it is first in importance, but because it first arose. It now passes to another and more serious weakness in the law as now interpreted.

In the Trans-Missouri Freight Association case there developed a controversy among the members of the Supreme Court that was carried on with unabated vigor through the 15 years intervening between the opinion in the Freight Association case and the opinion in the Standard Oil Co. case. In this period the vicissitudes of life and the changes upon the bench which necessarily ensue converted the opinion of the court in the Freight Association case into a single dissenting opinion in the Standard Oil Co. case, and the dissenting opinion in the former case into the opinion of the court in the latter case. In the Freight Association case Mr. Justice Peckham, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"Second. The next question to be discussed is as to what is the true construction of the statute, assuming that it applies to common carriers by railroad. What is the meaning of the language as used in the statute that 'every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal'? Is it confined to a contract or combination which is only in unreasonable restraint of trade or commerce, or does it include what the language of the act plainly and in terms covers, all contracts of that nature (p. 327)?"

The learned justice answered the question thus propounded many times and in great variety of phrase in the course of the opinion, and the committee quotes some of these answers.

"When, therefore, the body of an act pronounces as illegal every contract or combination in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, etc., the plain and ordinary meaning of such language is not limited to that kind of contract alone which is in unreasonable restraint of trade, but all contracts are included in such language, and no exception or limitation can be added without placing in the act that which has been omitted by Congress (p. 328).

"But we can not see how the statute can be limited, as it has been by the courts below, without reading into its text an exception which alters the natural meaning of the language used, and that, too, upon a most material point, and where no sufficient reason is shown for believing that such alteration would make the statute more in accord with the intent of the lawmaking body that enacted it (p. 329).

"'The arguments which have been addressed to us against the inclusion of all contracts in restraint of trade, as provided for by the language of the act, have been based upon the alleged presumption that Congress, notwithstanding the language of the act, could not have intended to embrace all contracts, but only such contracts as were in unreasonable restraint of trade. Under these circumstances we are, therefore, asked to hold that the act of Congress excepts contracts which are not in unreasonable restraint of trade, and which only keep rates up to a reasonable price, notwithstanding the language of the act makes no such exception. In other words, we are asked to read into the act by way of judicial legislation an exception that is not placed there by the law-making branch of the Government, and this is to be done upon the theory that the impolicy of such legislation is so clear that it can not be supposed that Congress intended the natural import of the language used. This we can not and ought not to do (p. 340).

"'The conclusion which we have drawn from the examination above made into the question before us is that the antitrust act applies to railroads, and that it renders illegal all agreements which are in restraint of trade or commerce as we have above defined that expression, and the question then arises whether the agreement before us is of that nature'" (p. 341).

The issue was clearly joined by Mr. Justice White (now Chief Justice), who in his dissenting opinion, in which Justices Field, Gray, and Shiras concurred, thus stated the question:

"To state the proposition in the form in which it was earnestly pressed in the argument at bar, it is as follows: Congress has said every contract in restraint of trade is illegal. When the law says 'every,' there is no power in the courts, if they correctly interpret and apply the statute, to substitute the word 'some' for the word 'every.' If Congress had meant to forbid only restraints of trade which were unreasonable it would have said so; instead of doing this it has said 'every,' and this word of universality embraces both contracts which are reasonable and unreasonable" (p. 345).

The distinguished justice begins his answer to the proposition just quoted as follows:

"I commence, then, with these two conceded propositions, one of law and the other of fact, first that only such contracts as unreasonably restrain trade are violative of the general law, and, second, that the particular contract here under consideration is reasonable, and therefore not unlawful if the general principles of law are to be applied to it" (p. 344).

Again:

"Its title is 'An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies.' The word 'unlawful' clearly distinguishes between contracts in restraint of trade which are lawful and those which are not. In other words, between those which are unreasonably in restraint of trade, and consequently invalid, and those which are reasonable and hence lawful" (p. 352).

Again:

"If these obvious rules of interpretation be applied, it seems to me they render it impossible to construe the words 'every restraint of trade' used in the act in any other sense than as excluding reasonable contracts, as the fact that such contracts were not considered to be within the rule of contracts in restraint of trade was thoroughly established both in England and in this country at the time the act was adopted" (p. 354).

Again:

"Indeed, it seems to me there can be no doubt that reasonable contracts can not be embraced within the provisions of the statute if it be interpreted by the light of the supreme command that the intention of the law must be carried out, and it must be so construed as to afford the remedy and frustrate the wrong contemplated by its enactment" (p. 355).

It will be noted that but once in the dissenting opinion is the word "unreasonable" used to qualify the phrase "in restraint of trade." It is generally employed to qualify the word "contract." There is some difference between saying that there may be a reasonable interference with competition or freedom in trade or freedom to trade which did not, at the common law, constitute a restraint of trade, and saying that there can be, under our statute, a reasonable restraint of trade. But this was only the beginning.

Two years later the suit of the United States v. Joint Traffic Association came on for decision. Again Mr. Justice Peckham delivered the opinion of the court, and upon the point we are considering there seems to have been no change in the attitude of the members of the court toward it. It is instructive to observe, however, that in referring to Hopkins v. The United States, in which the opinion was handed down at the same term, the learned justice said:

"In Hopkins v. The United States, decided at this term, post, 578, we say that the statute applies only to those contracts whose direct and immediate effect is a restraint upon interstate commerce * * * the effect upon interstate commerce must not be indirect or incidental only (p. 568)."

Five years thereafter the well-known Northern Securities case was decided, and the struggle was renewed with intense earnestness. Mr. Justice Harlan rendered the opinion of the court, and this is the way he stated the question:

"Is the act to be construed as forbidding every combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the States or with foreign nations? Or does it embrace only such restraints as are unreasonable in their nature? Is the motive with which a forbidden combination or conspiracy is formed at all material when it appears that the necessary tendency of that particular combination or conspiracy in question is to restrict or suppress free competition between competing railroads engaged in commerce among the States? Does the act of Congress prescribe as a rule for interstate or international commerce, that the operation of the natural laws of competition between those engaged in such commerce shall not be restricted or interfered with by any contract, combination, or conspiracy (p. 328)?"

In answering the question he probably goes a little further than Justice Peckham. He states as the conclusion to be drawn from former opinions of the courts:

"That the act is not limited to restraints of interstate and international trade or commerce that are unreasonable in their nature, but embraces all direct restraints imposed by any combination, conspiracy, or monopoly upon such trade or commerce; * * *. That every combination or conspiracy which would extinguish competition between otherwise competing railroads engaged in interstate trade or commerce, and which would in that way restrain such trade or commerce, is made illegal by the act; * * *. That to vitiate the combination, such as the act of Congress condemns, it need not be shown that the combination in fact results or will result in a total suppression of trade or in a complete monopoly, but it is only essential to show that by its necessary operation it tends to restrain interstate or international trade or commerce or tends to create a monopoly in such trade or commerce and to deprive the public of the advantages that flow from free competition (p. 331).

"Whether the free operation of the normal laws of competition is a wise and wholesome rule for trade and commerce is an economic question which this court need not consider or determine. Undoubtedly there are those who think that the general business interest and prosperity of the country will be best promoted if the rule of competition is not applied. But there are others who believe that such a rule is more necessary in these days of enormous wealth than it ever was in any former period of our history. Be all this as it may, Congress has, in effect, recognized the rule of free competition by declaring illegal every combination or conspiracy in restraint of interstate and international commerce (p. 337)."

Mr. Justice Brewer was with the majority of the court in the Trans-Missouri Association case, and he concurred in the decision in the Northern Securities Co. case; but upon the question we are discussing he rejected the reasoning of Justice Harlan and adopted the views expressed by Justice White in the former case. He said:

"Instead of holding that the antitrust act includes all contracts, reasonable or unreasonable, in restraint of interstate trade, the ruling should have been that the contracts there presented were unreasonable restraints of interstate trade, and as such within the scope of the act. That act, as it appears from its title, was leveled at only 'unlawful restraints and monopolies.' Congress did not intend to reach and destroy those minor contracts in partial restraint of trade which the long course of decision at common law had affirmed were reasonable and ought to be upheld. The purpose rather was to place a statutory prohibition with prescribed penalties and remedies upon those contracts which were in direct restraint of trade, unreasonable, and against public policy. Whenever a departure from common-law rules and definitions is claimed, the purpose to make the departure should be clearly shown. Such a purpose does not appear and such a departure was not intended (p. 361)."

The Chief Justice and Justices White, Peckham, and Holmes dissented. Justice White, while discussing many phases of the relation between the General and the State Governments, finally rested his opinion upon the Knight case, holding that there was no direct restraint of interstate commerce. Justice Holmes, while concurring with Justice White, took occasion to say, in substance, that the method adopted by the defendants for the suppression of competition did not constitute a restraint of trade in the sense of the antitrust law.

With the Northern Securities case there terminated one distinct, striking period in the interpretation and application of the antitrust statute. It is needless to inquire at length whether or not the views of the court, as expressed in the opinions of Justices Peckham and Harlan, were in exact harmony with the common law as to the meaning or definition of the phrase "restraint of trade." Even if these learned judges were not quite successful in distinguishing the difference, at the common law, between a restraint of competition and a restraint of trade it still remains true that for more than 13 years repeated decisions of the highest tribunal of the country had declared that every contract or combination which prevented free competition was a restraint of trade, and that, if the restraint directly affected commerce among the States, then the contract or combination was unlawful, under the first section of the act.

Inasmuch as the committee is of opinion that legislation should be so clear in its terms as not to admit of unlimited judicial discretion, it pauses here a moment to point out just what the range of discretion was under the decisions ending with the Northern Securities case. It is manifest that the inquiry that the court was then required to make in each case was this: Has the evidence established a restraint of trade; that is to say, has the evidence established a contract or combination which interfered with free competition?

There was some, but not great latitude for difference of opinion upon such an inquiry, and the uncertainty in the application of the law was reduced to a minimum; nor would the uncertainty have been much increased if the inquiry had been as to an unreasonable interference with free competition, which would have been the inquiry had the common-law understanding been strictly adopted by the Supreme Court.

If the more recent construction of the statute were in harmony with the earlier decisions, further legislation might nevertheless be required; but it is unnecessary to make the inquiry. That question is purely academic, for the later rulings have competely reversed the former ones, in so far as the phase of the subject now being discussed is concerned.

On the 15th day of May, 1911, the case of the Standard Oil Co. v. The United States was passed upon by the Supreme Court. Chief Justice White (formerly Justice White) delivered the opinion and reiterated, as the conclusion of the court, the views that he had so forcibly urged as a dissenter 15 years before. It was not necessary for the court to deal with the question at all, inasmuch as it found the defendants guilty of a restraint of trade under any and every meaning of the term, but for the very purpose, the committee assumes, of advising the country that a new rule had been adopted so that business might be guided by it, it was stated in the most emphatic way imaginable that the statute which declares that "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations is hereby declared to be illegal" means that a contract or combination in order to be illegal must cause an undue restraint of trade. The following quotations from the opinion will need no comment:

"That in view of the many new forms of contracts and combinations which were being evolved from existing economic conditions, it was deemed essential by an all-embracing enumeration to make sure that no form of contract or combination by which an undue restraint of interstate or foreign commerce was brought about could save such restraint from condemnation. The statute under this view evidenced the intent not to restrain the right to make and enforce contracts, whether resulting from combination or otherwise, which did not unduly restrain interstate or foreign commerce, but to protect that commerce from being restrained by methods, whether old or new, which would constitute an interference that is an undue restraint (pp. 59, 60)."

Again:

"In other words, having by the first section forbidden all means of monopolizing trade—that is, unduly restraining it by means of every contract, combination, etc.—the second section seeks, if possible, to make the prohibitions of the act all the more complete and perfect by embracing all attempts to reach the end prohibited by the first section (p. 61)."

That the Chief Justice intended to announce a rule at variance with the declarations of Justice Peckham and Justice Harlan in the Trans-Missouri Freight Association and Northern Securities cases is made clear in the following extracts:

"The question is pertinent and must be fully and frankly met, for if it be now deemed that the Freight Association case was mistakenly decided or too broadly stated, the doctrine which it announced should be either expressly overruled or limited. * * * And in order not in the slightest degree to be wanting in frankness, we say that in so far, however, as by separating the general language used in the opinion in the Freight Association and Joint Traffic cases from the context and the subject and parties with which the cases were concerned, it may be conceived that the referred to conflicts with the construction which we give the statute, they are necessarily now limited and qualified (pp. 68, 69)."

The learned Chief Justice contends that this rule of construction, which he repeatedly calls the "rule of reason," must be applied in order to prevent the entire overthrow of the statute.

It is one of the interesting things in our judicial history that so great had been the change in the personnel of the court that when the dissenting opinion of Justice White in 1896 became the opinion of the court in 1911 Justice Harlan was the only member remaining to protest against the reversal. He recorded his dissent in one of the most vigorous opinions that can be found in the reports, but for the purposes which the committee has in view it is not necessary to do more than to mention it.

Justice Harlan has passed away, and it may be assumed that the Supreme Court is now unanimously in favor of the doctrine so often and so ably promulgated by Chief Justice White. The rule was reasserted in the American Tobacco Co. case and has not since been questioned by any member of the court.

It is true that in the important opinion rendered in the suit of the United States v. The Union Pacific Railroad Co., Justice Day says:

"The act is intended to reach combinations and conspiracies which restrain freedom of action in interstate trade and commerce and unduly suppress or restrict the play of competition in the conduct thereof"—

Citing as authority the Joint Traffic Association case.

It is true also that the court quotes, with apparent approval, the following extract from Mr. Justice Harlan in the Northern Securities case:

"In all the prior cases in this court the antitrust act has been considered as forbidding any combination which by its necessary operation destroys or restrains free competition among those engaged in interstate commerce; in other words, that to destroy or restrict free competition in interstate commerce was to restrain such commerce."

But thereafter the court says:

"In the recent discussion of the history of the meaning of the act in the Standard Oil Co. and Tobacco Co. cases this court declared that the statute should be given a reasonable construction, with a view to reaching those undue restraints of interstate trade which are intended to be prohibited and punished."

The fair conclusion is that it is now the settled doctrine of the Supreme Court that only undue or unreasonable restraints of trade are made unlawful by the antitrust act, and that in each instance it is for the court to determine whether the established restraint of trade is a due restraint or an undue restraint.

Whatever may be the opinion of the several members of the committee with respect to the soundness of the rule as now established, the committee as a whole accepts it as the present law of the land. It is profoundly convinced that, in view of the rule and its necessary effect upon the business of the country, the inherent rights of the people, and upon the execution of the statute, it has become imperative to enact additional legislation.

The committee has full confidence in the integrity, intelligence, and patriotism of the Supreme Court of the United States, but it is unwilling to repose in that court, or any other court, the vast and undefined power which it must exercise in the administration of the statute under the rule which it has promulgated. It substitutes the court in the place of Congress, for whenever the rule is invoked the court does not administer the law, but makes the law. If it continues in force, the Federal courts will, so far as restraint of trade is concerned, make a common law for the United States, just as the English courts have made a common law for England.

The people of this country will not permit the courts to declare a policy for them with respect to this subject. If we do not promptly exercise our legislative power, the courts will suffer immeasurable injury in the loss of that respect and confidence so essential to their usefulness. It is inconceivable that in a country governed by a written Constitution and statute law the courts can be permitted to test each restraint of trade by the economic standard which the individual members of he court may happen to approve. If we do not speedily prescribe in so far as we can a legislative rule by which to measure the forms of contract and combination in restraint of trade with which we are familiar or which we can anticipate, we cease to be a Government of law and become a Government of men, and, moreover, of a very few men, and they appointed by the President.

It may be that the Supreme Court will be so enlightened and so alert that its opinion respecting what is due and what is undue restraint of trade will be in harmony with an awakened public conscience and a disinterested public judgment, but to fashion our conduct upon that hypothesis is to repudiate the fundamental principles of representative government.

When the commercial development of the country is considered, when the forms of industrial activity are taken into account, it must be admitted by every student of affairs that the policy of the Government with respect to restraints of trade and commerce should remain a judicial question in those cases only in which Congress can not prescribe a definite rule.

In order to look at the subject in the light of illustration, it is suggested that there will presently come before the courts the combination centered in the United States Steel Corporation. In the end nine justices of the Supreme Court will be asked to say whether the restraint of trade brought about through this combination is a due or an undue restraint, and the answer which each justice makes to that question will depend upon his individual opinion as an economist or sociologist, the conclusion of the court being in substance an act of legislation passed by the judicial branch of the Government to fit a particular case.

Further, it is believed by many thoughtful people that a substantial identity in the managing boards of competing corporations constitutes a restraint of trade and is harmful to the public interest. If such a case were brought before the court, what would be the "rule of reason?" What guide would the court have in determining whether such community of directors or managers was a due or an undue restraint of trade?

Again, suppose there were a dozen establishments in a given field of production competing with each other and six of them were to consolidate, employing half of all the capital and advancing the consolidated enterprise to a dominating position in the trade, where would the judge go for light in determining whether the restraint of trade was due or undue? These illustrations might be indefinitely extended, but it would serve no useful purpose to multiply them.

The committee does not intend in this report to indicate the terms of the act or acts that should be passed to supply the court with such legislative tests and standards as will limit the scope of judicial discretion. To do so would be to report upon the bills now before it, and that the committee is not prepared to do. It is prepared, however, to say that Congress should, in as far as is possible, specifically prescribe certain conditions upon which persons and corporations shall be permitted to engage in commerce among the States and with foreign nations. These conditions should be of a character that will tend to preserve reasonable competition, or substantially competitive conditions, and to compel independence in both organization and conduct. They should be so clear that the business world can understand them and go confidently forward, guided by them.

Not only should such conditions be imposed upon those who are engaged or propose to engage in commerce among the States, but our legislation should further recite certain known forms of combination and declare them to be unlawful because in restraint of trade. With respect to other forms, we should declare that if restraint is established the burden of proof is upon the persons or corporations involved to show that the restraint is reasonable.

These suggestions are not made solely for the better protection of that general body of our citizens, commonly called the people, who must deal with buy from, and sell to the combinations sought to be regulated, but are made also in the interest of safety and certainty for the men who compose what is ordinarily known as the business community.

There are many forms of combination and many practices in business which have been so unequivocally condemned by the Supreme Court that as to them and their like the statute is so clear that no person can be in any doubt respecting what is lawful and what is unlawful; but as the statute is now construed there are many forms of organization and many other practices that seriously interfere with competition and are plainly opposed to the public welfare, concerning which it is impossible to predict with any certainty whether they will be held to be due or undue restraints of trade.

The committee does not conceal the difficulty of reaching an agreement concerning the details of the legislation just outlined, but it has no hesitation in reporting that legislation of the general character pointed out is both wise and necessary.

The committee further reports that if the additional legislation, the general scope of which has been pointed out, is enacted it will be very desirable to accompany such legislation with a measure establishing a commission for the better administration of the law and to aid in its enforcement. It may be fairly said that there is need of such a commission, even though the present statute is not supplemented in any manner; but it is apparent that if the new legislation is enacted the need of a commission will become more imperative.

There are three general fields in which the commission could work to the great advantage both of the people for whose protection the law exists and the people against whom it is directed.

First. If the Bureau of Corporations were converted into an independent commission composed of trained, skillful men, and clothed with adequate authority, there could be gathered more complete and accurate knowledge of the organization, management, and practices of the corporations and associations engaged in national and international commerce than we now have. In saying this the committee does not mean to disparage the work of the Bureau of Corporations as hitherto carried on; but, valuable as the work has been, it is believed that a greater service could be rendered by a commission with a distinct organization with adequate appropriations and added authority. Moreover, it is clear that the constant inquiry into and investigation of interstate commerce in order to ascertain whether the law is being violated should be more closely connected with prosecutions for violations, when found to exist, than at the present time.

Second. When the conditions upon the fulfillment of which persons and corporations may engage in commerce among the States and with foreign nations are imposed, as the committee has heretofore recommended, there will be some of them upon which the Government must act with administrative promptness rather than with judicial deliberation and delay. For instance, suppose Congress were to declare, as the committee thinks it ought to declare, that no corporation should be permitted to engage in interstate or international commerce unless it be honestly capitalized, and that when anything but money is accepted for its stock that the value at which the property is so taken must be its fair, reasonable value. It seems clear that a corporation proposing to enter business should have an opportunity to come to some governmental tribunal and say, here is the property purposed to be taken for stock, and here is the price at which it is to be taken, and thereupon ask for approval or disapproval of the proposition. It would be most unjust in such a case to allow the corporation to go on for years and then be told that it must cease to do business because the value of the property was less than the par value of the stock issued for it.

And, again, suppose that 10 out of 20 manufacturing establishments heretofore in competition with each other desire to consolidate into one enterprise. There ought to be a way in which the men in such a venture could submit their plan to the Government and an inquiry made as to the legality of such a transaction, and if the Government was of the opinion that competitive conditions would not be substantially impaired there should be an approval, and in so far as the lawfulness of the exact thing proposed is concerned there should be a decision, and if favorable to the proposal there should be an end of that particular controversy for all time. Such results as these can be attained in no other way than through a commission which, though administrative in its character, would, in some instances, exercise quasi judicial functions. It is believed that through the intervention of such a body of men the legislative policy with respect to combinations and monopolies could be vastly more effectual than through the courts alone, which in most cases will take no cognizance of violations of the law for months or years after the violations occurred and when the difficulty of awarding reparation for the wrong is almost insurmountable.

The committee has not attempted to be comprehensive as to the usefulness of the commission in this field, and has made these suggestions only to indicate in the most general way the assistance that could be rendered in the enforcement of the law.

Third. One of the most serious problems in connection with suits brought under the antitrust act is to find the proper method of disintegrating combinations that have been adjudged unlawful. The dissolution of a corporation or a series of associated corporations must often involve the consideration of plans for reorganization in order that the property which has been unlawfully employed may thereafter be lawfully used in commerce. The courts are not fitted for the work of reconstruction; and whatever jurisdiction they now have or that may hereafter be conferred upon them with respect to such matters, it can not be gainsaid that a commission, the members of which are in close touch with business affairs and who are intimately acquainted with the commercial situation, might be extremely helpful in the required readjustment

Respectfully submitted.

Mr. CUMMINS. We have, then, Mr. President, the authority of the committee, laboring faithfully for a period of four months or more, to the effect that additional legislation is necessary in order that full, fair competition in our industrial life may be maintained.

We have its further authority for the proposal that the additional legislation so enacted as well as the existing statute can be enforced, applied, administered more helpfully through the aid of a commission or tribunal than through the pure judicial process alone.

Such was the situation, Mr. President, when the present administration came in, and it very promptly and very wisely repeated the recommendation of the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I look upon the message of the President of the United States upon this subject as a mere reiteration of the report of the committee to which I have already referred. It is not new; it is not novel; it is simply the assertion of a conclusion to which most of the thinking, patriotic men of the country had already come. The President of the United States is to be applauded and complimented for his wisdom in recommending to the Congress that we make the antitrust statute an instrumentality more effective for the preservation of independent and honorable rivalry in business than it has been or is likely to be without the supplemental enactments to which I have in a general way referred.

All that I have said, Mr. President, is upon the assumption, first, that we desire to perpetuate competition in business in our country, and, second, that we are of the opinion that the statute of 1890 does not sufficiently accomplish the object. If there be those in the Senate who are opposed to competition, opposed to rivalry in business, opposed to that regulating force in our commercial life, such Senator ought, of course, to be against the effort that we are now making. If, further, any such Senator shall believe that the antitrust statute is in and of itself sufficient, that it has preserved and will maintain competition in the United States fully, safely, and effectually, then he, too, should oppose the proposed legislation; but I can not believe——

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a question.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. NELSON. Is this section 5 in the bill anything more than putting a brake on competition? Under the Sherman law, the antitrust law, the purpose is to prevent all restraints of trade in order that competition may be untrammeled. Under section 5 the object is to determine whether that competition is good or bad, whether it is unfair, whether there is too much of it. How can you say that that is in aid of the Sherman law?

Mr. CUMMINS. That suggests one of the plainest things, Mr. President, in the bill. Assuming that what my friend from Minnesota calls the Sherman law, the authorship of which is disputed, however, is intended to preserve competition, and I believe it is, the section in this bill relating to unfair competition will, in my judgment, be a readier instrumentality for the maintenance of competition than the antitrust law itself.

The only unfair competition that the section will ever touch is that competition which has for its object the destruction of competition. There is no unfair competition that is consistent with the endurance of any competition. If the Senator will examine the decisions of the Supreme Court, or reexamine them—because I know he is familiar with them—he will find that unfair practices in competition have been denounced oftener as violations of the antitrust law than any other phase of industrial combination. So the question propounded by the Senator from Minnesota is an easy one to answer. Unfair competition means the extinction of competition. The antitrust law has for its object the preservation of fair, full competition; and in order to preserve fair competition unfair competition must cease to exist. The two can not survive in the same industrial field or as they are related to the same commodity and commerce.

I intend, however, Mr. President, to give further attention to section 5 when I reach it in the course of my review of the bill. I was referring to the history of the movement for additional legislation supplemental to the antitrust law and in harmony with its object. The movement has now taken this form: The House of Representatives has passed three measures, one of them creating a commission with substantially no power save the power of inquisition or investigation. Second, a bill which makes certain acts which are believed to be incompatible with competition unlawful. The former bill was referred to the Interstate Commerce Committee and has been reported to this body, and is now under consideration, the report being a proposal to substitute a bill which had been prepared by the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate for all that part of the House bill following the enacting clause. The second bill to which I have referred is now before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and it is not my purpose to comment upon it. The third bill relates principally to a new regulation for the issuance of railroad bonds or stocks. To be accurate, it is not confined to railway companies, but extends to all common carriers. The latter bill is now before the Interstate Commerce Committee.

I have referred to these three measures because, in my opinion, they ought to have been parts of a single measure. I think the Senate should have had before it all these bills, and whatever suggestions or amendments were made by the committees having them in charge, before we entered upon the consideration of any one of them. They are so inseparably connected with each other, they are so interwoven in their legislative texture, that it becomes almost impossible to exercise intelligent judgment with regard to one without considering the proposals in the others. But we have the bill before us and it is our duty to consider it as best we can.

I now refer to the commission bill and generalize upon it in so far as I can in order to be brief in my remarks. It is, the larger part of it, an effort to give the trade commission full and complete powers of investigation.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CUMMINS. I beg pardon.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Iowa is now approaching one of the vitally important features of the bill, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	Lea, Tenn.	Ransdell	Swanson
Camden	Lewis	Robinson	Thomas
Chamberlain	Martin, Va.	Shafroth	Thompson
Clapp	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Thornton
Clarke, Ark.	Nelson	Shively	Walsh
Cummins	Norris	Simmons	Warren
Jones	O'Gorman	Smith, Ariz.	Works
Kenyon	Oliver	Smith, Md.
Kern	Overman	Smoot
Lane	Page	Sterling

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate do now adjourn. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CATRON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). Has the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. OLIVER. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea." I refrain from voting on account of my pair with the senior Senator from Oregon.

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] and vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and I wish this announcement of the pair and the transfer to stand for the day. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] is absent on official business, and that he is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

Mr. THOMAS. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] to the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST] and vote "nay." I wish to state also that the junior Senator from Georgia is confined to his room by sickness.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and vote "nay."

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN]. This announcement may stand for the day. I wish also to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST] on account of illness.

Mr. POMERENE entered the Chamber and voted "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—18.

Brady	Clapp	Jones	Page
Brandegee	Crawford	Kenyon	Poindexter
Bristow	Cummins	McCumber	Smoot
Burton	Dillingham	Nelson
Catron	Gallinger	Norris

NAYS—34.

Ashurst	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Thomas
Bankhead	Martine, N. J.	Shields	Thompson
Bryan	Newlands	Shively	Thornton
Camden	O'Gorman	Simmons	Tillman
Chamberlain	Overman	Smith, Ariz.	Walsh
Kern	Pomerene	Smith, Ga.	Warren
Lane	Ransdell	Smith, Md.	Williams
Lea, Tenn.	Robinson	Stone
Lewis	Shafroth	Swanson

NOT VOTING—44.

Borah	Gore	McLean	Smith, Mich.
Burleigh	Gronna	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Chilton	Hitchcock	Oliver	Stephenson
Clark, Wyo.	Hollis	Owen	Sterling
Clarke, Ark.	Hughes	Penrose	Sutherland
Colt	James	Perkins	Townsend
Culberson	Johnson	Pittman	Vardaman
du Pont	La Follette	Reed	Weeks
Fall	Lee, Md.	Root	West
Fletcher	Lippitt	Saulsbury	White
Goff	Lodge	Sherman	Works

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The roll call discloses that a quorum is present. The Senator from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in justice to those Senators who have just entered the Chamber, I ought to recapitulate my argument of the last hour; but assuming that they were detained from the Chamber by imperative duties elsewhere, I shall for this occasion forbear. If in the future I find it necessary to inform them with regard to the argument I have already made, I shall then do what I really ought to do at this time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I suggest that we have order in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is very difficult, I know, Mr. President, to suppress the noise incident to the departure of Senators, and I have no desire to delay their departure. I pause for a moment simply to enable Senators to go.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say that the Committee on Appropriations is in session considering appropriation bills, and I think probably the Committee on Foreign Relations is also in session. We are obliged to leave the Chamber if we are going to have any meeting to consider and get appropriation bills through the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not suggesting this in any resentful frame of mind.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like myself to hear the Senator from Iowa if my duties permitted me to remain in the Chamber to do so.

Mr. CUMMINS. This is a common occurrence. If it had occurred for the first time this afternoon I should be a little discouraged and disheartened.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say that there are three appropriation bills in conference. There is a meeting now in progress on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, another on the legislative appropriation bill, and another on the sundry civil bill. Therefore the consideration of these measures requires the presence in committee of nearly the entire membership of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. Though I have no power to do so and while I thereby shall lose the presence of the Senator from North Carolina, I give him leave of absence.

Mr. President, I wish we could have a show of hands, for I should like to know how many Senators have read this bill. [A pause.] There are more Senators who have read this bill than I believed, Mr. President. It will enable me to go forward with my discussion with less attention to detail than I otherwise might have felt compelled to give.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, of course I should not make the request, but I suggest to the Senator that, in addition to the request he made, he ask how many of the Senators have read the speech of Mr. Woodrow Wilson denouncing the spirit and influence of this kind of legislation. That, too, would be interesting.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I did not refer to that, because I did not desire to give it any prominence whatever. It ought to have no weight with a thinking man. Therefore I have not referred to it. I may say this, however, Mr. President, if the President had during the campaign—and he was then less informed upon this subject than he now is; and a wise man changes his mind when he is convinced of his error—even if the President during the campaign very emphatically repudiated legislation of this sort, and he has since seen the error of his former conclusion, I am glad that he is willing and courageous enough to say so. That is the reason I have not referred to his utterances during the campaign.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. Does the Senator from Iowa positively know that the President has changed his views as they were expressed in the speech to which I have referred?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I only know that he has changed his expression.

Mr. CLAPP. With reference to this subject?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. I confess I have not seen it. I have seen some change of expression with reference to other subjects, but not with reference to this one.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suppose the Senator means in the way of public speeches or addresses. Does the Senator from Minnesota doubt that the President of the United States is in favor of legislation of this character?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I would doubt that the President of the United States was in favor of leaving to some experts in Washington to say to business men what they could do in view of the speech which he made with reference to that matter. I have not seen any statement of the President that would contradict the position which he then took.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Minnesota doubt that the President of the United States favors the bill which passed the House of Representatives?

Mr. CLAPP. The trade commission bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. I refer to the trade commission bill.

Mr. CLAPP. I have no proof that the President favors it; if the Senator has such proof, I should be glad to have him present it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Possibly he is opposed to it. However, I do not care whether he is opposed to it or not. I assume that he has changed his mind with regard to that subject, and I welcome him to the ranks of the progressive thinkers of the country.

Mr. NELSON and Mr. NEWLANDS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To whom does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that section 5 of the Senate substitute was not in the bill as it passed the House of Representatives. The President may have indorsed the bill passed by the other House, but that does not involve an indorsement of section 5 of the Senate substitute.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will say for his satisfaction or gratification that I know that the President has indorsed section 5. It is not a question of surmise with me; that is, if I may credit a fellow Member of the Senate and a fellow Member of the House, section 5 has had the explicit indorsement of the President of the United States. I now yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I simply wish to say that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] must have lost recollection of the President's message delivered some months ago, in which he expressly recommended a trade commission bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, does the Senator refer to any message delivered in the Senate?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Not in the Senate, but a message delivered in the House of Representatives.

Mr. CLAPP. Ah!

Mr. NEWLANDS. An address to the Congress of the United States, in which——

Mr. CLAPP. Was it read to the Senate?

Mr. NEWLANDS. In which the President discussed the subject.

Mr. CUMMINS. The message has been printed and delivered to every Member of the Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. In which the President favored the present trade commission bill that has been reported by the Senate committee?

Mr. CUMMINS. The message was delivered to Congress some time before the bill passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It was a message of recommendation regarding legislation upon the subject of trusts.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, upon the subject of trusts!

Mr. NEWLANDS. And included in his recommendation was the suggestion that there should be a trade commission bill.

Mr. CLAPP. That was before the bill passed the House.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. The bill that passed the House did not confer any authority on the commission to interfere with practices calculated to destroy competition, and, consequently, I will say to the Senator from Iowa we can not take the House bill as it came over as any evidence of the views of the President upon this question. We are still in the dark on that subject.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not quite understand the Senator from Minnesota. I assume, though, that he has cited the opinion of the President expressed during the campaign as a reason why this bill should not pass.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, Mr. President, not by any means.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Minnesota indicate what his purpose was?

Mr. CLAPP. My purpose was to refer to the attitude of the President with reference to this proposition embraced in this bill, not as a reason why it should not pass by any means, because I may say that it is for Congress to settle the question as to what should pass and not for the President, but there is a broad distinction between citing the attitude of the President to show his own position and citing it as an evidence of what Congress has a right to do or should do with reference to legislation. I think the Senator concedes that difference.

Mr. CUMMINS. The difference is very obvious. I am sure that the Senator from Minnesota knows that I believe with him as to the respective duties of the Congress and of the President of the United States, but among the privileges of the President is one of recommending as often as he may see fit legislation to Congress; and the President did recommend, as I said a few moments ago, additional legislation, and his recommendation in that respect was not essentially different from the report of the Interstate Commerce Committee made at a time when my friend from Minnesota was its chairman and as the result of investigations through which he led the committee. I think, with distinguished honor and success. I have only referred to the matter to show that the best thought of this country demanded additional legislation for the regulation of our commerce, and I think that that has been pretty fairly established.

I now resume my observations upon the bill at the point at which they were interrupted a half hour ago. I had said that the bill, in its major part, was a bill to create a commission with powers of investigation for the purpose of ascertaining whether the business of the country was conducted in accordance with the commands of the antitrust law. It is given complete, comprehensive power in that regard, and, so far as the bill is now before the Senate, there are but two other features in it, two things which the trade commission is authorized to do, aside from investigating the affairs of corporations, in order to determine whether they are conducting themselves in restraint of trade or with the object of establishing a monopoly. I now turn to those two features.

I take it that there is no Senator who seriously questions the propriety of giving to this commission the fullest powers of inquiry. Now, the first——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Does the Senator object to my reading a few sentences from the President's message covering the question of a trade commission?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection, but allow me to say to the Senator from Nevada that I am convinced that the purpose of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] in making his suggestion was to show that the President of the United States during the campaign had seemed to have little sympathy with government by commission.

Mr. CLAPP. And, Mr. President, also very little sympathy with the plan that had already been worked out by the Interstate Commerce Committee in a report prepared and signed by and largely the work of the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. CUMMINS. The truth is that his speeches during the campaign seemed to be, so far as they referred to this subject, a conscious and intentional criticism of the work of the Interstate Commerce Committee.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understood the President's criticism during the campaign to be with reference to the trade commission as proposed by the Progressive Party, which was a trade commission of a highly paternal character.

Mr. CUMMINS. That may be so.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And that it had no reference whatever to such a proposal as this or the proposal that was made by the Interstate Commerce Commission under the Taft administration.

Mr. CUMMINS. I supposed that his discussion of the matter during the campaign related largely to the investigation which had been conducted by the Interstate Commerce Committee.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understood it to be a reference to the Progressive program.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not understand that it referred to the report, because the report was not made until after the campaign.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think I can state, if the Senator will permit me, to what the President directed his criticism. It was the suggestion that there should be a commission which could pass upon the character of the conduct of certain trusts, permitting some of them supposed to be good trusts to continue, and to discriminate between good monopolies and bad monopolies. There may have been some other criticisms, but I know I have seen that criticism from him several times and heard it from him at the time personally.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I resume again and mention the two things in this bill which are apart from the inquisitorial power conferred upon the trade commission. The first is this—and I want Senators to give some attention to it, because I regard it as one of the most valuable and helpful additions to our legislation:

(e) In any suit in equity brought by or under the direction of the Attorney General as provided in the antitrust acts if the court finds for the complainant it may, upon its own motion or the motion of any party to such suit, refer the matter of the form of the decree to be entered to the commission as a master in chancery; whereupon the commission shall proceed in that capacity upon such notice to the parties and upon such hearing as the court may prescribe, and shall as speedily as practicable make report with its findings to the court, which report and findings having been made and filed shall be subject to the judicial procedure established for the consideration and disposition of a master's report and findings in equity cases.

I believe that, if this commission had been organized five years ago and had been given authority to deal with the subject as is suggested in this paragraph, we would have been spared a part of our humiliating experience in the administration of the antitrust law. In referring to the experience as a humiliating one, I am not disparaging the eminent court which rendered the decree which I have in mind; but I am referring to the obvious, apparent, confessed inadequacy and inability of any court to deal with these questions as they are presented in the way of the reorganization of corporations or the disintegration of corporations or the re-creation of a shattered unit of industry. No court can do that successfully. Its procedure, its processes, its information are not well fitted for that work; and in the Standard Oil Co. case, in the Union Pacific case, and in the American Tobacco Co. case, after the court had found that there had been a violation of the antitrust law and had proposed a reorganization or readjustment, instead of an injunction dissolving and disintegrating the property and requiring its sale, if the court could have referred to a skilled as well as patriotic and trained body of men the form of the decree to be entered in each of these cases, I venture to say that we would have accomplished more than we have accomplished in these prosecutions. Such is one of the valuable suggestions of this measure. It not only is in harmony with the antitrust law, but it is an additional weapon to secure full and complete enforcement of the antitrust law.

I read now another provision:

Wherever a restraining order or an interlocutory or final decree has heretofore been entered or shall hereafter be entered against any defendant or defendants in any suit brought by the United States to prevent and restrain any violation of the antitrust acts, the commission shall have power, and it shall be its duty, upon the application of the Attorney General, to make investigation of the manner in which the order or decree has been or is being carried out, and as to whether the same has been or is being violated, and what, if any, further order, decree, or relief is advisable. It shall transmit to the Attorney General a report embodying its findings as a result of any such investigation with such recommendations for further action as it may deem advisable, and the report shall be made public in the discretion of the commission.

I believe the organization of the body of men here proposed can be of vast benefit in the enforcement of the law through the exercise of the power I have just read. It is impossible for the Department of Justice to watch with the daily care that is necessary the processes of these great industrial organizations and ascertain whether they are complying with the decrees that have been entered against them. It is not fair or even proper work for the Department of Justice, while it is clearly well fitted for the trade commission.

I now come to the only part of this bill which has hitherto received any attention at all. All these parts which plainly make for the public good, which are plainly intended to better the administration of the antitrust law, are forgotten, and our thought is constantly centered upon section 5, which does introduce a new substantive law. So far we have had no new substantive law. So far the bill concerns itself with the enforcement of the law already in existence. We come now to raise a new standard of conduct. We come to announce a new rule to govern the operations of all corporations and all trade associations.

I say in the beginning that I am not entirely satisfied with the phraseology of this section. I should like to see it amended in some of its provisions, but I am heartily in favor of its central idea. I am not disturbed in the least degree by the earnest assertions, here and elsewhere, that it is unconstitutional, that it delegates legislative power, or that it prescribes a rule of conduct so uncertain and so vague that it can not be enforced.

Mark you, my consideration of it will relate entirely to its enforcement in a civil proceeding. Those who have preceded me have seemed to overlook the well-known principle that there may be a rule of conduct entirely adequate in civil proceedings that may fall when it is tested by the more rigid and inexorable law of criminal proceedings. A man's rights with regard to property and the rights of his property may be affected by a rule which would be overthrown if it were attempted to deprive him of his liberty by the application of the rule. I do not say that it would not be sufficient in a criminal sense, but I have no doubt whatsoever of its sufficiency in a civil sense.

I read now the substantive part of this section:

> That unfair competition in commerce is hereby declared unlawful.

It is said that "unfair competition" does not prescribe a standard of conduct, a rule of law. That has been assumed by those who have directed their arguments against the section. It has been assumed rather than proven. It has been suggested that we ought to make it more certain by giving it a definition.

I challenge anyone here to give any definition of "unfair competition" that will be as certain, as easily understood, as surely applied, as the words themselves. They are understandable. The business community knows what "unfair competition" is. I will not assert that there may not be and will not be difference of opinion with regard to whether or not a particular act is an act of unfair competition; but that difference of opinion exists with respect to every assertion of constituted authority. If it were not so, our courts would have little to do.

Let us see. Before resorting to certain authorities that I intend to present to the Senate I desire to recall to your minds certain analogous words and phrases that have found their way into the statutes both of the United States and of the several States.

For instance, in Connecticut there is a statute which prescribes as a standard of conduct or a rule of law "unfair use." That has been under inquiry by the courts, and has been construed by the courts of Connecticut. The phrase has been held sufficient to satisfy the demands of the law. It was so held in Mason v. Hoyle (56 Conn.).

In the California code there will be found the phrase "unfair proceeding," and that also has been applied and has been found to be sufficient. It related, as I remember it, to certain methods in judicial procedure. If "unfair proceeding" can be well enough understood to guide the conduct of men, it seems to me it ought to be conceded that the same thing is true as to "unfair competition," with its wider application. That is to say, its application is wider in the sense that it has been known for years and years, and has gradually taken on in the minds of the business world a certain sense which is easily recognized, but which it would be as impossible to define as it would be to recite all the acts which would constitute unfair competition.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator from Iowa kindly tell us the nature of the statute in which the expression was used and the character of the case in which the question was presented and the significance given to the expression?

Mr. CUMMINS. I had but little time, and I did not note on my memorandum the character of the proceedings; but I will give the Senator a reference to it, so that it can be easily examined. The case to which I refer is In re Loomis Estate (71 Pac. Rep., p. 171).

In the statutes of Minnesota—I had rather hoped the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] would be here——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator give me the page of the case in Fifty-sixth Connecticut to which he referred?

Mr. CUMMINS. Page 255.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. Under the statute of Minnesota there is used, with reference to the standard of responsibility, liability, and fidelity the word "unfaithfulness." I think it relates to the conditions under which officers or directors of banks or, possibly, other corporations, will become liable to one who may be injured. That word, used in the statute, was considered in the case of Bank v. Harper (61 Minn., 375), and in Rice v. Warehouse Co. (92 Northwestern Reporter, p. 225). Now, if you can set up a standard of law by the use of the word "unfaithfulness," what will those who doubt the sufficiency of "unfair competition" allege against the former phrase? Is not "unfaithfulness" quite as vague, quite as uncertain, as "unfair competition?"

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Does the Senator know whether the duties of bank directors in that State were defined by law, and whether they had taken an oath to perform those duties faithfully?

Mr. CUMMINS. I suppose their duties are designated just as clerks' duties are. A corporation has certain powers. The cashier of a bank has the exercise of certain of those powers, the president certain of those powers, and the members of the board of directors certain of them. This word was used with regard to prescribing the rule by which it should be determined whether an officer or a director of the bank was liable for not responding in full measure to his duty, not performing his duty in the way in which it should have been performed; but of course there was no recitation of the different acts which constituted the duty either of the director or of the officer.

The Congress of the United States in 1857, in an act of Congress with regard to overflowed and swamp lands, used the words "unfit for cultivation." What is the difference between that standard and the standard prescribed by the words "unfair competition"? Wherein is "unfit for cultivation" more certain, direct, sure, than the words "unfair competition"? It required a great deal of construction to reach finally a conclusion with respect to the meaning of the words "unfit for cultivation"; and yet no better words than those could have been devised to accomplish the purpose which Congress had in mind.

I have omitted to say that it will be conceded, I assume, that any rule of conduct in civil matters sufficient for a court to apply is sufficient for a commission to apply. There is no difference, in other words, between the quality of the standard or the rule which we create for a court and that which we create for a commission. In either case the legislative will must be expressed. We can not delegate our legislative powers to either a commission or a court.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. Does not the Senator think that words which are designed to prescribe a standard of conduct should be more precise than words which describe a condition of property?

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President; I do not see any difference between the two things. In either case, either a court or a tribunal appointed for the purpose must take the standard, and, by it, judge of the lawfulness of some act. If the standard or test is so vague and uncertain that it can not be applied, then the law is void; but if either court or commission can take the standard—that is, can take the legislative will—and apply it with reasonable certainty to the affairs of mankind, the demand of the law is met.

There have been two cases decided under the phrase "unfit for cultivation." I do not mean to say that in any of these cases the question of whether they did prescribe a sufficient rule was raised. I only mean to say that the courts have taken these phrases and have used them as rules of conduct and have decided cases upon them.

I now refer to a phrase that is very familiar to all lawyers—"undue influence."

What is "undue influence"? I suppose that if we had proposed to put that phrase in this law it would have been instantly assailed as insufficient; but "undue influence" is the phraseology of many laws in many States. I am not now speaking merely of the words of courts as they have decided cases. I am speaking of the use of the words in a substantive way—in statutes—for the purpose of guiding courts and officers of the law.

The words "undue influence" are a sufficient rule of law, and as such have been applied in hundreds of cases. I have many of them cited on my memorandum; and I think there never has been a claim by even the most technical lawyer that they do not furnish a rule of law sufficient to guide and direct men in their affairs.

Why, take the antitrust statute as it is now. What is the rule of the antitrust statute now as declared by the Supreme Court in the Standard Oil Co. case and in the American Tobacco Co. case, the two cases in which the minority opinion of one decade became at last the majority opinion in another? I am not quarreling with the construction which the Supreme Court gave to the antitrust statute; but as it is now it declares that every contract, combination, and so forth, which unduly restrains trade or commerce shall be unlawful. That is the law of this country at the present time. So we have now a statute which under the interpretation of the highest court in the land reads, "That undue restraint of trade or commerce is unlawful."

Can anyone explain the difference between "undue" and "unfair," so far as this particular objection is concerned? What is "undue restraint of trade"? It is that restraint of trade which, according to the best judgment of the civilization of which it is a part, obstructs unnecessarily and unreasonably the channels of business. What is "unfair competition"? Unfair competition is made up of those methods which have not for their object the profit of the person who practices them so much as the destruction of the competitor against whom the methods are used.

But I proceed. "Undue concealment" is another phrase of the law found in more than one statute.

"Unconscionable" is also a favored declaration of the law, not as a description of a particular act done, but as a guide to future acts to be performed. If there is any more latitude in "unfair" than there is in "unconscionable," my mind is utterly unable to grasp it.

"Undue prejudice" is used in the statutes of more than one State, notably in the statute of Mississippi.

"Unequal," in the constitution of Oklahoma, was construed as synonymous with "unfair."

"Unjustly" is a word that is often used in defining or declaring a rule of conduct, and it has been applied a great many times. Among others I find the case of McGear v. Young, 44 Southwestern Reporter, 194. If "unjustly" is certain, is "unfair" less certain?

"Unjustly" and "surreptitiously" both occur in the Revised Statutes of the United States, in section 4920; and they were construed in Yates v. Houston, 8 Appeal Cases, 93.

"Unreasonably" is a word that is often used in the statutes; and I am not now speaking of rates charged by common carriers.

Mr. President, "unreasonable delay" is a common expression of the law. I mean now in the substantive law in which standards of conduct are fixed. Those words will be found in the statute of Illinois, and in the statutes of Colorado, and one or two other States.

"Unreasonable distress," used with reference to the levying of a landlord's warrant has been held a rule of law sufficient to sustain the statute.

"Unreasonable time" has also been sustained. That term occurs in the statutes of Ohio, Virginia, and North Dakota. "Unsafe" is another rule of conduct that has been maintained. It is found at least in the statutes of Wisconsin.

"Unsound mind" is another rule of law. Mark you, I am not recalling these phrases as used by the court to describe a particular act which has come before the court for adjudication. I am recalling them only from statutes in which they have been used for prescribing a standard or a rule of conduct for future guidance. "Unsound mind" is the most illusive, the most uncertain, the most difficult standard to apply of all these phrases which I have discovered. When I remember the difference of opinion which exists among men who are competent to judge with regard to the soundness of mind of a particular person in doing a particular thing, I am glad to be fortified by discovering that there is in the statutes of this country a rule so vague as that. But it is there, and it is a part of the law of the land, and we ought not to shrink therefore, so far as the legal proposition is concerned, when we come to consider the sufficiency of the words "unfair competition."

"Unusual covering." We used that ourselves in the tariff law of 1890, and we have used it since. I have not examined the tariff law of last year to see whether my Democratic friends have incorporated it there, but if they have not it is a departure from the old practice. "Unusual covering," to prescribe a rule for the customhouse officers with respect to the wrapping or boxing or covering of anything imported into the United States. There has been no difficulty about administering that law. No one has ever complained that the word "unusual" made it hard to discover whether a particular commodity or importation was in the form in which it ought to be received at a certain rate.

"Unusual means." That phrase occurs in the Wisconsin statute; "unusual number" in Massachusetts. "Unusual punishment" is very common in constitutions as well as in law. "Wholesome milk." What is wholesome milk? Yet that phrase has been held sufficient to sustain a law.

"Unworthy." The word "unworthy" in the civil law, and now in the law of Louisiana, is sufficient to constitute a guide and standard of conduct and to sustain a law. I must add that the word "unworthy" in and of itself might not be sufficient, but when it is coupled up with the subject to which it is applied it then becomes sufficiently definite; and it is used, as suggested in the civil law, in connection with succession—unworthy of succeeding to the estate of the ancestor. You will find it now in the civil code of Louisiana.

"Urgent necessity" is a phrase found in the law of some of the States, and notably in Rhode Island.

These are, I think, very helpful and instructive comparisons. They are very helpful to one who really wants to strengthen the law. Of course, if we do not want to strengthen the law, it is not difficult to find technical objections to any phraseology.

Mr. KERN. Would the Senator from Iowa like to yield now for an executive session?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; I would be very glad to yield for that purpose.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10528) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes; recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28 and agrees to the same with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 31, 226, and 227; agrees to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PAGE of North Carolina, Mr. SISSON, and Mr. DAVIS, managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOSEPH F. JOHNSON,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
JAMES W. GOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments numbered 1 and 30. They are the only amendments still in dispute.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be until to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

Mr. SMOOT. For that particular day?

Mr. KERN. Yes; for that particular day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

The motion was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that we proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII and consider only bills to which there is no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will announce the first bill on the calendar.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1240) to establish the legislative reference bureau of the Library of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

LANDS OF FORT ASSINNIBOINE MILITARY RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 655) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to survey the lands of the abandoned Fort Assinniboine Military Reservation and open the same to settlement was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to inquire who made the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I have no particular objection to the bill, but I understand that the two Senators from Montana have not yet agreed upon it.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, yes. There never has been any disagreement about it at all. It was reported very early in the session, and we have been very faithfully waiting an opportunity at all times to get consideration for it. I know of no objection to the bill from any quarter.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I have been misinformed. I misunderstood the situation or I never would have made an objection before.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator from Utah that the commissioner asked that action be deferred until he could give some attention to a substitute proposed, but no proceedings have been taken. I should like very much to have the bill considered.

Mr. SMOOT. I withdraw the objection, Mr. President.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been read, and the amendments of the committee will be stated.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is this the joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell or lease certain public lands to the Republic Coal Co.?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it is Senate bill 655, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to survey the lands of the abandoned Fort Assinniboine Military Reservation and open the same to settlement.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to hear the bill read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was, in section 2, page 2, line 1, before the word "classes," to strike out "two" and to insert "four"; in line 2, after the word "lands," to insert "third, coal lands; and, fourth, mineral lands"; in line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty"; and in line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That before said lands are opened to entry the Secretary of the Interior shall have said lands classified by an inspector or special agent of the Department of the Interior into four classes—first, agricultural lands; second, timber lands; third, coal lands; and fourth, mineral lands—and in making such classification all lands susceptible of cultivation that do not contain in excess of 50,000 feet of merchantable timber to the 40-acre tract shall be classified as agricultural lands, and all lands containing in excess of 50,000 feet of merchantable timber to the 40-acre tract shall be classified as timber lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 12, after the word "State," to insert "but not to entry or location under sections 2306 and 2307 of the Revised Statutes," so as to read:

SEC. 3. That when so classified all of said lands classed as agricultural land shall be opened to settlement and entry under the homestead laws of the United States, but not to entry or location under sections 2306 and 2307 of the Revised Statutes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 2, after the word "aforesaid," in line 18, to insert the following proviso:

And provided further, That any rights which may have attached to any of said lands under any of the public land laws of the United States prior to the passage of this act may be perfected and the land so affected may be patented upon proof of compliance with the laws under which such rights so attached: Provided further, That lands classified as timber lands shall be disposed of under rules and regulations to be provided by the Secretary of the Interior with the authority to dispose of the timber and land separately when deemed advisable: Provided further, That the lands classified as coal lands shall be subject to disposition under the homestead laws as herein provided for lands classified as agricultural, but those making entry of such lands must agree to a reservation to the United States of the coal deposits therein and of the right in the United States, or those claiming through the United States, to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, and such coal deposits shall be disposed of as provided by section 3 of the act of June 22, 1910 (36 Stat., p. 583), but no purchase of the coal deposits shall confer any right to the surface of the lands excepting such as is necessary to the mining and removal of the coal deposits: Provided further, That lands classified as mineral shall be disposed of under the mining laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 4, line 11, after the word "law," to strike out "at the fixed price thereof," and to insert "at the price fixed therefor by the former entry; but in all cases the full amount of purchase money must be paid on or before the offer of final proof"; and in line 21, after the word "commutation," to insert "but in instances where commutation is permissible hereunder, the entryman shall pay, in addition to the price fixed for entry, the sum of $1.25 per acre, as consideration for the privilege," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That entrymen upon said lands shall, in addition to the regular land office fees, pay the sum of $1.25 per acre for said land, such payments to be made as follows: Twenty-five cents per acre at the time of making entry and 25 cents per acre each and every year thereafter until the full sum of $1.25 per acre shall have been paid: Provided, That for a period of six months subsequent to the date on which the lands are opened to settlement entrymen upon said lands shall, in addition to the regular land office fees, pay the sum of $2.50 per acre for said land, such payments to be made as follows: Fifty cents per acre at the time of making entry and 50 cents per acre each and every year thereafter until the full sum of $2.50 per acre shall have been paid. In case any entryman fails to make annual payments, or any of them when due, all right in and to the lands covered by his entry shall cease; and any payments theretofore made shall be forfeited and the entry canceled, and the land shall be again subject to entry under the provisions of the homestead law at the price fixed therefor by the former entry; but in all cases the full amount of purchase money must be paid on or before the offer of final proof: Provided, however, That the commutation provision of the general homestead law shall be applicable to all persons making homestead entry on said land under the provisions of this act, save and excepting entries made hereunder in accordance with the provisions of the enlarged homestead act, approved February 19, 1909, which shall not be subject to commutation, but in instances where commutation is permissible hereunder, the entryman shall pay, in addition to the price fixed for entry, the sum of $1.25 per acre, as consideration for the privilege.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 5, line 14, after the word "fort," to insert "except the guardhouse at said post"; and in line 20, after the name "Assinniboine," to insert "except the guardhouse at said post," so as to read:

SEC. 6. That the Thirteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana having enacted a law for the purpose of establishing an agricultural, manual training, or other educational or public institution upon the present site of Fort Assinniboine, Mont., duly approved by the governor of Montana, and to be in full force and effect after the 4th day of July, 1913, and upon the transfer to the State of Montana by the President of the United States of 2,000 acres of land, situate in said abandoned Fort Assinniboine Reservation and embracing the military buildings at said abandoned fort, except the guardhouse at said post; the President of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to transfer, grant, and set over to the State of Montana all right, title, and interest of, in, and to the said 2,000 acres of land hereby reserved, embracing the buildings at Fort Assinniboine, except the guardhouse at said post, upon payment therefor by the State of Montana to the United States of the sum of $2.50 per acre.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 5, line 22, after the word "acre," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the State of Montana shall be required to make its selection of 2,000 acres within one year from the date of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, page 6, line 3, after the word "Reservation," to strike out "shall not be subject to entry, but" and to insert "except those portions thereof classified as coal or mineral lands," so as to read:

SEC. 7. That sections 16 and 36 of the land in each township within said abandoned Fort Assinniboine Military Reservation, except those portions thereof classified as coal or mineral lands, shall be reserved for the use of the common schools of the State of Montana, and are hereby granted to the State of Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, page 6, after the name "Montana," in line 6, to insert the following:

Provided, That the State may, if it so elects within one year from the date of the passage of this act, accept, subject to the reservation in the United States of the coal deposits therein, the portion of said sections 16 and 36 classified as coal lands, in full satisfaction of the grant herein made for common schools: Provided, That for all lands lost to the State because classified as coal or mineral indemnity may be taken, as provided for in sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, page 6, after the word "east," in line 22, to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That in case of failure of Mary A. Herron, or her heirs, to make entry within six months from the date of the passage of this act, the lands will become subject to settlement and entry in accordance with the provisions of section 4 of this act, the price to be fixed by the period of entry reckoned from the date of the expiration of the reservation in favor of Mary A. Herron and her heirs.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana whether there has been any Senator especially objecting to the consideration of this bill heretofore?

Mr. WALSH. I have never heard of anyone doing so.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It was early on the calendar, and some Senator has evidently been asking that it go over. I did not know whether or not it was a general objection made by some Senator. I myself have no objection to the bill; I merely wish to know whether any other Senator has any special objection to it. I do not know whether or not it ought to pass.

Mr. WALSH. I do not know of anyone who objects to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell or lease certain public lands to the Republic Coal Co., a corporation, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution goes over.

The bill (S. 2242) making it unlawful for any Member of Congress to serve on or solicit funds for any political committee, club, or organization was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that that bill be transferred to the Calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHAFROTH. What is the object of that?

Mr. SMOOT. It is a bill which will take considerable time to discuss, and it can be brought up under Rule IX when there is time for the Senate to discuss it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

The bill (S. 2651) providing for the purchase and disposal of certain lands containing kaolin, kaolinite, fuller's earth, and other minerals within portions of Indian reservations heretofore opened to settlement and entry, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it seems to me that all of the bills that take half the time when the call of the calendar is in progress under Rule VIII should go over under Rule IX.

Mr. WARREN. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. CLAPP. Then, it would save this endless repetition. Wherever we take up the calendar half the time is spent in calling bills which have uniformally been objected to when they have been called. If they should go to Rule IX that would end their coming up except when they might be brought up on motion.

Mr. THOMAS. I suggest that this particular bill go over because of the absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. SMOOT. I do not believe there will be an objection as to this bill when the Senator from South Dakota is here, provided certain amendments are made; but the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] is perfectly correct in the statement which he has just made.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if a bill is transferred to Rule IX, whether it takes the same relative position on the calendar under Rule IX that it had under Rule VIII?

Mr. CLAPP. No; it would go on the list under Rule IX as of the date when it was so transferred; but inasmuch as these bills after they go to Rule IX can only be brought up on motion, it really does not make much difference in what order they stand on the calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. SHAFROTH. After 1 o'clock has come, as to the bills on the calendar under Rule VIII, they can be taken upon on motion, and there is a right we might lose by placing bills on the calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think such a transfer changes that right at all. The only difference would be, of course, that if the bill goes under Rule IX, it takes an affirmative vote to again bring it up. I do think as to bills—I am not now referring to the bill in which the Senator from South Dakota is interested—that are put on this calendar, and which, day after day, we pass over when objection is made, it would be better to clear the calendar under Rule VIII of such bills instead of calling them every time we take up the calendar under this rule.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The resolution (S. Res. 156) limiting expenditures for telegrams sent or received by Senators was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that that may go to the calendar under Rule IX. We can get at it there any time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution goes to the calendar under Rule IX.

The resolution (S. Res. 84) providing that any Senator, upon his own request, may be recorded and counted as present in order to constitute a quorum was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over under Rule IX, Mr. President.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I object to its going over under Rule IX.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, I object to its present consideration, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution, being objected to, goes over.

The resolution (S. Res. 218) proposing an amendment to the standing rules of the Senate was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 26) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KERN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3023) relating to the duties of registers of United States land offices and the publication in newspapers of official land-office notices was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is absent, and on that account I ask that the bill go over. I have myself no objection to the bill, I will say.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 94) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to investigate the condition of trade in China, for the purpose of determining the desirability of establishing there a permanent exposition of the products of the United States of America, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that be passed over.

Mr. POMERENE. I hope the Senator will not insist upon his objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I insist upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2425) to authorize the Roanoke River Development Co. to construct and maintain a dam across the Roanoke River in Mecklenburg County, in the State of Virginia, approximately 20 miles below the town of Clarksville, in said State, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3971) to provide for a permanent exhibit of the resources of the States of the Union in or near Washington, D. C., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KERN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 10) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, fixing the time for the convening of Congress and commencement of the terms of the President, Vice President, Senators, and Representatives, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that go over.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I have had a notice on the calendar as to that joint resolution since the 2d of last March, and I want to get a hearing for it.

Mr. SMOOT. I know there are Senators who are not here to-day who desire to speak upon it, and I do not think we need to spend any time discussing it now, because I shall object to its consideration to-day.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, I ask unanimous consent that, after the consideration of the river and harbor bill and after the consideration of the trade commission bill——

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator prefers a request for unanimous consent the roll will have to be called; we will not be able to secure the presence of a quorum, and will have to adjourn.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well; I will not make the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 254) to create a special committee of five Senators to assist the Interstate Commerce Commission in investigating certain facts regarding the methods and practices of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I think that resolution may as well go over under Rule IX. It has come up and been objected to over and over again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the resolution going to the calendar under Rule IX? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 392) to create in the War Department and Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "the Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 121) to provide that petty officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service shall receive the rank or rating and the pay of the next higher enlisted grade, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have some amendments to propose to that bill, but I do not have them at hand, and therefore I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6282) to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. I am very anxious to get final action on that measure, but I agreed with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] that I would not call it up in his absence, and therefore I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6827) to amend an act entitled "An act to change the name of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service to the Public Health Service, to increase the pay of officers of said service, and for other purposes," approved August 14, 1912, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2902) to reduce fees in the United States district courts, to fix the salaries of the clerks of such courts, to increase the mileage and per diem of witnesses and jurymen therein, and to repeal section 840 of the Revised Statutes and all other conflicting laws, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4161) to prohibit the importation and entry of goods, wares, and merchandise made in whole or in part by convict, pauper, or detained labor, or made in whole or in part from materials which have been made in whole or in part or in any manner manipulated by convict or prison labor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 9318) to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, entitled "An act to establish postal savings depositories for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7967) to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing a Postal Savings System, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS.

The resolution (S. Res. 289) requesting the President to inform the Senate what "other matters of even greater delicacy and nearer consequence" are referred to in his message of March 5, 1914, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I suggest that Senate resolution 289 might as well go over under Rule IX. It relates to a matter which has been considered and disposed of by the Senate. I think it ought not to be on the calendar at all.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I hardly think measures ought to be sent to the calendar under Rule IX in the absence of the Senators who are interested in them.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. As the Senator will observe, this resolution concerns a matter in connection with the repeal of the exemption clause of the Panama Canal act, which has been disposed of. It is a resolution of inquiry and can not serve any useful purpose on the calendar. It might as well be stricken from the calendar, but I do not care to make that motion.

Mr. KERN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought he was referring to the bill following that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; I refer to Order of Business No. 270, Senate resolution 289.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator move that the bill be indefinitely postponed?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not want to make that motion in the absence of the Senator who introduced the resolution. I think the object will be accomplished if it is placed on the calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the resolution will go to the calendar under Rule IX.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

The bill (S. 2616) to promote the efficiency of the Public Health Service was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. SWANSON. I hope the Senator will not object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I have a number of amendments which I intend to propose to the bill which I have brought to the attention of the head of the service. I do not have the amendments at hand. If I had them here, I would be glad to have the bill considered and I would offer the amendments to-day.

Mr. SWANSON. This bill has gone over a number of times, and I hope it will soon be considered.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to inquire of the Senator from Utah whether we are going to consider any bills on the calendar or whether the calendar is being called merely for amusement?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows, if he has been here, that up to this time the bills which have gone over have done so on the objection of Senators; but it will not be long now until we reach bills which have not been considered or objected to heretofore.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator, then, advise me where those bills are upon the calendar?

Mr. SMOOT. I think they will commence with the next bill following this.

Mr. SWANSON. I hope the Senator will not object to the bill to promote the efficiency of the Public Health Service.

Mr. SMOOT. As I have said to the Senator, I do not object because I desire that the bill be not acted upon, but because I have not at hand the amendments which I desire to offer.

SADDLE MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 531) to set apart certain lands in the State of Oregon as a public park, to be known as the Saddle Mountain National Park, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KERN. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PATENTS TO TOWN LOTS PURCHASED AT PUBLIC SALE.

The bill (H. R. 4938) providing for the issuance of patents to transferees of town lots purchased from the United States at public sale in certain cases was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in all cases where town lots were sold by the United States at public sale, and the purchaser at such sale had transferred his interest in any such lot prior to the 11th of October, 1911, and patent has not been issued in the name of the original purchaser, the Commissioner of the General Land Office may issue a patent in the name of the transferee where full payment of the purchase price has been made and satisfactory evidence of the transfer has been furnished if it be shown that the original purchaser is dead, or that after due inquiry his whereabouts can not be ascertained, and that the instrument of transfer given by the original purchaser has been lost or destroyed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MINERAL LANDS IN INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to call attention to Calendar No. 99, being the bill (S. 2651) providing for the purchase and disposition of certain lands containing kaolin, kaolinite, fuller's earth, and other minerals within portions of Indian reservations heretofore opened to settlement and entry. I understand the bill was reached during my absence from the Chamber. I have just come in. I should like to have that bill considered by the Senate.

I will say, Mr. President, that the bill has already been considered as in Committee of the Whole. The amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], to which there was some objection, has been withdrawn, and the bill as amended as in Committee of the Whole is ready, as I understand, to be reported to the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. If the amendment that was offered by the Senator from Washington has been withdrawn, then I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I withdraw my objection to the bill. I asked to have it go over simply because the Senator from South Dakota was not in the Chamber at the time it was called.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota whether the entire amendment offered by the Senator from Washington was withdrawn or whether only the proviso contained in his amendment was withdrawn?

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that the RECORD will show that the entire amendment to section 2 of the bill was withdrawn.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have no objection to it. Can the Secretary inform me what is the status of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended. The Senator from Colorado would like to know the status of the bill.

The SECRETARY. The committee struck out all after the enacting clause and inserted certain words printed in italics. There are three prints.

Mr. SHAFROTH. My recollection is that a provision contained in section 2 was withdrawn. I do not know whether or not it was all withdrawn, but my recollection is that the provision in section 2, reading as follows, was withdrawn:

Provided, That upon every producing mine developed thereon the Secretary of the Interior shall levy and collect a reasonable royalty at a rate to be fixed by him, the proceeds thereof to be paid into the tribal funds of the Indians for whose benefit said reservation was made.

If that is withdrawn, I have no objection to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is withdrawn.

Mr. STERLING. My understanding is that the entire amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Was the whole section withdrawn, or only that paragraph or proviso?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Section 2 is withdrawn. The bill is composed of only one section.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether this bill comes with a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. STERLING. I think it did come with a unanimous report from the committee.

Mr. PAGE. And these amendments were all considered?

Mr. STERLING These amendments were carefully considered. The original bill was amended in committee, and then later in Committee of the Whole at the suggestion of the committee. The Senator will see that it refers to the disposition of lands containing the minerals kaolinite, fuller's earth, and so forth, on Indian reservation lands, no provision having been made in any previous law for the disposition of this class of minerals. I will say that it is of considerable importance to my State, because they think they have the mineral fuller's earth there.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to inquire whether the rights of the Indians in this matter can be in any way adversely affected?

Mr. STERLING. I think not. Provision is made in the bill for the deposit in the Treasury of the funds realized from the lands for the same purpose for which the proceeds arising from the disposal of other lands within the reservation in which such mineral-bearing lands are located were deposited.

Mr. PAGE. May I inquire whether the Senator thinks this bill is one which was properly referred to the Committee on Public Lands, rather than to the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. STERLING. I think it was properly referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That all lands containing the minerals kaolin, kaolinite, fuller's earth, china clay, and ball clay, within such parts of Indian reservations as have heretofore been opened to settlement and entry under acts of Congress which did not authorize the disposal of such mineral lands, shall be open to exploration and purchase and be disposed of under the general provisions of the mining and coal-land laws of the United States, and the proceeds arising therefrom shall be deposited in the Treasury for the same purpose for which the proceeds arising from the disposal of other lands within the reservation in which such mineral-bearing lands are located were deposited: Provided, That the same person, association, or corporation shall not locate or enter more than one claim, not exceeding 160 acres in area, hereunder: Provided further, That none of the lands or mineral deposits, the disposal of which is herein provided for, shall be disposed of at less price than that fixed by the applicable mining or coal-land laws, and in no instance at less than their appraised value for agricultural purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for the purchase and disposal of certain lands containing the minerals kaolin, kaolinite, fuller's earth, china clay, and ball clay, within portions of Indian reservations heretofore opened to settlement and entry."

CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. I asked that Order of Business No. 86, Senate bill 2242, should be transferred to Rule IX.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That has already been done.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but I ask that that action may be reconsidered and that it may take its place under Rule VIII, at the request of several Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD CO.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I make the same request with regard to Order of Business No. 208, Senate resolution 254, which was passed over and transferred to Rule IX in my absence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

CAPT. HAROLD L. JACKSON.

The bill (S. 3768) to restore Capt. Harold L. Jackson, retired, to the active list of the Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President to restore Capt. Harold L. Jackson, retired, to the active list of the Army of the United States with the same rank and relative position he would hold if he had not been retired: Provided, That such restoration shall be in temporary excess of the number authorized only until such time as a vacancy shall occur in the grade of major of Infantry: Provided further, That prior to his restoration to the active list this officer shall have passed an examination for promotion to the grade of major of Infantry, as prescribed by regulations of the War Department under the terms of the act of Congress approved October 1, 1890.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I was necessarily at the meeting of the Foreign Relations Committee, and I do not understand what became of Order of Business No. 109, Senate resolution 84.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It went over on objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The unanimous-consent agreement under which we are now working is that one objection shall carry a measure over?

The VICE PRESIDENT. One objection carries it over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am very sorry anybody objected to that resolution, but of course under the agreement the objection carries it over.

S. W. LANGHORNE AND H. S. HOWELL.

The bill (S. 2334) for the relief of S. W. Langhorne and the legal representatives of H. S. Howell was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I wish to say a word with respect to the bill before the Senator insists upon his objection.

The matter was up before the Senate some time ago upon a call of the calendar, and in the course of the consideration an inquiry was made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] as to whether it was one of the cases that arose when it was the practice of the Government to require the land officers themselves to provide quarters. The Senator said at the time that he had no objection to it unless it fell within that class, and if it did he wanted to object. I have the report before me now, and I trust the Senator will——

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator what time this was?

Mr. WALSH. It was from November, 1885, to July, 1890.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I object to the consideration of the bill. I know that there have been before the Committee on Claims at least a dozen or more such claims, and they have all——

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator that the land officers succeeding these gentlemen were placed in exactly the same position, and they sued and recovered a judgment against the United States for the rent of the offices. The case is referred to in the report here. It is the case of United States against Swigett, reported in Eighty-third Federal Reporter, page 97. So the right of the parties under the law to recover in this action has actually been adjudicated.

The fact is, as disclosed here, that the Senator is in error. I am sure he would not object to it otherwise. The report says:

The reason for withholding such allowance seems to have been the inadequacy of the congressional appropriation for contingent expenses of district land offices to meet the expense of rent for all of those offices, and hence the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion under section 2255, Revised Statutes, withheld such allowance from local officers whose annual compensation in salary, fees, and commissions reached the maximum of $3,000.

Subsequently two other land officers were appointed, and they were in the same situation. They sued in the Federal court of Helena and recovered, as stated in the report to which I have invited the attention of the Senator. So the obligation of the Government of the United States in this matter has been already adjudicated by the court.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that the case is exactly the same as at least a dozen other cases, and on several occasions I have tried to have an omnibus bill to cover them all. I am quite sure the Senator from Kansas, if he were here, would insist upon that. Therefore I object to the consideration of this bill at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN T. HAINES.

The bill (S. 543) to correct the military record of John T. Haines was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that John T. Haines, deceased, who was a captain in the Eleventh Regiment United States Cavalry, and who was nominated by the President for appointment as major of Cavalry to rank from the 3d day of March, 1911, said nomination being confirmed by the Senate after the death of said Haines, which occurred after his nomination, shall be held and considered to have become a major of Cavalry in the service of the United States on the 3d day of March, 1911, and to have held that office until the date of his death; and the President is authorized to issue a commission as major of Cavalry in the name of John T. Haines with rank to date from March 3, 1911.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RADIUM-BEARING ORES.

The bill (S. 4405) to provide for and encourage the prospecting, mining, and treatment of radium-bearing ores in lands belonging to the United States, for the purpose of securing an adequate supply of radium for Government and other hospitals in the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CHIEF WARRANT OFFICERS IN REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The bill (S. 2806) relative to the appointment, pay, and rank of chief warrant officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may, under such regulations as he shall prescribe, appoint as chief warrant officer any warrant officer in the Revenue-Cutter Service who has served a total of not less than 15 years with credit in that service. Such chief warrant officer shall have the pay and allowances of a third lieutenant and shall rank as such, next after commissioned officers: Provided, That the number of such chief warrant officers shall not exceed five in each class: And provided further, That hereafter, in computing the length of service which shall entitle a warrant or petty officer to longevity pay or to be placed on waiting orders under the eighth section of the act approved April 16, 1908, entitled "An act to improve the efficiency of the personnel of the Revenue-Cutter Service," all creditable service in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Revenue-Cutter Service shall be included.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PERSONNEL OF THE REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The bill (S. 1802) construing the provisions of section 8 of the act entitled "An act to improve the efficiency of the personnel of the Revenue-Cutter Service," approved April 16, 1908, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator reporting the bill if a similar provision was not introduced, affecting naval officers, and killed in the Naval Committee?

Mr. RANSDELL. I can not say. This bill affects pilots only, and is favorably reported upon by the Treasury Department.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. This bill affects only seven men.

Mr. RANSDELL. It affects seven men who were pilots and who were excluded under a former ruling. The Treasury Department thinks the ruling was very unfair, and strongly recommends the passage of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. It may be perfectly appropriate to pass the bill, but——

Mr. RANSDELL. I have before me the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. He says it affects only these seven men who were pilots, and who performed the work which ordinarily entitles them to the same grade.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It involves an increase of only $2,214. It was thought to be manifest justice, and that better results would be obtained.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Utah that this bill is simply to correct an omission that was made in the act of 1908, where the word "pilot" was omitted. It is to put these men in the same class as the other enlisted men and give them the benefits of the bill.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is correct.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that in computing the length of service which shall entitle a warrant or petty officer to longevity pay under the eighth section of the act approved April 16, 1908, entitled "An act to improve the efficiency of the personnel of the Revenue-Cutter Service," all service rendered under the official designation of "pilot" in the Revenue-Cutter Service shall be included.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 6060), to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee (and other Senators). Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 8846), making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, and under the provisions of section No. 151 of the act approved March 3, 1911, commonly known as the Judicial Code, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ABANDONMENT OF DESTITUTE, INFIRM, OR AGED PARENTS.

The bill (S. 1653), providing against the abandonment of destitute, infirm, or aged parents, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever, being an adult resident of the District of Columbia and possessed of or able to earn means sufficient to provide maintenance, shelter, food, care, and clothing for his or her parent or parents within said District who is or are destitute of means of subsistence and unable, either by reason of old age, infirmity, or illness, or otherwise, to support himself or herself, neglects or refuses to maintain and supply such parent or parents with necessary maintenance, shelter, food, care, and clothing, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or be imprisoned in the workhouse of said District at labor for not less than three months nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment; and should a fine be imposed it may be directed by the court to be paid in whole or in part to such parent or parents or to the custodian of such parent or parents: Provided, That before the trial, with the consent of the defendant, or after conviction, instead of imposing the punishment hereinbefore provided, or in addition thereto, the court, in its discretion, having regard to the circumstances and to the financial ability or earning capacity of the defendant, shall have the power to make an order, which shall be subject to change by it from time to time as circumstances may require, directing the defendant to pay a certain sum weekly for the space of one year to the parent or parents, or to the custodian of such parent or parents, or to an organization or individual approved by the court as trustee, and to release the defendant from custody on probation for the space of one year upon his or her entering into a recognizance to the District of Columbia, with or without sureties, in such sum as the court may direct. The condition of the recognizance shall be such that if the defendant shall make his or her personal appearance in court whenever ordered to do so within the year, and shall further comply with the terms of the order and of any subsequent modification thereof, then the recognizance shall be void, otherwise of full force and effect. If the court be satisfied by information and due proof, under oath, that at any time during the year the defendant has violated the terms of such order, it may forthwith proceed with the trial of the defendant under the original charge, or sentence him or her under the original conviction, or enforce the original sentence, as the case may be. In case of forfeiture of a recognizance and enforcement thereof by execution, the sum recovered may, in the discretion of the court, be paid in whole or in part to the parent or parents, or to the custodian of such parent or parents.

SEC. 2. That proof of the circumstances or of neglect to furnish such parent or parents in destitute or necessitous circumstances necessary and proper food, clothing, or shelter shall be regarded as prima facie evidence that such neglect is willful.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the superintendent in charge of the workhouse of the District of Columbia, in which any person is confined on account of a sentence under this law, to certify at the end of each week the number of days' labor performed by said person so confined, and upon said certification the proper authorities of the District of Columbia shall pay over to the parent or parents, or to the custodian of such parent or parents, a sum equal to 50 cents for each day's labor performed by said person so confined; and all expenditures under the provision of this act shall be made and accounted for in the same manner as are other expenditures of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 4. That in any case where a parent has been or shall be committed to the Government Hospital for the Insane, and such parent is indigent or is in destitute or necessitous circumstances, the foregoing provision of this act shall apply: Provided, however, That in such cases the money collected as hereinbefore set forth shall be paid over and disbursed to the proper authorities of the District of Columbia toward the care and maintenance of the said insane person at the Government Hospital for the Insane.

SEC. 5. That the juvenile court of the District of Columbia is hereby given jurisdiction in all cases arising under this act, and shall have the powers necessary to carry this act into effect. Prosecutions under this act shall be had in the name of the District of Columbia upon information by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia or any of his assistants.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACQUISITION OF MONTICELLO.

The next business on the calendar was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 120) creating a joint committee of Congress, and authorizing said committee to acquire, by purchase or condemnation, the property known as Monticello, and embracing the former home of Thomas Jefferson and the family graveyard in which his remains were interred, with such lands and grounds appurtenant thereto as the committee shall find necessary in order to carry out the various public objects and purposes in said resolution set forth, all of said property being located in Albemarle County, Va.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT.

The bill (S. 3545) to provide for the highway-improvement work by the United States Department of Agriculture in cooperation with the highway departments of the several States was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURTON. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

CASUALTIES INCIDENT TO WAGE EARNERS.

The Senate resolution (S. Res. 68) directing the Secretary of Labor to investigate and report upon mortality incident to various wage earners was announced as next in order, and was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to investigate and report, as far as it is practicable, upon the mortality and the disability by accident or by disease incident to or resulting from the various occupations in which the wage earners of the United States are engaged.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator who has the resolution in charge if this investigation has not already been made and if we have not spent nearly $40,000 in printing the report?

Mr. SWANSON. It has not been made. I was chairman of the subcommittee that reported it to the full Committee on Education and Labor, and the Committee on Education and Labor directed it to be reported. It does not cost any more money. There is no appropriation made for it. The material has been nearly gathered by these insurance companies and casualty companies, and I think we can get the information without much expense to the Government. It has not been gathered in the way that it is desired, and it is the wish of insurance companies, labor organizations, and others to have these statistics systematized so as to form an idea as to the casualties which occur in gainful occupations.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if there is an appropriation carried in the resolution?

Mr. SWANSON. There is none.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is not this a part of the duty of the Secretary of Labor?

Mr. SWANSON. It has not been specialized in the enumeration of his duties and we felt that he should be directed to do this work; and the Department of Labor felt that the appropriation made could be utilized much better if this resolution were passed.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia if this matter has ever been before the Committee on Education and Labor?

Mr. SWANSON. I was chairman of the subcommittee that had the hearings on it. Then I reported it favorably to the Committee on Education and Labor. Then the committee was polled, and I think every member who was approached on the matter signed in favor of the report.

Mr. PAGE. I do not know that I oppose the measure, but I do not recall that the Committee on Education and Labor ever had it before it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I made a poll of the committee on the floor, and explained it to the Senator from Vermont, and he joined in signing the report.

Mr. PAGE. As I said, I do not remember it now. I only know that we did not have any hearings before the committee.

Mr. SWANSON. There were no hearings in the full committee. I was chairman of the subcommittee, and we had hearings fully on the matter and the people interested, the insurance companies, actuaries, labor organizations, and the department were heard, and there was no objection to the adoption of the resolution. No expense is incurred to the Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 93) authorizing and directing the Department of Labor to make an inquiry into the cost of living in the District of Columbia and to report thereon to Congress as early as practicable was announced as next in order.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Let the joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

Senate resolution 313, referring to the Court of Claims the bill (S. 1495) to compensate the Old Point Improvement Co. for the demolition and removal of the Hygeia Hotel property from the Government reservation at Old Point, Va., was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 4425) to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may go over to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

Senate resolution 312, requesting of the Secretary of War information as to expenditures upon rivers, harbors, and canals of the United States by the Government since the adoption of the Constitution, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] if that information is now necessary? I thought the Senator was in the Chamber. I ask that the resolution may go over. I do not think it is necessary now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

DOMMICK TAHENY AND JOHN W. MORTIMER.

The bill (S. 1058) for the relief of Dommick Taheny and John W. Mortimer was announced as next in order, and was read.

Mr. WALSH. Unless some one will explain the nature of the bill I am going to object to its consideration.

Mr. CLAPP. If the report shows the bill should pass that should be sufficient. The Senator objects, I assume, because the Senator in charge is not present.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Montana that there can be no question whatever about any claim bill that has been reported by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW]. I think it is a just claim or he never would have reported it to the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 6 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, July 1, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 30, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, amid the shifting scenes and rapidly changing conditions incident to the advancing civilization of our day, we pray for a closer walk with Thee, a broader conception of Thy plans and purposes; a keener perception of human nature, more of the Christ spirit that we may adjust ourselves to the new conditions and move forward without friction or strife; upholding the good, eliminating the evil; until brotherly love shall become the ruling passion in the hearts of all. That Thy kingdom may come and Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. OGLESBY, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. SUMNERS, for 10 days, on account of important business.

To. Mr. ASHBROOK, for 10 days, on account of important business.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 10523, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina calls up the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill and asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object. The statement, as I understand it, is only supplemental to the original statement.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The statement is supplemental to the original statement.

Mr. MANN. And the original statement under the present request would not be read.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. No; it would not.

Mr. MANN. I think as long as the House is going to act on the whole matter there ought to be something read that would cover the case, and I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 912).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10523) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 7, 9, 10, 11, 18, 19, 20, 24, 26, 36, 37, 38, 50, 51, 54, 59, 61, 64, 68, 77, 89, 90, 91, 92, 94, 97, 98, 99, 101, 103, 104, 105, 107, 109, 115, 122, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 150, 151, 152, 157, 161, 168, 169, 170, 171, 183, 187, 190, 191, 202, 203, 204, 212, 218, and 224.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 8, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 22, 25, 27, 29, 32, 33, 34, 35, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 52, 53, 55, 57, 58, 63, 67, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 75, 76, 79, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 93, 95, 96, 100, 108, 111, 114, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 123, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 138, 139, 140, 142, 143, 144, 145, 148, 149, 153, 155, 156, 159, 162, 163, 167, 172, 173, 174, 175, 179, 184, 186, 192, 193, 194, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 205, 207, 209, 210, 213, 217, 219, 220, 221, 222, and 225, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$115,610"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$13,034"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit all of the matter inserted by said amendment after the word "Columbia" in line 1; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For constructing a suitable viaduct and bridge to carry Benning Road over the tracks of the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co., and of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., in accordance with plans approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $110,000. And authority is hereby given said commissioners to acquire by purchase, or to condemn in accordance with existing law, the land necessary to carry out the construction authorized by this appropriation, and to construct said viaduct and bridge and the approaches thereto, and to reconstruct, grade, and pave, by day labor or otherwise, the streets, avenues, and ways changed in line or grade or newly created hereunder: Provided, That the cost of constructing said viaduct and bridge, including approaches thereto, shall be borne and paid one-half by said railroad companies in proportion to the widths of their respective rights of way, and the remaining one-half by the United States and the District of Columbia; and said sums shall be paid by said companies to the Treasurer of the United States, one half to the credit of the District of Columbia and the other half to the credit of the United States; and the same shall be valid and subsisting liens against the franchise and property of said Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co. and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., respectively, and shall be a legal indebtedness of said companies in favor of the District of Columbia, jointly for its use and the use of the United States as aforesaid; and the said lien or liens may be enforced in the name of the District of Columbia by bill in equity brought by the commissioners of said District in the Supreme Court of said District, or by any other lawful proceedings against the said Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co., or said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., or both; and any relocation in the line or change in the grade of the tracks of the Washington Railway & Electric Co. necessary to permit the completion in accordance with approved plans of the viaduct and bridge and approaches herein provided for shall be made by and at the cost of said railway company; and in the event of said railway company failing or refusing to do such work the same shall be done by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the cost to be paid from the appropriation for said bridge and viaduct and collected from said street railway company in the manner provided for in section 5 of "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia," approved June 11, 1878, and paid into the Treasury, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$142,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For paving with asphalt the north approach to the Highway Bridge across the Potomac River from Water Street to the west intersecting park driveway nearest to the Highway Bridge, a distance of about 1,900 feet, and for paving with granite block the balance of the north approach from the west intersecting driveway to the bridge structure and the south approach to the bridge, $27,000: Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to do this work with their portable asphalt plant if, in the judgment of the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, such work can be economically performed by the use of said plant: And provided further, That the said Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to transfer to the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds for the above work any granite blocks removed from streets in the District of Columbia whose roadways are authorized herein to be repaved with a smoother pavement, the cost of hauling the blocks so transferred from the streets to the site of the work to be charged against this appropriation."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$190,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 65: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$270,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 66: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: ": Provided, That this sum shall not be available for the payment of traveling or subsistence expenses"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"In all, for playgrounds, $43,265, which sum shall be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 78: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 78 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,000" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 80: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$2,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 88: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 88 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$425,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 102: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For the purchase of a site for a new Eastern High School, $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 106: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended as follows: On page 46 of the bill, line 25, after the word "athletics," insert the following: "including school playgrounds"; and on page 46, line 25, after the word "gardens," insert the following: "school publications"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "20 drivers, at $840 each"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 112: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 112, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$912,141.53"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 113: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 116: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 116, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$56,120"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 124: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 124, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$120,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 135: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 135, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For completion of the pound and stable as follows: For metal folding shutters for the wagon shed, $1,000; painting inside walls, $50; erecting flagpole, $75; screens and awning, $100; and fire hose, $100; in all, $1,325."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 136: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 136, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,350"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 137: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,800"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 141: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 141, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$17,450"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 146: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 146, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 147: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 147, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,800"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 154: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 154, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "stenographer, $1,400"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 158: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 158, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$1,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 160: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 160, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$125,325"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 164: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 164, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$11,280"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 165: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 165, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$24,780"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 166: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 166, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$35,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 176: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 176, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 177: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 177, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$60,120"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 178: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 178, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For the preparation of plans and specifications for the erection of hospital buildings, including power house and domestic-service building, for municipal purposes, to be located and erected on the site now owned by the District of Columbia at Fourteenth and Upshur Streets, and hereafter to be known as Gallinger Hospital, $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 180: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 180, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For agent, $1,800; clerk, $1,200; placing and investigating officers—1, $1,200; 1, $1,003; 5, at $900 each; record clerk, $900; clerk, $720; messenger, $360; in all, $11,680."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 181: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 181, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$55,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 182: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 182, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$90,180"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 185: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 185, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,740"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 188: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 188, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$19,790"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 189: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 189, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "supervisor of boys, $720"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 195: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 195, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,580"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 196: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 196, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$27,280"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 206: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 206, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,100"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 208: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 208, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$56,990"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 211: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 211, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$177,490"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 214: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 214, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the matter inserted by said amendment, insert as a separate paragraph the following:

"There shall be assessed as special benefits for the reclamation and development of the Anacostia River and Flats from the Anacostia Bridge northeast to the District line upon the aforesaid plans, such sum or sums as the jury hereinafter provided for may determine, on such lots, and pieces, or parcels of land abutting the area of improvement, and adjacent thereto, and any other lots, pieces, or parcels of land in the District of Columbia that such jury shall determine are specially benefited by reason of said reclamation and development, in the manner following, that is to say: It shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, for the purpose of said assessment, to divide into sections, in such manner as he may deem best, the entire area of improvement; as soon as practicable after the reclamation and development of each section is completed, he shall furnish to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia a plat of such section showing the area reclaimed and developed, and thereupon it shall be the duty of said Commissioners to institute in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a district court, by petition, a proceeding in rem for the assessment of benefits. The proceedings in such case shall be under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, in so far as the same are applicable. It shall be the duty of the jury provided for in said proceeding to find as special benefits the increase in value which such reclamation and development has added to each lot, piece, or parcel of land abuttting such improvement, and adjacent thereto, and any other lot, piece, or parcel of land in the District of Columbia, which it may find will be specially benefited by reason of said improvement; and of the amount which said jury shall find such lots, pieces, or parcels of land so benefited it shall assess one-half thereof upon such lot, piece, or parcel of land. In determining the amounts to be assessed against said lots, pieces, or parcels of land, the jury shall take into consideration the respective situations and topographical conditions of said lots, pieces, or parcels of land, and the benefits and advantages they may specially receive from such reclamation and development, and where any part of any lot, piece, or parcel of land has been dedicated for the purpose of such reclamation and development, the jury in determining whether the remainder of said lot, piece, or parcel of land is to be assessed for benefits and the amount of benefits, if any, to be assessed thereon, shall also take into consideration the fact of such dedication and the value of land so dedicated. The said assessments shall be levied and collected under the provisions of said subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, and shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the United States and of the District of Columbia in equal parts, and when finally ratified and confirmed by the court shall severally be a lien upon the land assessed and shall be collected as special-improvement taxes in the District of Columbia, and shall be payable in five equal annual installments with interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from and after 60 days after the confirmation of the verdict of the jury. Where not otherwise herein provided for, all of the provisions of said subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of said Code of Law for the District of Columbia shall be applicable to the levying and collecting of said special assessments."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 215: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 215, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "four"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 216: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 216, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "$2,000" where it occurs in said amendment and insert in lieu thereof "$1,800"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 223: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 223, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$86,935"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 28, 31, 226, and 227.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House, at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10523) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report, as to each of the said amendments, namely:

The conference report submitted herewith differs from the conference report submitted on June 12, 1914, and printed as

House Report No. 817 of this session in the following particulars:

On amendment No. 101: Strikes from the bill the provision, inserted by the Senate, allowing free tuition to school pupils whose parents are employed officially or otherwise in the District of Columbia.

On amendments Nos. 103, 104, and 105: Strikes out the appropriations of $33,000 for an addition to the John F. Cook School, $66,000 for an addition to the Powell School, and $45,000 for a site and new school building in the sixth division.

On amendment No. 109: Strikes out the appropriation of $50,000 proposed by the Senate for the central dispensary and emergency hospital.

On amendment No. 178: Appropriates $15,000 for plans and specifications for a new municipal hospital instead of $300,000 proposed by the Senate for the erection of such a hospital.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the following amendments:

Amendment No. 28: Providing for assessment of cost of street, avenue, or road pavements against the abutting property.

Amendment No. 30: Appropriating $4,150 to pay Thomas W. and Alice N. Keller for ground taken and damages on account of condemnation proceedings in square numbered 2833 in the city of Washington.

Amendment No. 226: Providing for the deposit of the surplus revenues of the District of Columbia in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of "Miscellaneous receipts."

Amendment No. 227: Providing for the repeal of all laws and parts of laws to the extent that they are inconsistent with this bill.

ROBERT N. PAGE,
T. U. SISSON,
C. R. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I now ask the Clerk to report amendment No. 28, in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter whenever, under appropriations made by Congress, the roadway of any street, avenue, or road in the District of Columbia is improved by laying a new pavement thereon or by resurfacing an existing pavement from curb to curb or from gutter to gutter, where no curb exists, where the material used is sheet asphalt, asphalt block, asphaltic or bituminous macadam, concrete, or other fixed roadway pavement, such proportion of the total cost of the work, including all the expenses of the assessment, to be made as hereinafter prescribed, shall be charged against and become a lien upon the abutting property, and assessments therefor shall be levied pro rata according to the linear frontage of said property on the street, avenue, or road, or portion thereof upon the roadway of which said new pavement is laid or the existing roadway of which is resurfaced: Provided, however, That there shall be excepted from such assessment the cost of paving or resurfacing the roadway space included within the intersections of streets, avenues, and roads, as said intersections are included within building lines projected, and also the cost of paving the space within such roadways for which street railway companies are responsible under their charters or under law on streets, avenues, or roads where such railways have been or shall be constructed.

The assessments herein provided for shall be levied and paid for in the following manner, namely: Where the width of the roadway actually to be paved is 40 feet or less between the curbs, or between the gutters, where no curbs exist, after deducting the amount required to be paved by the street railway companies, the total cost of the work, including the expenses of assessments, shall be assessed against the abutting property owners, one-half to each side; where the width of the street thus to be paved, after deducting the amount required to be paved by the street railway companies, shall exceed 40 feet, the cost of construction as herein provided for shall be levied and paid for as follows: The cost of constructing 20 feet on each side of said street shall be assessed against the abutting property owner, and the cost of paving the remaining portion of said street, including the cost of intersections, shall be paid for by the government of the District of Columbia out of funds available for that purpose.

Assessments levied under the provisions hereof shall be payable and collectible in the same manner and under the same penalty for nonpayment as is provided for assessments for improving sidewalks and alleys in the District of Columbia, as now provided by law: Provided, That the cost of publication of the notice of such assessment upon the failure to obtain personal service upon the owner of the property to be assessed therein provided for and of the services of such notices shall be paid out of the appropriation for the work, and such assessments, when collected, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the fund available for similar public work.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment striking out the language of the House provision and inserting the following, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken out from pages 22, 23, and 24 in the printed bill insert the following:

"Hereafter whenever, under appropriations made by Congress, the roadway of any street, avenue, or road in the District of Columbia is improved by laying a new pavement thereon or by resurfacing an existing pavement from curb to curb, or from gutter to gutter where no curb exists, where the material used is sheet asphalt, asphalt block, asphaltic or bituminous macadam, concrete, or other fixed roadway pavement, such proportion of the total cost of the work, including all the expenses of the assessment, to be made as hereinafter prescribed, shall be charged against and become a lien upon the abutting property, and assessments therefor shall be levied pro rata according to the linear frontage of said property on the street, avenue, or road, or portion thereof upon the roadway of which said new pavement is laid or the existing roadway of which is resurfaced: Provided, however, That there shall be excepted from such assessment the cost of paving or resurfacing the roadway space included within the intersections of streets, avenues, and roads, as said intersections are included within building lines projected, and also the cost of paving the space within such roadways for which street railway companies are responsible under their charters or under law on streets, avenues, or roads where such railways have been or shall be constructed.

"The assessments hereinbefore provided for shall be levied in the following proportion, namely: One-third of the total cost upon the real property abutting on each side of the street, avenue, or road, between the points where the roadway is paved or resurfaced and the remaining one-third of the total cost shall be charged against the general fund of the District of Columbia.

"Assessments levied under the provisions hereof shall be payable and collectible in the same manner and under the same penalty for nonpayment as is provided for assessments for improving sidewalks and alleys in the District of Columbia, as set forth on page 248 of volume 28, United States Statutes at Large: Provided, That the cost of publication of the notice of such assessment upon the failure to obtain personal service upon the owner of the property to be assessed therein provided for and of the services of such notices shall be paid out of the appropriation for the work, and such assessments, when collected, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in equal parts."

Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire some time?

Mr. MANN. I would like to have the gentleman from North Carolina explain his proposed amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have the gentleman tell us the difference between these two amendments.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. This amendment which I propose now differs from the so-called Borland amendment. The Borland amendment placed upon the abutting property owners the entire cost of paving the streets, whereas the matter which I propose to insert in lieu of it modifies that by placing one-third of the cost on the joint treasury of the District of Columbia and the United States and one-third upon the property owners on each side of the street, of course leaving in effect the present regulation as regards the obligation of the street car railways to pave within the space occupied by them.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I notice the amendment provides that the assessments shall be levied in the following proportion, namely, one-third of the total cost upon the real property, and so forth, and the remaining one-third of the total cost to be charged against the general fund of the District of Columbia. Where does the other third come in?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. One-third is to be charged to the property owner on each side of the street.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I understand. I see the amendment provides that one-third of the total cost shall be assessed against the real property abutting on each side of the street.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the Borland amendment the levy applied only to the property owners where it extended for 40 feet.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I think that is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. And under the amendment now proposed no exception is made as to property owners on streets wider than 40 feet?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman, to be entirely frank with him, that it was intended that that provision should apply to this amendment; that it should apply only to those streets of 40 feet, and it will be so when finally adopted.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then in conference it is the purpose of the conferees to limit the payment only to 40 feet of space?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Forty feet of space.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the assessments to be borne in this respect?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. And for the information also of the House, on all of the circles which are peculiar to Washington the present system of paving the circles will be borne by the two treasuries, just as it is borne now. So if this amendment as proposed when put into the bill does not include that item, it will be arranged so that the streets to be paved will be just as it was in the Borland amendment—streets wider than 40 feet the excess shall be borne by the two treasuries.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was more concerned with the little property owners on large avenues. It would be a great burden upon them for us to impose one-third upon them if it is more than 40 feet wide.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will assure the gentleman that if there is any excess of 40 feet provision will be made. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand the gentleman to say it is the intention of the managers on the part of the House to insert in the amendment which you propose to substitute the provisions contained in the last part of the paragraph on page 23, with regard to streets over 40 feet in width?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes, sir; that will be done.

Mr. MONDELL. Then it is your intention to adopt language involving this principle and in harmony——

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. With the original provision.

Mr. MONDELL. You could not adopt this language as it stands, because if you do then the property owner, when a street is more than 40 feet in width, would pay for the paving of the other surface.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. We recognize that, and it will be taken care of. That will be taken care of.

Mr. MONDELL. But the theory of this provision in regard to wider streets will be carried out as an addition or an amendment to the proposition.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Absolutely; that is it exactly; that is the intention of the conferees.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. As I recall, the original provision was to put the whole cost of paving 40 feet——

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. On the abutting property; yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. And this provision puts two-thirds of the cost?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. That is true.

Mr. MANN. Although both provisions require assessments to be made according to the frontage of the street.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The frontage on the street that is paved, the frontage of the property.

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman take into consideration the matter which was discussed in the House as to the sharp corner lots?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman means at the intersection of streets?

Mr. MANN. Triangular lots.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes, we did; and wherever the rectangle has a width of more than 40 feet I can give the gentleman the same assurance as I did as to streets of more than 40 feet wide, that that will not be placed upon the abutting property.

Mr. MANN. A great many lots in the city that run into triangles come down to a point where they are only a few feet wide.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. We catch that, I will assure the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. To make the property pay for the full width of both sides looks like a gross injustice as compared with inside property.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Well, that property, I will say to the gentleman, is extremely valuable property.

Mr. MANN. Most of it is not.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I agree that a large part is not.

Mr. MANN. In most cases, or in many cases, it is very narrow, and you can not even put a building on it.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. That is true, but in most of those cases I believe the city has adopted the policy of taking it over.

Mr. MANN. No; the city does not buy these pieces of property. There are no places where they are bought. A man has a triangular lot that runs to a point which is only a few feet wide, very narrow in many cases where there are residences, and it is still left as vacant property and can not be built upon, and it will put a heavy burden upon him to make him pay the full width on both streets.

Mr. SISSON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois I can at once appreciate the force of what he says, for this reason: If a man should have a residence inside a point which actually belongs to the District parking, he might be compelled to build, as the gentleman suggests, sidewalks on both sides of the property. Is that what the gentleman has in mind?

Mr. MANN. No; I did not have reference to sidewalks, but to street paving.

Mr. SISSON. He would have to pay for sidewalks under the present law. If we did not take care of that he would have to pay for one-third of the street on either side of his property.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Because he has got two frontages. Now, it is the intention of the conferees to take care of that so that a man would not be called upon to pay for more than 20 feet of paving.

Mr. MANN. Now, I will be frank to say in our town—and, of course, people know more about their local matters than we do—assessments are made according to benefits and not upon the theory of special taxation, which is quite a different thing.

Mr. SISSON. That is true.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. If the gentleman will yield——

Mr. SISSON. Here is the clause that involves the property:

That there shall be excepted from such assessment the cost of paving or resurfacing the roadway space included within the intersections of streets, avenues, and roads, as said intersections are included within building lines projected, and also the cost of paving the space within such roadways for which street railway companies are responsible under their charters or under law on streets, avenues, or roads where such railways have been or shall be constructed.

Now, I will state to the gentleman if that language is not sufficiently clear to cover what he has in his mind it might work a hardship upon some property owner.

Mr. MANN. It is sufficiently clear, but it works the wrong way.

Mr. SISSON. I do not know that it works the wrong way if the language means what the conferees have in their minds. It is our intention to have the language so specific as to mean exactly what the conferees have in mind.

Mr. MANN. Well, if you would make the assessment on the property according to the benefits you would have no difficulty, but when you endeavor to make the assessment according to the linear frontage you impose that burden upon a piece of property that may not be more than 3 feet wide at the corner of paving the street on both sides of it.

Mr. SISSON. I will say to the gentleman that while that matter was in mind and has been incidentally mentioned there are many difficulties that confront you in the enforcement of that sort of a law. I believe you have it in Chicago——

Mr. MANN. I think it is the law in nearly every place where they raise money by special assessment.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman is mistaken about that, because in 55 per cent of the cities of the United States and in all the modern cities of the United States the property owner pays one-half of the street and all of the sidewalk assessment. An investigation of the conditions throughout the United States will show that.

Mr. MANN. He does not by special taxation. Where you raise the money by linear frontage it is double taxation.

Mr. SISSON. If you did that in the District of Columbia, it would not be linear footage, except as to cost of the sidewalks, that would determine the tax, because benefits are based here on the number of square feet—all your assessments and all charges upon the number of square feet involved.

Mr. MANN. It is based upon the linear frontage of the abutting property, though. You take, for instance, Connecticut Avenue, where I have the pleasure of riding on the street cars, and on one side of the street all the way nearly are sharp-cornered triangular lots. Some of them, if it is business property, may be built upon, but with many of them the triangle is too shallow to build upon even. It is left vacant. Now, if you assess the street paving according to the linear frontage, here is a property that may not be over 5 or 10 feet wide, and yet it is likely to pave two streets.

Mr. SISSON. Now, that is not true in reference to the old portion of the city, because all of those points, with very few exceptions, have been acquired by the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. I beg the pardon of the gentleman. I ride around town, and I do not know of a single one that is owned by the city. They own triangles where the triangle is surrounded by a street, but they do not anywhere own the corner of the lot where the lot is a triangle itself.

Mr. SISSON. I had in mind the triangular pieces of land which the gentleman mentioned a moment ago.

Mr. MANN. The triangles are another proposition. The triangles belong to the city, or the Government is acquiring them.

Mr. SISSON. It was the purpose of the managers on the part of the House to take care of a piece of property where one property owner would be compelled to build the streets on both sides of his property. It is not our intention to tax him with one-third of the street on one side of his property and one-third on the other. And that would occur——

Mr. MANN. It would occur under the amendment.

Mr. SISSON. Under the amendment, unless the amendment I have in mind is cared for. But in order that that might be properly drawn, we thought it wiser to let the engineer commissioner, who understands the measurements of the streets, to make a measurement of the streets to take care of those exceptional cases.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] to concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27 of the bill, after line 11, insert the following:

"Payment for ground and damages on account of condemnation proceedings: To pay Thomas W. and Alice N. Keller for ground taken and damages on account of condemnation proceedings in square No. 2838, in the city of Washington, $4,150."

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 31.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for a division.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, we would like a division on that vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes none.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Now, what was the motion?

The SPEAKER. The motion was to further insist. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 103 of the bill, strike out all of section 8, as follows:

"SEC. 8. That to the extent the revenues of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1915 shall exceed the proportionate part of the appropriations made in this or any other act, and chargeable against said revenues, the same shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of 'Miscellaneous receipts.'"

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] moves that the House further insist on the House disagreement to Senate amendment No. 226.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. MANN. What seems to be the disposition of the Senate conferees on that, so far as disclosed?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I should think the gentleman who asks that question, from the fact that this item appears here with the Senate still insisting, would draw a very correct inference of the attitude of the Senate conferees toward this amendment.

Mr. MANN. I have an idea about it. Take, for instance, the amendment that we just disagreed to, and that was a Senate amendment. Under the practice of the two bodies, where one proposes something which the other will not agree to the one who proposes must yield. Now, the Senate must yield on the amendment on which we further insisted on a disagreement, too. If the Senate is utterly opposed to this and maintains that position, it seems to me in the end the House will have to recede. I wondered whether it was not advisable soon, at least, to get this bill where it could be a law.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman I think if my motion is carried that the date is not very far in the future when there will be an agreement upon this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand from what the gentleman has just said that the House conferees are about prepared to yield on this?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I did not intend to say that. I made my statement at just what the words meant, that if the House should further insist on its disagreement to this amendment, I thought the probability was that we would reach a full agreement on this bill in the very near future.

Mr. MONDELL. And as the Senate will not yield, the House will?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. That is an inference that the gentleman can draw in his own mind.

Mr. MANN. That is the sensible thing to do.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] to further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, let the next amendment be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 227, page 103 of the bill, insert the following as a new section:

"SEC. 8. That all laws and parts of laws to the extent that they are inconsistent with this act are repealed."

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the request of the Senate for a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] moves that the House agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. PAGE of North Carolina, Mr. SISSON, and Mr. DAVIS.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, presented for printing under the rules the report on the bill (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, as follows:

[House Report No. 914, Sixty-third Congress, second session.]

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 12579:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, having had the same under consideration, reports the bill back without amendment, and recommends to the House that all of the Senate amendments to said bill, numbered from 1 to 168, inclusive, be disagreed to, and that the House request a conference with the Senate on said amendments.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise the remarks I made yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 110) to regulate trading in cotton futures and provide for the standardization of "upland" and "gulf" cottons separately, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. SHEPPARD, and Mr. BRADY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE GENERAL DAM ACT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not see anyone here to present the conference report on the legislative appropriation bill. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the Adamson dam bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask if it is the intention to call up the legislative conference report to-day?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think it is; and as soon as the gentlemen in charge of the bill come into the House, I have no doubt the floor will be yielded for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Adamson dam bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk can not report the bill. It is a Union Calendar bill.

The SPEAKER. It is not a Union Calendar bill.

Mr. MANN. It ought to be. I guess it is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16053) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] is just coming on the floor, and I will let him take charge of the matter.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this is a Union Calendar bill.

The SPEAKER. Why?

Mr. MANN. It provides for the raising of revenue.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In what way? I think, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken about that proposition.

Mr. MANN. One of the provisions of the bill, on page 4, paragraph (a), is that, as a part of the conditions and stipulations, such approval shall provide "for reimbursement to the United States of all expenses incurred by the United States with reference to the project, including the cost of any investigation necessary for the approval of the plans as heretofore provided," and so forth. Paragraph (b) provides "for the payment to the United States of reasonable charges for the benefits which may accrue to such project through the construction, operation, and maintenance by the United States of headwater improvements," and so forth, "such charges to be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers," and so forth. And there are various other provisions, as (c), for instance, "that in the construction, maintenance, and operation of such dam and accessory works there may be occupied and used such lands of the United States as may be necessary therefor, and in consideration thereof the owner of such dam shall pay to the United States," and so forth. Paragraph (d) provides "for the payment or securing the payment to the United States of such sums and in such manner," and so forth.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman need not go any further. This bill ought to be on the Union Calendar, and will be transferred to it.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to its coming up in regular order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not think this is on the Union Calendar. Clearly I think the Speaker has misinterpreted the reading of this language.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what places a bill on the Union Calendar?

The SPEAKER. Taking money out of the Treasury, or bringing it in, or disposing of Government lands.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There are three propositions, and if they are involved in the bill it goes on the Union Calendar. One is appropriating money or raising money; another is disposing of the public lands; the other is the creation of an office. Those are the three things. If those are not involved in a bill, it goes to the House Calendar, unless it belongs to the Private Calendar. Now, this proposition that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] refers to in no way affects either of these conditions.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman say about "(a)," at the top of page 4?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is what I was going to read. In the first place, as a part of the conditions stipulated, the approval shall provide so-and-so. This bill is providing, Mr. Speaker, for a contract between the United States Government and some individual or corporation that desires to build a dam, and it provides what the contract shall contain—that as a part of the conditions and stipulations of such approval it shall provide for the reimbursement to the United States of all expenses incurred by the United States with reference to the project, including the cost of any investigation necessary for the approval of the plans heretofore provided and for such supervision of construction as may be necessary in the interest of the United States. Now, does that take any money out of the Treasury? Not at all. Does that put any money into the Treasury? Not at all.

The SPEAKER. Where is it to come from?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It provides for a contract that is going to be made in the future about the building of a dam. It does not provide that there shall be an appropriation out of public funds of the Treasury or for the payment of money into the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What will become of this money when the United States is reimbursed for these expenses, unless the money goes into the Treasury?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course it will go into the Treasury, but this is not making provision for an appropriation out of the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. No; but it is for raising revenue.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No it is not. It is providing the terms of a contract to be made in the future.

Mr. MANN. Ah, yes——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But that is not raising revenue.

Mr. MANN. Certainly it does raise revenue. It authorizes the Secretary of War to raise revenue; and not only authorizes but requires him to do so if he makes such a contract.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. Certainly. Reimbursing the United States is raising revenue.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It provides as a condition precedent to the making of a contract, or a condition of the contract, to reimburse the United States for all the expenses incurred by the United States in reference to the project. Would a dam bill, or a bridge bill which provided the terms on which a bridge could be built across a river, but also provided that if any expenses were required to be incurred by the Government of the United States because of the building of that bridge, those expenses should be reimbursed as a condition precedent—would that be a question of raising revenue? The rules clearly contemplate, in the class of bills that the gentleman refers to, first, a bill making a direct appropriation out of the Treasury; secondarily, a bill raising revenue for the Treasury, the purpose of it being to raise revenue. This is neither of those. This relates purely to the terms of a contract.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman say as to section 14, which provides for leasing surplus water power owned by the United States?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That section reads:

That the Secretary of War, upon the advice and with the approval of the Chief of Engineers, may lease to any applicant having complied with the laws of the State in which the dam is constructed or to be constructed by the United States, the right to develop power from the surplus water over and above that required for navigation at any navigation dam now or hereafter constructed, either with or without contribution by the applicant, and owned by the United States, and on such terms as may be deemed by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers for the best interests of the United States; and in awarding such lease preference shall be given to the applicant whose plans are deemed by any action of Congress or by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers to be best adapted to conserve and utilize in the public interest the navigation and water-power resources of the region, and all such leases and the parties thereto and the terms and conditions thereof shall be reported annually to Congress.

That is only a part of the contract, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken. This has nothing to do with the contract.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, but it has. It is the general contract that we are putting into the law.

Mr. MANN. But it gives the Secretary of War power to make a lease.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. And to receive the rental.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly; but that does not dispose of the public lands by this act.

Mr. MANN. Certainly it does. That is exactly what it does. And section (c), at the bottom of page 4, disposes of the public lands. That section reads:

(c) That in the construction, maintenance, and operation of such dam and accessory works there may be occupied and used such lands of the United States as may be necessary therefor, and in consideration thereof the owner of such dam shall pay to the United States such charges, not to exceed an annual payment of 5 per cent of the fair value of such lands, as may be fixed by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is clearly a part of the contract, Mr. Speaker. It is not the disposition of the public lands or the rental of the public lands.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Alabama will notice that that is the direct authority, not a part of the contract.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It says:

(c) That in the construction, maintenance, and operation of such dam and accessory works there may be occupied and used such lands of the United States as may be necessary therefor, and in consideration thereof the owner of such dam shall pay to the United States such charges—

And so forth.

This is merely putting on the statute book the terms of a contract that these people are required to make. It is not the leasing to-day of a particular piece of land; and that is what is contemplated by the disposition of land. If this was a bill to convey the title to a piece of land by grant or by lease, it would come within the terms of the rule, and the bill would have to be on the Union Calendar; but this bill conveys no title. It carries no title at this time. It is merely writing on the statute books the terms under which a dam can be built and the contract that the builder of the dam must make with the United States Government. There is no disposition of lands in the proposition.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the gentleman's view of this situation: There are a great many revocable permits now outstanding for dam companies upon public lands. The moment this bill is passed these revocable permits are nullified and they take under subdivision (c), which is a grant.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not concede what the gentleman says I do not think these revocable permits would be affected by this bill, in direct terms.

Mr. LENROOT. Section 17——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know that the gentleman contends that section 17 would relate to lands in the West. I think that is purely a misapprehension. This bill is limited in its terms to the navigable waters of the United States, and does not affect the terms of the public lands of the far West. The boundary of this bill, to begin with and to end with, is the navigable streams of the United States.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. But what is included in the term "navigable waters"?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is a question for the department to determine—whether it means 3 feet or 3 inches of water.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Do they not determine it in favor of the smaller limit—3 inches or 1 inch?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is a question that it is not necessary to go into under this bill.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. But if that were true, would not that include all the streams of the West and everywhere else?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not agree with that construction or that statement. I think a navigable stream is well defined, not only by law but in the War Department.

But that is a side issue to this proposition. What I contend, Mr. Speaker, is that this is not a bill under the terms of which there is conveyed the title to public lands. If it does convey title to public lands, what public lands does it convey the title to, either by lease or grant? It does not in its terms levy a tax. If it does, what tax does it levy? It does not make an appropriation out of the Treasury. If it does, how much? Therefore it does not belong on the Union Calendar; it merely provides a contract under which a dam may be built and the terms with which the builder of the dam must comply in the future.

Mr. MANN rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois before he proceeds what he says about paragraphs (a), (b), (c), and (d), whether they are enactments of law or provide for a contract?

Mr. MANN. I say that it does not make any difference whether we directly raise revenue or whether we authorize a department official to raise revenue which is to be paid into the Treasury. On the matter of raising a tax, the gentleman from Alabama is mistaken in the rule. There is nothing in the rule about making a tax. The rule is:

> First, a calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to which shall be referred bills raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills of a public character directly or indirectly appropriating money or property.
> Second, a House calendar, to which shall be referred all bills of a public character not raising revenue nor directly or indirectly appropriating money or property.

What does this bill do? Section 4 authorizes and directs the Chief of Engineers, in making contracts for the use of water power or for the construction of dams, to provide first for the reimbursement to the United States certain expenses. That is raising revenue; that requires the Secretary of War to raise revenue. Paragraph (b) provides for the payment to the United States of reasonable charges for the benefits which may accrue to such project through the construction, operation, and maintenance, and so forth. That is raising revenue. We have in the bill powers granting some one the right to construct a dam and develop hydroelectric power, and we say that the Secretary of War may grant that permission and shall require the payment to the United States of reasonable charges for it.

Paragraph (c) provides that in the construction, maintenance, and operation of such dam and accessory works there may be occupied and used such lands of the United States as may be necessary therefor, and in consideration thereof the owner of such dam shall pay to the United States such charges, and so forth.

Section 14 provides that the Secretary of War shall lease to any applicant the right to develop power from the surplus water over and above that required for navigation at any navigation dam now or hereafter constructed.

We have many navigation dams in the United States. At many of them there is surplus water which may be used for the development of water power, and we authorize the Secretary of War to lease that surplus water power and to make charges for it. What is the difference between that and authorizing the Secretary of War to lease any piece of ground we have and charge for it? What is the distinction between raising revenue by leasing or selling? Would anyone contend that if we authorized the Secretary of War to sell these navigation dams that would not be disposing of public property? That is an appropriation of public property to raise revenue.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On page 3 of the report the committee says:

> Yielding to the pressure from many directions we have included in the present bill authority for the Secretary of War to accommodate communities and derive some revenue for the Government from projects constructed wholly at the expense of the Government by leasing on satisfactory terms, with proper safeguards, the surplus water not needed for navigation at such projects.

The committee evidently thought that this was raising revenue.

Mr. MANN. Of course it was intended to raise revenue.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What clause in the bill does the gentleman contend raises revenue?

Mr. MANN. Section 14 and section 4. Any money that is received from the outside and paid into the Treasury of the United States is revenue. The rule does not provide that you raise revenue by taxation. You can raise revenue by selling property. The reason of the rule is that bills of this character shall be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under the rules relating to the Committee of the Whole. The transfer of this bill from the House Calendar to the Union Calendar does not affect the unanimous-consent order which is already pending. The question is on how it shall be considered.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I would like to know if the gentleman from Illinois understands or claims that there would be any difference in the method in which the bill was disposed of, whether in the House or in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, further than the latitude of general debate?

The SPEAKER. There is no difference——

Mr. MANN. Oh, Mr. Speaker, there is a great difference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois did not hear what the Chair was going to say. One difference is the method of procedure. The gentleman from Georgia, or somebody for him, would have to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and then there is a difference as to the consideration of amendments.

Mr. MANN. If this bill is considered in the House, the gentleman from Georgia would have the power within five minutes to move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. ADAMSON. But the gentleman from Illinois knows that the gentleman from Georgia would not do that.

Mr. MANN. I do not know. If we considered every amendment in the House, there would be a chance for a roll call on every amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I did not have the rule before me, and I desire now to call the Chair's attention to the exact language in the rule:

> There shall be three calendars, to which all business reported from committees shall be referred, viz:
> First, a Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to which shall be referred bills raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills of a public character directly or indirectly appropriating money or property.

Of course, this is not a bill raising revenue nor is it a general appropriation bill. The question is whether it is a bill of a public character directly or indirectly appropriating money or property. That does not mean a bill the effect of which may convey property. Of course, there is no money involved. It does not mean a bill that may direct a way in the future whereby property may be disposed of. Suppose we had a bill before this House providing that no public land shall be sold until advertised in the newspapers in the city of Washington, would that go to the Union Calendar or the House Calendar? It seems to me manifestly it would not be appropriating public property, but it would be the terms on which public property could pass, limiting the terms. It would not be conveying a particular piece of property. The provision of this bill in no way appropriates a piece of public property or a piece of money. It does provide for the terms on which overflowed lands, for instance, may pass from the Government under certain conditions.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion in aiding his argument right at this point?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMSON. The entire scheme of this bill is to utilize private capital to promote the navigability of navigable streams without expense to the Government and without the raising of revenue by the Government further than reimbursement enough to prevent any expense, and all in connection with navigation. The bill does not furnish title to anyone. If we grant consent to a corporation to build a dam in a navigable stream, that corporation must go and secure title itself or lease. We have nothing to do with it. It was represented to us that on many of the large streams in the country, not out in the West, not in the public domain, there were small bits of Government land left ungranted, the title to which still remained in the Government, and people who wanted to develop one of these large properties had to secure title in some way.

If they had to buy land from a private owner they would have to get such as the Government owned from the Government, and they would have to go to some Government official to get it; and in putting in the conditions which the Secretary of War must write in every contract of approval, we simply provided that as to that land that belongs to the Government the corporation would have to get title to it before it could build the dam, and that is all there is to that. It is not a scheme to sell Government land at all, but merely a provision by which a corporation may get land from the Government where it owns a little tract of land, just as it would get it from a private individual.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; if the gentleman from Alabama, who has charge of the time, will yield.

Mr. LENROOT. What does the party have to do to get the land from the Government?

Mr. ADAMSON. He has to get it on such terms as the party who owns it will grant it to him.

Mr. LENROOT. It is granted in the gentleman's bill on payment of 5 per cent of the value.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is simply one specification of how he can do it, but it is not a separate provision in the bill; it is a condition of contract which the Secretary makes that conveys the Government land it may be necessary to use. He can not proceed until he gets that piece of land.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, in order not to take up the time of the Chair unnecessarily, and to try to make the point clear where I think the distinction is, it all comes out of the construction of the words "directly or indirectly appropriating money or property." The contention that I make is that a bill goes to the Union Calendar which appropriates property in the way of a grant. For instance, if a bill were to pass this Congress providing for a land grant to certain railroads for building railroads, that they should have so much land within alternate sections in such a territory, that would be appropriating property; but it can not be said that any bill deciding the terms on which property may be disposed of in the future, and not specifically carrying title to a particular piece of property, is the class of bill that is intended to go to the Union Calendar.

In other words, the object of the rule in requiring a bill to go to the Union Calendar was to allow greater latitude of debate, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] properly says, not that I think there will be any effort to cut off a reasonable debate in this case, but it was for the purpose of allowing greater latitude of debate that certain bills were required to go upon the Union Calendar, such as a revenue bill, raising revenue—and that does not mean any bill that may incidentally raise revenue—a general appropriation bill, conveying out of the Treasury the moneys of the Government, and a bill appropriating, not regulating, not fixing the terms of the future disposition of public lands, but appropriating public lands. What does "appropriating" mean? It can not mean anything else except the conveyance of title. It does not mean a bill fixing the terms for the future disposition of lands, for that does not appropriate the property, for the title may never pass. Appropriating means parting with, and what are you parting with in this bill? Nothing at this time. You are fixing the terms on which the Government land may be parted with or appropriated in the future, and there are no public lands parted with in this bill.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman say to the word "indirectly" in that rule?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The language is "directly or indirectly appropriating money or property." I do not think there is anything in this bill that indirectly appropriates property. It is merely fixing the terms on which in the future under certain conditions property may be passed. But it is not a conveyance of any particular piece of property. You can not appropriate property without designating what property you are appropriating.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, just a word. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] draws a distinction between authority to sell property and the actual sale of property by the United States. Now, we pass a homestead law. Who will claim that a homestead law is not a Union Calendar bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; but the homestead law names the property.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon; the homestead law does not name anything of the kind.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It may name all the lands in the United States.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I knew the gentleman would have to change his position.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly not; but it does name it.

Mr. MANN. The homestead law does not part with a foot of property.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But it makes all the laws of the United States subject to its terms——

Mr. MANN. But it does not part with a foot of property. It only provides the conditions upon which persons may obtain the property of the United States. That is the way as to all, practically, of the land laws. We pass a bill here directly appropriating property to some city for park purposes. That is a Union Calendar bill. If we pass a law authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey that property, that is not a direct appropriation of it according to the gentleman's theory, but it is a Union Calendar bill. If we pass a bill permitting the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of any public lands, that is a Union Calendar bill. Here we have a bill authorizing the Secretary of War, first, to dispose of part of the public lands, not by sale but by lease. That is a Union Calendar bill, and would be if it did not require the payment of rental, but when in addition we require the payment of rental, that is a bill raising revenue, and the gentleman can not draw a distinction between bills which appropriate the property of the Government by gift or sale and bills which authorize and permit a department officer to dispose of the property.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If this bill were enacted into law, would the passage of any other law be necessary for money to be received into the Treasury under this bill?

Mr. MANN. Certainly not. Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill was referred to the House Calendar, I think, very naturally. The original dam bill was a House Calendar bill. It did not in any way raise revenue or appropriate property of the United States. The amended dam bill which we passed, I think, was a House Calendar bill, and it did not appropriate any property or authorize the use of any of the Government property or provide for the raising of any revenue, and that is the very reason we have this bill here. Gentlemen now wish in the bill to authorize the raising of revenue to the Government, to reimburse the Government for its expenses, particularly where it has reservoirs at the headwaters of rivers, and then to convey by lease the use of surplus water power at dams which we have on navigable streams. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman will permit, the reservoir provision was in the law in 1910.

Mr. MANN. There was no provision in reference to payment.

Mr. ADAMSON. That feature is not changed by this bill at all; it is like what it was.

Mr. MANN. It is decidedly changed by this bill, because you have a long provision in this bill on the subject which directs the Secretary of War if there are a number of dams upon a stream where there are reservoirs at headwaters to apportion the benefits to the owners at the dams and charge them for the use of it not to exceed in total 5 per cent on the cost.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman will permit me, I said that that feature has not been changed which requires them to be used for the benefit——

Mr. MANN. Then, the other dam bill was a Union Calendar bill. I do not know whether it was considered on the Union or the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Now, sometimes a proposition is plain to everybody, and sometimes it is exceedingly close. The rule under which this reference is made is as follows:

First, a Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to which shall be referred any bills raising revenue, general appropriation bills—

That is a particular class—and bills of a public character directly or indirectly appropriating money or property.

The Chair is of the opinion that this bill raises revenue. That is the intention of a certain portion of the House, at least; it remains to be seen whether it constitutes a majority or not. Of course, it is a kind of indirect way of raising revenue. That is proposition No. 1. The Chair thinks that it indirectly appropriates Government money or property. Now, it says in section 14, leaving out the part which the gentleman raised the point of order on—section 4, about the contract—that the Secretary of War shall lease, after consulting with the Chief of Engineers. Well, now, a lease may run for 999 years or 999,000,000 years, the Chair supposes. We have fallen into the habit in this country of making two kinds of long leases, one for 99 years and one for 999 years. Now, as far as this generation is concerned, a lease of 99 years is the same as selling, and the Chair believes that the bill ought to be on the Union Calendar for both reasons, that it intends to raise revenue and that it authorizes a lease of Government property. The latter part, of course, appropriates Government property indirectly. It may never make a lease, but still they have the power to do all the leasing they want to do, and therefore the Chair rules the bill ought to be on the Union Calendar.

The Chair desires further to call attention to another rule which has not figured in the discussion, but which has been privately called to the Chair's attention by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]. Clause 3 of Rule XXIII provides as follows:

> All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people, all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, or referring any claim to the Court of Claims, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

Under this rule it has been held that a bill which sets in motion a train of circumstances destined ultimately to involve certain expenditures must be considered in Committee of the Whole. It seems clear to the Chair that this bill authorizes an official, in certain contingencies, to make contract which will cause the United States to part either temporarily or permanently with property belonging to the United States; and for this reason it seems that the bill should be considered in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I assume that as soon as the conference report is out of the way it will be still in order under the unanimous consent to move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. DONOVAN, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of House bill 6094 (to remove charge of desertion against Thomas Ellis), Sixty-third Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill (H. R. 15279), making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina calls up the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the statement.

The statement was read.

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 911).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 43, 47, 48, 76, 218, 219, and 220.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 28, 29, 78, 79, 176, 177, and 234, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$61,420"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 85: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, and 121: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, and 121, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"Mint at Carson, Nev.: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800; assistant assayer, $1,200; chief clerk, $1,200; in all, $4,200.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $2,000.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, $1,000.

"Assay office at Boise, Idaho: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800; assistant assayer, $1,200; chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $1,200; in all, $4,200.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $2,000.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, $1,000.

"Assay office at Deadwood, S. Dak.: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800; clerk, $1,000; assistant assayer, $1,200; in all, $4,000.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $2,000.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, new machinery, etc., $500.

"Assay office at Helena, Mont.: Assayer in charge, $1,800; chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $1,400; assistant assayer, $1,200; in all, $4,400.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $2,500.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, $1,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 122: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 122, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Assay office at Salt Lake City, Utah: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800; chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $1,200; in all, $3,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 123: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 123, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 124: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 124, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$1,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 168: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 168, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$4,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 169: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 169, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$77,850"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 195: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 195, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Washington, D. C., new post-office building: For 3 assistant engineers, at $900 each; 3 assistant electricians, at $900 each; 10 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 3 oilers, at $720 each; 12 watchmen; additional to 1 watchman acting as lieutenant of the watch, $120; 15 laborers; 1 assistant plumber, $720; 2 female laborers, at $480 each; 15 charwomen; in all, $38,700."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 212: That the House recede from its amendment to the amendment of the Senate numbered 212, and agree to the said Senate amendment.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and on the amendments of the Senate numbered 20 and 30.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House, at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On amendments Nos. 28 and 29: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $1,000 for a stenographer to the Joint Committee on Printing.

On amendments Nos. 43 and 47: Strikes out the appropriation of $4,500, proposed by the Senate, for an assistant to the Secretary of State.

On amendments Nos. 48 and 52: Strikes out the appropriation of $4,500, proposed by the Senate, for an assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury.

On amendment No. 76: Strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, to pay to Thomas P. Kane the difference in the compensation of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Deputy Comptroller of the Currency during the period he acted as Comptroller of the Currency.

On amendments Nos. 78 and 79: Increases the salary of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue from $6,000 to $6,500, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 85: Appropriates $20,000, instead of $10,000 as proposed by the House and $30,000 as proposed by the Senate, for freight on bullion and coin.

On amendments Nos. 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 123, and 124, relating to mints and assay offices: Appropriates for the mint at Carson, Nev., and the assay offices at Boise, Idaho; Deadwood, S. Dak.; Helena, Mont.; and Salt Lake City, Utah, in the exact terms of the current law, except that an assayer's assistant, at $1,000, is omitted from the assay offices at Deadwood and Helena, and an assistant assayer, at $1,200, is omitted from the assay office at Salt Lake City.

On amendments Nos. 168 and 169: Appropriates for three members of a board of appeals in the office of the Solicitor for the Interior Department at $4,000 each instead of at $4,500 each, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments Nos. 176 and 177: Appropriates $2,750 for an Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, at $2,750, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 195, relating to the new post-office building at Washington: In addition to the employees provided for by the Senate, 2 additional elevator conductors at $720 each, 1 oiler at $720, 3 laborers at $660 each, and 3 charwomen at $240 each are provided for.

On amendment No. 212: The provision for commercial attachés in the Department of Commerce is agreed to as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments Nos. 218, 219, and 220: Strikes out the amendments proposed by the Senate increasing the amount for rent of quarters for the Census Office and the provision for a water-cooling plant therein.

On amendment No. 234: Inserts section 5, proposed by the Senate, with reference to the use of motor-drawn and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for all branches of the public service.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the following amendments:

Amendment No. 1: On the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate providing for mileage of Senators at 5 cents per mile.

Amendment No. 20: Providing for the purchase of an automobile for the Speaker and the Vice President.

Amendment No. 30: Restoring the provision for mileage of Representatives according to existing law.

JOSEPH T. JOHNSON,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
JAMES W. GOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. RAINEY. I want to ask permission to amend this conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not do it. The report will have to be adopted either as a whole or rejected as a whole.

Mr. RAINEY. Then I want to resist the motion. I ask for some time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How much time would the gentleman want?

Mr. RAINEY. I would like to have 20 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I can not yield that much time.

The SPEAKER. How much time?

Mr. RAINEY. I ask for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] say?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not think we can spend that much time on it, Mr. Speaker. I am willing to yield 5 or 10 minutes to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, what I want to call attention to again is Senate amendment No. 212, which provides for commercial attachés. Now, the other day, when this was up, I offered an amendment to the section, and the amendment prevailed. When the original bill came up in the House of Representatives it had this section in it, and upon a point of order made by me it went out. What I contend is that these commercial attachés ought not only to be accredited by the Secretary of State, but, in accordance with custom and usage and the organic law, they ought to be appointed by him and ought to report to him. This amendment violates every principle recognized by every civilized Government in the world and recognized by this Government up to the present time. If it prevails, it means a larger appropriation for this purpose next year. The Department of State has few functions to discharge abroad now, except the functions that are diplomatic and which are discharged by our ministers, and in these days of wireless telegraphy and ocean cables even our ministers do not have much to do with diplomatic matters; at any rate, they are not allowed much discretion. Consuls exist for the purpose of attending to just these matters and few other matters. Now, if you take away from the Department of State the authority it has always had, if you permit these commercial attachés to act under the Secretary of Commerce and report to him, you not only duplicate work abroad but you impinge upon the Department of State, and the time will come in the near future when the Secretary of Commerce will be the premier of the national administration, and not the Secretary of State.

In the Secretary of State's office they have a sort of executive civil service, which they apply to consular offices, which works in an entirely satisfactory manner. They do not have it in the Department of Commerce, and this proposed Senate amendment provides that the Secretary of Commerce shall provide examinations for these trade attachés who are to travel in "joy rides" around the world. According to the arguments made in favor of this section the other day, their individual activities are to be limited to no particular section, but it gives to every one of them a secretary, with a salary of $1,500 a year, who is not to be appointed by virtue of even the examination provided in this very section. I rather think from the reading of this Senate amendment that the trade attachés are to be permitted to select their own secretaries.

Now, it seems to have become the custom nowadays in this House, and throughout the country, to gratuitously heap insults upon the Secretary of State. I do not mean that this is done in a personal way. What I mean is that there is a disposition to overlook this great department, to detract from it, and to underestimate its importance. Just the other day we refused the Secretary of State, who always under every administration is the hardest worked man in the Cabinet—and the present Secretary of State is no exception to the rule—a confidential secretary at $4,500 a year. Now, this committee stands for assistants, I do not know how many, and no man knows, to the Secretary of Commerce, for which we are to pay $100,000 a year. It is useless to say that these great departments are agreed upon this. I do not know whether they are or not. Even if the heads of these departments are agreed on this matter, that does not affect the merits of the proposition.

Now, let me read from the organic law establishing the Department of Commerce in 1903. I read from section 5:

All consular offices of the United States, including consuls general and consuls, and commercial agents—

That is what you are trying to appoint here—are hereby required, and it is made a part of their duty, under the direction of the Secretary of State, to gather and compile from time to time useful and material information and statistics in respect to the subjects enumerated in section 3 of this act in the countries and places to which such consular officers are accredited, and to send, under the direction of the Secretary of State, reports as often as required by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor of the information and statistics thus gathered and compiled, such reports to be transmitted through the State Department to the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Now, that is exactly what is being done now. Under the amendment I want to make to this, if I have a chance to make it—I have been refused that opportunity, however, by the committee—these attachés will be appointed if they are needed, and as many as are needed under the executive civil service observed there in the State Department, and they will report, just as the organic act now requires the commercial agents to report, to the Secretary of State, their reports to be transmitted to the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that both the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Commerce are in complete accord on this provision—that it shall be as we have agreed upon?

Mr. RAINEY. I am not aware of that fact at all.

Mr. GOOD. The hearings show that the Secretary of State appeared before the committee and said that he was perfectly satisfied that appointments should be made by the Secretary of Commerce, and the only thing he suggested was that he thought he ought to have copies of some of the reports that were made to the Secretary of Commerce, so that there might be no conflict with regard to certain matters.

Mr. RAINEY. I suppose there is an effort to harmonize matters, but I do not care whether there is or not. I do not know how many Cabinet officers have consented to this arrangement. It is in violation of the organic law and of all the theories which have prevailed among the nations of the world for a thousand years. It means that in the future the Department of Commerce will be the great department in this Government. It minimizes the Department of State, and it violates every precedent this Government has followed from its foundation to the present time and every precedent which every civilized nation in the world has followed for centuries. I hope this report will be voted down. If it is, the House may get a chance afterwards to pass upon this question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McCoy].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McCoy] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker, I had intended to present to the House certain facts which led up to the adoption by the Senate of this amendment as it now stands in the bill if I had had the time to get them into shape. Those facts, in brief, would show that this is a matter on which the Secretary of Commerce has been working for a year. They would show that many commercial bodies of the United States have approved of this scheme exactly as it is now presented. But I would not have taken the time even for that if it had not been for the remark of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Rainey], that the adoption of this amendment would be an insult to the Secretary of State.

Now, I want to say that I was one of the Members of the House who voted the other day to give to the Secretary of State an additional secretary whom he wanted at $4,500 a year; so that personally I have no disposition, I am sure, to insult the Secretary of State. But the statement of the gentleman from Illinois goes further than that. If his statement is true, and if his statement could be believed, that this is actually an insult or intended to be an insult to the Secretary of State, then it comes to this, that the Secretary of Commerce has intended by this matter and by the proposition herein contained to heap insult on the Secretary of State.

I do not believe that there is any Member of this House, and I do not believe that the gentleman from Illinois himself, would contend that the Secretary of Commerce had made a proposition for the purpose of insulting the Secretary of State.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New Jersey yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. McCOY. Certainly.

Mr. RAINEY. I am sorry that the gentleman misunderstood me. It was far from my intention to convey the impression that any member of this committee or any Member of this House intended to insult any member of the Cabinet. What I meant to say was that this amounts to an insult to this great department. If I was unfortunate in the use of terms, it is my fault. I want to acquit the gentleman from New Jersey of any such intention, and also to acquit every member of this committee and every Member of this House of any such intention; but that is in effect what it is. It is not a personal affront, but it is a challenge that takes away from the State Department powers that it has always had, and which the very organic act which I just read, establishing the Department of Commerce, concedes to it, and this in violation of that act.

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the gentleman say that my interpretation of his remarks was wrong, for I think I know him well enough to believe that he would not really claim what I have stated. But I so understood what he said.

Now, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] has said that the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Commerce are practically in accord on this matter, and it is simply a well-advised attempt on the part of the Secretary of Commerce to build up the foreign commerce of the United States. I think that it would be a calamity if the Senate amendment were not adopted and if that work were not left in the hands of the man and to be worked out by the brain of the man who had the genius to conceive the whole scheme.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New Jersey yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. McCOY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAINEY. Does the gentleman think that it would be a calamity—the amendment I am seeking an opportunity to propose—which permits the appointment of these attachés in accordance with the custom and the existing law and prevents duplication? Does the gentleman think it would be a calamity to have this work done under the authority of the State Department as it has always been done heretofore?

Mr. McCOY. I would say to the gentleman that I think that he is utterly mistaken in believing that this particular work has ever been done by the State Department.

Mr. RAINEY. I am not mistaken. It has always been done. We do not get a particle of information from abroad upon which our tariffs are based that does not come through the Department of State.

Mr. McCOY. This plan is not for the purpose of getting information upon which to frame any tariff bill, but it is for the purpose of getting information by these especially qualified men to be given to the manufacturers of this country, so that they may know more thoroughly than they know to-day the conditions which prevail abroad in order that they may be able to meet those conditions and build up our foreign trade.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit another interruption?

Mr. McCOY. Certainly.

Mr. RAINEY. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that we now have a bureau in the State Department controlled by officials known as trade advisers, who are performing these same functions and who are transmitting the information and advice which they get from abroad to the Secretary of Commerce, based on this information from the Department of Commerce, then issues every day information in the form of a pamphlet or little magazine that is sent broadcast throughout the country?

Mr. McCOY. Yes; I know that the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce issues these daily bulletins.

Mr. RAINEY. Where do they get the information contained in them?

Mr. McCOY. Through the consuls. But I know, from information conveyed to me by the Secretary of Commerce, that this new scheme will not duplicate any work that is now being done, but that it will result in having special work done under the direction of the man who has thought out the plan along different lines from those that are now being followed, and for the sole benefit of the manufacturers of the United States who are now seeking and who have got to seek in the future more than they have done in the past foreign markets, and who therefore must be informed about the conditions of foreign markets.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCOY. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to say that there is absolutely no want of harmony between the State Department and the Commerce Department on this proposition.

Mr. McCOY. So I understand; and the matter has been worked out satisfactorily in every way to all the parties concerned. I do not see why there should be any hesitation at all when the people who are vitally interested—if you please to say that the Secretaries are vitally interested—why there should be any hesitancy in the House and in the Senate in putting through a scheme to which nobody objects and which is designed to promote the public benefit.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New Jersey yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. McCOY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I understand the committee have been laboring in this matter for the purpose of expanding our trade abroad and developing the commerce of the country?

Mr. McCOY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. That is all right. But has the committee been looking after the sale of raw material—cotton and other things—sold to foreign countries? And what benefit will the farmers get if this project is put into effect?

Mr. McCOY. Of course similar benefit will accrue to the farmers.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

STATUE OF JOHN TYLER.

The SPEAKER. Before the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] begins the Chair announces as the committee to attend the unveiling of the statue of President John Tyler Messrs. MONTAGUE, FITZGERALD, BAKER, MANN, and MURDOCK.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House resumed consideration of the conference report on the bill H. R. 15279, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MANN. First, I should like to express my thanks to the Speaker for the compliment just accorded me in naming the committee.

Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some controversy as to whether the action which has been taken by the conferees in restoring the Senate amendment and throwing out the House change is an insult to the Secretary of State. I take it that the Secretary of State will be able to swallow the insult without any difficulty. Here is an appropriation of $100 000 to allow the appointment of some commercial attachés without regard to the requirements of the civil-service law. In a way these are political jobs, very necessary at this time; and I have no doubt whatever that the Secretary of State, who has proven his ability in many directions, but in no direction more completely than in his efforts to secure patronage for his friends, will be able to swallow the insult and secure from the Secretary of Commerce his share of the jobs.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UNDERWOOD). The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that there has been no insult offered by any House amendment or by anyone in this House against the Secretary of State quite so great as the insult which has just been offered him by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The enlargement of our foreign trade is too big a question for us to now quibble over as to who shall make the appointments in carrying on this important work. I am sure that there is entire harmony and understanding between the departments presided over by the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of State over this important matter. I think, by all means, it should come under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Commerce. The function of building up and enlarging our foreign trade is inherently a function of the Department of Commerce. Already we have under that head a Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. That particular branch of the Commerce Department already has performed and is performing an important work. They have frequently sent out agents into foreign countries, and have gathered, published, and distributed data to the commercial and manufacturing interests of this country that has been of most wonderful benefit to them. I know it has had that effect in several instances in my section. The same thing is true of New England. The Commerce Department knows more about foreign commerce than the Department of State would know, it is more in line with their work, and this service that we now propose to inaugurate ought to be done in conjunction with the work now being done by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce under the supervision of the Secretary of Commerce, and I am sure that the Secretary of State and the State Department will not accept it as an insult when we so provide. Being so enthusiastically for this service, I sincerely hope that the issue will not be beclouded over this minor contention, and that the Senate amendment and this report will be adopted.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me three minutes?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the conferees have adopted the Senate amendment in the form in which they have. I think these attachés should be under the Department of Commerce. I am not altogether certain that they will aid very much in restoring the dwindling commerce of the country, but at any rate it is our duty to make the effort. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] is unduly disturbed with regard to the effect that this policy will have upon the standing of the Secretary of State. He seems to think that if the Secretary of Commerce is given authority to control these attachés, it will become a question as to who is premier in the foreign affairs of the country, the Secretary of State or the Secretary of Commerce. I hope it is not so bad as that. That question, as to who shall shine supreme in the foreign policy of the Government, the present Secretary of State or the present Secretary of Commerce, is an alternative that few of us would desire to be confronted with, much less to settle or decide. So I think it is better to assume that no reflection on the Secretary of State is intended in this matter, and that here is an attempt—I fear it will not be very helpful, but at least it is an attempt—to stem the dwindling of our foreign trade, and possibly to assist in restoring some of the trade which we have lost under this administration.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I should not have had anything to say upon this proposition had it not been for the intimation that the adoption of this report would in effect be an insult to the Secretary of State and the great department of which he is the distinguished head.

As a member of the committee of conference I distinctly want to disclaim that the adoption of this report can possibly be so construed. I do not understand that there is the slightest difference between the two departments on this proposition or that the distinguished Secretary of State, for whom I have always had the highest personal admiration and esteem, either wishes or believes that these purely commercial attachés ought to be appointed by his department rather than by the Department of Commerce, which has to do with the matters with which they will have to deal. These attachés who are to be appointed under this provision are to have the duty of collecting information relative to markets and the supply and demand for our products abroad, in order that that information may be distributed among the manufacturers and commercial interests in this country, for the purpose of developing our foreign trade and supplying information as to the best foreign markets for our products. Their duties come peculiarly within the province of the Department of Commerce. In section 5 of the act organizing that department these duties, among others, are prescribed for that department: "To foster, promote, and develop the various manufacturing interests of the United States, and markets for the same at home and abroad, domestic and foreign, by gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying all available and useful information concerning such industries and such markets; and by such other methods and means as may be prescribed by the Secretary or provided by law." Now these attachés are for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of Commerce to fully perform these duties, which are so important in the complete and full development of our foreign-trade interests.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has intimated that these positions are political. I want to say that those who know the distinguished and highly efficient Secretary of Commerce will rest assured that he will choose the very best men he can get for these positions after the most careful and painstaking investigation. I hope that the conference report will be adopted.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, may I have two minutes?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, a moment ago I read from the organic law creating the Department of Commerce, which expressly forbids this very thing. Now, I want to read from the debates which occurred in the Senate when the original act was passed creating the Department of Commerce. On the 16th day of January, 1902 (pages 725–726 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD), the original act as presented to the Senate provided for the appointment of these trade attachés, or commercial agents as they are called in the original act, just as is now sought to be done by this Senate amendment. This is the debate that occurred at that time:

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Senate, Jan. 16, 1902, pp. 725–726.]

IN THE MATTER OF SENATE BILL 569, TO ESTABLISH THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to offer two or three small amendments, all of which have a common purpose, and that purpose is, to leave it within the control of the State Department to separate in the consular correspondence those portions which are diplomatic and political from those which are commercial, so that the commercial part may all be transferred to the Department of Commerce, but that any thing diplomatic or political shall be retained in the State Department. That work, of course, must be done in that department, in my opinion.

I shall offer a further amendment at the end of the bill providing for an officer in the State Department to take charge of that specific work, which * * * it is my proposition to transfer to the new department.

In line 6, section 5, page 5, after the words "Secretary of," I move to strike out "Commerce" and insert "State," so that the consuls, etc., shall act under the direction of the Secretary of State. It seems to me it is improper for them to have two masters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, section 5, line 6, after the words "Secretary of," it is proposed to strike out "Commerce" and insert "State," so as to read:

"And all consular officers of the United States, including consul generals, consuls, and commercial agents, are hereby required, and it is made a part of their duty, under the direction of the Secretary of State, to gather and compile from time to time useful and material information and statistics in respect to the commerce, industries, and markets of the countries and places to which such consular officers are accredited.

Mr. NELSON. There is no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In the same section, on page 5, line 10, after the words "to send," I move to insert "under the direction of the Secretary of State," so as to read:

"To send, under the direction of the Secretary of State, reports quarterly, or oftener if required," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. And the Secretary of State, as I understand, needs somebody to do the work which the bill imposes on his department; that is, to go over all these consular reports, separate the commercial part and send it to the new department, and also to transmit to the consuls their instructions, the object being to retain the work of editing the consular reports in the State Department, which I think is very essential, because that is the diplomatic and political department.

Mr. BACON. I quite agree with the Senator.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, somewhere in the bill that I saw as originally reported was a provision that our consuls at foreign ports should report to the Secretary of this new department.

Mr. SPOONER. That is on page 5.

Mr. HALE. That seemed to me to be faulty. Now, if the object of the Senator from Massachusetts is to cure that defect, he has in view precisely what I had, as to which I proposed to offer an amendment—that instead of the consular officers, who are officers of the State Department and appointed by the State Department, as they ought to be, and reporting to the State Department, as it seems to me they ought to do, the provision originally, as I understood it, was that they should have a divided allegiance and report directly to another department, which seemed to me not a good thing to do.

Mr. LODGE. On page 5 the bill has been so amended as to read:

"And all consular officers of the United States, including consul generals, consuls, and commercial agents, are hereby required, and it is made a part of their duty, under the direction of the Secretary of State"——

Mr. HALE. That is the provision to which I allude.

Mr. LODGE. The Senate has stricken out the word "commerce" and inserted the word "State," so as to read "Secretary of State." I am reading the provision as it has been amended.

Mr. HALE. That is proper.

Mr. LODGE. The clause continues—

"to gather and compile, from time to time, upon the request of the Secretary of Commerce, useful and material information and statistics in respect to the commerce, industries, and markets of the countries and places to which such consular officers are accredited"—

And so forth, so that it relieves them from two masters.

Mr. HALE. And does not in any way impair or undermine either the duties or dignities of the office of Secretary of State?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly not.

Mr. HALE. I think that ought to be done.

Mr. LODGE. It leaves him entirely in control of the Consular Service, as he ought to be, and authorizes the Secretary of the new Department of Commerce to say, "I want such and such information," and then the Department of State transmits it to the Department of Commerce. This is to permit an officer to do the work of editing and separating the consular reports.

Mr. HALE. I think, then, the bill has been very greatly improved. The State Department has not much real business to do, except in relation to the Consular Service. The diplomatic part—the part that is performed by ambassadors, ministers, and ministers resident—is more a matter of negotiation, which is ordinarily done outside of these offices; but the time when the State Department touches real business, the transaction of business of commerce in relation to which our citizens abroad have any interest, all comes under the Consular Service. * * * I should not, for one, be willing to consent that the duties of the Secretary of State or his responsibilities or his dignity should be impaired.

Mr. NELSON. The bill was originally in a form that required all consular officers to make reports relating to commercial matters directly to the Department of Commerce. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], after conferring with the State Department, came to the conclusion that oftentimes in consular reports diplomatic matters, or matters of quasi diplomatic character, were mixed with commercial matters, and therefore in order not to get the two confounded those commercial reports from consuls should first be sent to the State Department and edited by that department before being sent to the Department of Commerce. That is the object, and this amendment was drawn in harmony with that view.

Mr. SPOONER. I am obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to the amendment. I was not aware of it. It has put the language in a form which makes it altogether acceptable to me.

And as a result of the above discussion the law was framed as it now is. And this is an attempt to amend the original act establishing the Department of Commerce by restoring the matter which was stricken out at that time. It is a long step backward, and a most dangerous step to take. It will lead to tremendous confusion in the future. The time will come when, in order to avoid conflict between these great departments, you will be compelled to take away from the State Department a very large portion of the functions it now performs. Trade attachés are provided by other Governments; but they always act through and under and report to the departments of state of the several Governments employing this method of looking after matters of foreign trade.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, we are not undertaking to deprive the State Department of any authority that it now possesses. We are not undertaking to deprive the consular office of any of its privileges. We are providing in this bill a new method, an additional method of building up our foreign commerce. This plan has been carefully worked out by the Secretary of Commerce, and it has been discussed by the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of State. There is no conflict whatever between them. The bill has been agreed upon in conference, and is the same as was agreed upon by the Committee on Appropriations in the first instance. This being legislation, it was subject to a point of order and went out on a point of order. The Senate restored the provision in the exact language that the House had originally reported it. I think that this language is the proper language. The authority is placed under the proper Secretary, and I believe the plan now inaugurated will be of great benefit to the foreign commerce of the United States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this matter was carefully looked into by the committee. The attachés, or agents, are not to perform any diplomatic service whatever. The purpose is to enable the Government, so far as it properly may, to appoint agents to aid in the development of trade between the United States and foreign countries.

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I can not yield; I have only two minutes. I asked some questions in regard to the matter under investigation to ascertain whether there would be a conflict or impropriety in these agents being appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, and I made my inquiries of the Secretary of State. These estimates originated in the Department of Commerce. They were submitted to the President and were adopted by him as a part of the work to be done by this administration in making possible the development of a wider field and a wider market abroad for the products of the United States. I consulted the Secretary of State, and he believed that there was not any infringement on his jurisdiction. It is not the kind of work to be done, or such as should be done, by employees under the Department of State.

Before the Department of Commerce and Labor was created the Department of State had undertaken to do some of this work because there was no other regularly constituted branch of the Government service by which it could be done. The Committee on Appropriations, with the approval of Congress, has endeavored to properly segregate these duties which belong to the Department of Commerce and those which belong to the Department of State. It has endeavored to confine to the Department of State the duties which are peculiarly those of a diplomatic character and which belong to the Department of State, and to confine to the Department of Commerce those peculiar duties which will result in the proper encouragement and legitimate development of the commerce of the United States through governmental instrumentality, both at home and abroad. The amendment agreed upon in conference carries out this purpose, and I hope that the conference report will be adopted.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, before action is taken——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. MURDOCK. Are the questions of mileage and automobiles still in disagreement?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They are still in disagreement.

Mr. MURDOCK. And the adoption of this report does not affect those at all?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UNDERWOOD). The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAINEY) there were—53 ayes and 13 noes.

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, that disposes of all matters in the legislative bill except three Senate amendments, No. 1, No. 20, and No. 30. Nos. 1 and 30 deal with the mileage proposition and 20 deals with the automobiles. In order to get the matter before the House, I ask unanimous consent to consider amendments 1 and 30 together.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that amendments 1 and 30 be considered together. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendments No. 1 and No. 30.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, amendment No. 20 deals with automobiles for the Vice President and the Speaker of the House. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 20.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 20.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a preferential motion. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 20 and concur in the same.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Does the gentleman desire any time?

Mr. GOOD. About three minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, when this matter was before the House the other day I made some statement in regard to what I believe was the true situation so far as the Vice President was concerned. Following that statement there was some acrimonious debate in regard to the matter in which it was suggested that I had put the Vice President in a false light. I have since that time made some inquiry, and I believe the situation was just as I stated the other day—that while the Vice President will not ask, or, as was said on the floor of the House, lobby for this automobile, that when he is consulted in regard to the item he has no hesitancy in saying that the appropriation ought to be made. I think I am authorized by the other conferees on the part of the House to say that the Senate conferees insist upon their amendment. They insist that so far as the Senate is concerned there shall be an appropriation to give the Vice President of the United States a respectable conveyance in the way of an automobile, and they insist that the automobile that he has at the present time, which was purchased in 1909, is not a respectable conveyance. I believe this amendment ought to be agreed to without question. The Senate should not and will not yield so far as this item is concerned.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY], and I want to say that this question has been very thoroughly discussed and I think the Members all have their minds made up, and I hope we will then have a vote.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question before he yields to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Are these two items the only two things that are keeping back the enactment of this bill into law?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. This is the last day of the fiscal year, and if these items are agreed to the bill will become a law to-day?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, four years ago, in 1910, the Democrats of this House voted en masse against automobiles for the Speaker and Vice President. Mr. CLARK, now Speaker, voted against them. Mr. UNDERWOOD, now majority leader, voted against them. All of the Democrats voted against them. They denounced and condemned the appropriations for these automobiles; denounced them as a wanton waste of the public funds, as a criminal extravagance with the people's money. They made these appropriations a campaign issue. They went to the people upon that issue. Why is it that what was then a criminal waste of public funds in 1910 is justifiable to-day? I want the Democrats who have come into the House since that time to understand this change of front—the position then and now. I want you to understand that this vote is a test of Democratic consistency; that this vote is a test of Democratic sincerity [applause]; that this vote is a test of Democratic honesty to voters; that this vote is a test of Democratic good faith to the people. [Applause.]

It is not what men promise they will do before they go into office, nor what they declare they stand for afterwards, but the test of sincerity is what they do when they are clothed with power and authority. We are clothed with power and authority to-day, and constancy, sincerity, honesty, and good faith demand that we vote now for what we declared for and promised the people then. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER], and then I hope that we may be able to have a vote upon this.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, on the 24th of this month the New York Sun, in commenting on what was done in the House with this question a few days ago, made the following reference to what I said at that time:

> Mr. FOWLER intimated that it was his solemn belief that the automobile was a device of the devil—
>
> [Laughter]—
> and that there was something inherently wrong with men who used them.

This statement is in keeping with the long-established policy of this paper. It rarely stumbles on the truth. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, while I have no prejudice against the automobile, and while I never have intimated in my life that it originated in sin, and while I did not say what the Sun has unjustly attributed to me, yet I am ready to say now that some men who operate the automobile are akin to the devil, if the press reports of their inhuman, reckless, and criminal conduct are true. The evil does not lie in the automobile as a vehicle, but it results from its unlawful and criminal use. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, according to statistics 1,613 poor pedestrians lost their lives during the year 1913 on account of the reckless use of the automobile, and 6,733 people sustained injuries. The following is a list of fatalities resulting from disasters in this country during last year, 1913, as reported by the Chicago Tribune of December 30, 1913:

Loss of life by disasters during the year 1913.

By drowning	7,128
In mines	2,229
By automobiles	1,613
By fires	1,015
By cyclones and storms	628
By explosions	561
By electricity	251
By asphyxiation	225
By lightning	186
By elevators	85

This table shows that more people lost their lives in this country last year by the use of automobiles than resulted from explosions, electricity, lightning, elevators, and asphyxiation, and the most serious feature about the whole matter is the rapid increase of deaths and injuries from this source—702 people lost their lives from automobile injuries in 1911, 1,317 in 1912, and 1,613 in 1913. The death rate more than doubled in two years. The following figures show that the injuries have more than doubled during the last two years:

Injuries.

[From the Chicago Tribune, December 20, 1913.]

By automobiles in 1911	3,329
By automobiles in 1912	5,756
By automobiles in 1913	6,733

Street fatalities in New York.

[From New York Times.]

	1911	1912	1913
By automobiles	142	221	302
By trollies	109	134	108
By wagons	172	177	170
Total	423	532	580

Highway killings.

[From New York Times.]

	1911	1912	1913
By automobiles	132	127	144
By trolleys	67	79	79
By wagons	31	28	32
Total	230	234	260

Number of automobile accidents in New York for 1913, 1,485; number of arrests made, 62, or 1 in every 25, while in 1 accident out of every 15 the driver ran away without giving aid to the injured or disclosing his identity. One hundred and two such cases occurred in New York City in 1913, which is an average of more than 2 a week, notwithstanding it is a felony to escape in such an unmanly and inhuman way.

Mr. Speaker, the New York Times of February 8, 1914, states that the National Highway Protective Society reports the following to be the rate of automobile fatalities for 1913 in some of the large cities in the world:

AUTOMOBILE FATALITIES.

Los Angeles, Cal., 153 to the 1,000,000.
Atlantic City, 87 to the 1,000,000.
Utica, N. Y., 70 to the 1,000,000.
New York City, 64 to the 1,000,000.
London's rate for 1912, 46 to the 1,000,000.
Berlin, 23 to the 1,000,000.
Paris, 27 to the 1,000,000.
Vienna, 3 to the 1,000,000
Glascow, 12 to the 1,000,000.

The death rate in the cities is large and the death rate in the small towns and in the country is small. This is true only in some cases, as in New York the rural death rate is 27 to the 1,000,000, while in New Jersey the rate is 50 to the 1,000,000. The rate for the entire State of New York is 50 to the 1,000,000, and New Jersey 44 to the 1,000,000.

DEATHS.

By street cars in New York, 23 to the 1,000,000.
By wagons in New York, 38 to the 1,000,000.
By street cars in Buffalo, 47 to the 1,000,000.
By street cars in Albany, 40 to the 1,000,000.
Atlantic City had no deaths by street cars or wagons.

Rate of deaths in the whole State by street cars in New York was 2 to the 1,000,000, as compared to 11 in New Jersey.

New York death rate by wagons, 22 to the 1,000,000.

New Jersey death rate by wagons, 10 to the 1,000,000.

Death rate by street cars, 1912, London, 5 to the 1,000,000; Paris, 25 to the 1,000,000.

Death rate by wagons, 1912, London, 24 to the 1,000,000; Paris, 16 to the 1,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, these tables reveal a recklessness in the use of the automobile which is sufficient to either condemn its use or to justify the regulation of its use by law. The wagon is used for commercial purposes, chiefly, and far more universal than the automobile, yet death and injury is much more frequent from the use of the automobile. The death rate from automobiles in America is much higher than in Europe. This undoubtedly results from the haughty practices of the rich in speeding their cars at a high rate, regardless of the evil results. Their criminal conduct is such that the poor footpad is in constant danger of losing his life while on the roads or streets. They get off by small fines in court instead of long terms in the penitentiary. A good conviction for murder is what they often deserve.

Mr. Speaker, there is a prejudice against the automobile which has its origin in the abuse of its use by the reckless, idle rich, and it will be a long time before it dies out. We have much need for the automobile, but it must respect the rights of the common people and conform its use to the good of the public.

Mr. Speaker, I have no objection whatever to a decent use of an automobile, but I have opposition to the way in which it is proposed to pay for the two provided for in this bill. I stand for the Treasury of my country, and I am not in favor of going down into the pockets of the people of my district and of my country to pay for automobiles for other men to ride in. I understand the Vice President of the United States has an automobile at the expense of the people of this country. If it is not good enough and fine enough for him, let him buy one for himself and pay for it. I understand the Speaker does not want one. The great danger to our Treasury lies in the precedent of buying an automobile for any officer of the Government. You give one to the President, one to the Vice President, and one to the Speaker at public expense, and then to be consistent you must give one to the head of every department of this Government, and then will follow an excuse for one for every head of all the bureaus and divisions of the departments of Government. And after a while Members of Congress will be asking for one for each Member. [Applause and cheers.] That will probably not be the end of it, Mr. Speaker. We have 400,000 employees in this Government, and each of them is as much entitled to an automobile as the Members on the floor of this House [cries of "Oh, no!" "Oh, no!"] or the heads of divisions and bureaus. Oh, yes; whenever anybody talks of favors for the poor man, or a square deal for him, you give him the horselaugh. [Applause and cheers.] Shame on such conduct. We should render to Cæsar what is due Cæsar and no more, and we ought to give to labor what is due labor, the same as we do to capital. At each extravagant step, I imagine I can hear the Treasury of my country shouting "Bankruptcy! Bankruptcy!" "My country, 'tis of thee, sweet land of liberty, of thee I sing."

Mr. Speaker, if this House votes for this extravagance I hope it will be known to every voter in this land. Every man who votes for it will have to go on record unless there is a quorum here or unless I should fail to get a sufficient number to stand up on my demand for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from South Carolina to yield to me for five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, and I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, just one moment. The gentleman from Illinois is going to speak for five minutes, and I think the gentleman from South Carolina ought to reserve some time for himself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman withdraw his request?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, two years ago about this time there was gathering over at Baltimore the advance guard of the Democratic national convention. Among the great men who were being considered for the nomination for the Presidency by that convention was the then and present Speaker of this House. Everyone knows that at one time in that convention CHAMP CLARK had received a majority of all the votes in the convention, and that that majority continued on nine roll calls.

Under every other circumstance except the peculiar rule of the Democratic convention that majority would have nominated Mr. CLARK for the Presidency, and if nominated he would have been elected. [Applause.] I do not propose to draw any comparison between our Speaker and the present President of the United States, for both of whom I entertain profound respect, but it is fair to say that if CHAMP CLARK had been nominated and elected President of the United States we would all have been proud of him in that position. [Applause.] He was defeated for the Presidency by the old-fashioned and to me peculiar rule of the Democratic convention. But it is not my intention to express any opinion concerning the merits or demerits of the rule—that is for the Democratic Party to determine—but it was a peculiar thing that with the great majority of the chiefs of the party present, with almost a certainty of success in advance, I think, that the man who could secure a majority of the votes, ballot after ballot, was in the end defeated for the nomination. This House made what reparation it could in the reelection of CHAMP CLARK [applause] as its Speaker. I think he makes a great Speaker [applause]; that he considers the duties of his office impartially, above partisan advantage; that he brings to that office great ability, great patience, great good nature, and great statesmanship. [Applause.] I believe we ought to make him a slight recognition of his great ability as Speaker of this House, remembering, as we may, that but for a chance he would now be the President of the United States, enjoying the privilege of many automobiles and privileges in many other directions. I think the people will be prouder of us if we show our faith and our pride in him and give him an automobile. [Loud applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, who moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division—to save time. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty Members are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper——

Mr. MANN. I suggest that some gentleman move a call of the House.

Mr. GARNER. We are dividing on the question.

Mr. MANN. No; we are not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it. Thereupon the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] first demanded a division and then made the point of order there was no quorum present, and the Chair rules that is a division of the House. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest, in view of what took place the other day, we ought to have order here in order to obviate a repetition of what then occurred. Gentlemen should take their seats and not roam around here as they are doing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. HAMLIN. For a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMLIN. Is this vote on the motion made by the gentleman from Iowa?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The proposition before the House is Senate amendment No. 20, which provides for an automobile for the Speaker and for the Vice President. The House had heretofore disagreed to the amendment, and the gentleman from Iowa now moves to recede and concur in the Senate amendment, and a vote of "aye" is in favor of the amendment.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 138, nays 120, answered "present" 7, not voting 168, as follows:

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. WEAVER. I believe I voted "yea," and I wish to change my vote and vote "present."

The name of Mr. SLOAN was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. BARTLETT. I would like to withdraw my vote of "yea" and vote "present."

The name of Mr. BUTLER was called, and he answered "Present."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this vote the yeas are 138, nays 120, answered "present" 7—a quorum. The motion is agreed to.

The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to change the form of the motion that I made a while ago on amendment No. 1. I moved that the House further insist on its disagreement. The House had amended the amendment of the Senate, and the form of the motion should have been that I move that the House further insist upon the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to correct the motion that was made by him a few minutes ago in the way in which he has indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House ask for a conference with the Senate upon the remaining amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House ask a further conference with the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the following conferees:

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, and Mr. GOOD.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the question of the trade attachés.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks made this afternoon on the pending bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend by remarks in the RECORD on the subject of automobiles.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of automobiles. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had still further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10523) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, numbered 28, 31, 226, and 227, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. LEA of Tennessee, and Mr. GALLINGER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF GENERAL DAM ACT.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 16053, a bill to amend the act regulating the construction of dams on navigable streams.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 16053——

Mr. ADAMSON. And pending that motion, I do not wish to undertake to limit debate at this time. I prefer to proceed a while and ascertain the temper and desire of the House on the subject. At present, I would like to ask unanimous consent that the control of whatever time we do consume may be equally divided between the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] and myself, with the assurance to all gentlemen who wish in any way, wholly or partially, to antagonize the bill, that on this side of the House they shall have perfectly fair treatment in the yielding of time; and I think they will on the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia, pending the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, requests that general debate on the bill in Committee of the Whole be controlled by himself on one side and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] on the other side, the time to be equally divided. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Reserving the right to object, I want to make an inquiry. Would the gentleman from Georgia, in the event that it developed that certain of us would want to make some objections to this bill, and in the event we can not agree on some amendments that seem important to us, as I understand it, yield part of the time to one opposing the bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. Any gentleman on this side of the House, without regard to his position or views, will have perfectly fair treatment.

Mr. FERRIS. So I anticipated. Of course, it is true as the matter now stands, that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] and the gentleman in charge of the bill are both favorable to the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Minnesota can speak for himself on the subject. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] knows that he can get consideration from me.

Mr. FERRIS. I so understood it; but there are others who thought they might have some objection to the bill, and, in the event they had, did not want to be precluded.

Mr. ADAMSON. If I was as smart as I am fair, I would be a wonder. [Laughter.]

Mr. MURDOCK. If the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] is not able to yield sufficient time, can we depend on the gentleman from Georgia for time?

Mr. ADAMSON. If the liberality of the gentleman from Minnesota should unexpectedly fail, I will stand his security to take care of my friend from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. If his supply of time should fail.

Mr. ADAMSON. Of course, the time may be cut short; but I am not going to insist on it until everybody has a reasonably fair chance.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] if there will be any objection in the course of the general debate to speeches which will not be confined to the bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, speaking for myself, I would prefer that, inasmuch as there are so many people wanting to say so much about the bill, we confine the debate to the bill; but I do not know of any way to do it under the rule in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LENROOT. Reserving the right to object, may I not suggest that we have this understanding, that during the first portion of the debate, at least, the time will be yielded to those who wish to speak on the bill, so that Members may have an opportunity to get acquainted with the bill itself?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] to the fact that on a bill of this kind in the Committee of the Whole any gentleman who attempts to address the committee and not speak to the bill will have his speech subject to a point of order.

Mr. ADAMSON. I am glad the Speaker rules so, and I do not think I will consent to vary it.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, if the Speaker will allow me to say it, I think the Speaker is making a mistake as to the usual custom. The point of order lies in Committee of the Whole and not in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not attempt to decide the question, because that is a question for the determination of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and I think the latitude in debate is confined to revenue bills and general appropriation bills.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the suggestion of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is that during the first hours of the debate we shall stick to the bill.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I desire to save time, but I have had quite a number of inquiries from gentlemen who desire to speak on general subjects. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is entirely wise and fair to the House, and, so far as I am concerned, in the early stages of the debate I shall endeavor to confine it to the legitimate discussion of the provisions in the bill; but at the same time I think it is only fair to notify the House that some gentlemen have applied to me for time who do not desire to discuss exclusively the provisions of the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, when the committee rises again consideration can be given to that matter. In the meantime I would like to get into the discussion of the bill for a few hours.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question before the House is the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] that general debate be controlled on this bill by himself and by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS], the time to be equally divided. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 16053. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 16053, amending the general dam act, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 16053, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16053) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes upon a subject not entirely related to the bill under consideration, the time to be yielded to me by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON]. That arrangement will suit his convenience.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a moment for the Chair to suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I was going to do that, but the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] wanted to get in as early as possible. I told him he would have to get unanimous consent. I shall be glad to accommodate him with 10 minutes if gentlemen will agree to it. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the bill be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes. I will make my request in consequence of the suggestion of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], that in lieu of its being read it be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Following is the full text of the bill:

A bill (H. R. 16053) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 23, 1910, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That when consent has been or may hereafter be granted by Congress, either directly or indirectly, through any duly authorized official or officials of the United States, to any persons to construct and maintain a dam for water power or other purpose across or in any of the navigable waters of the United States, such dam shall not be built or commenced until the plans and specifications for such dam and all accessory works, together with such drawings of the proposed construction and such map of the proposed location as may be required for a full understanding of the subject, have been submitted to the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers for their approval, nor until they shall have approved such plans and specifications and the location of such dam and accessory works; and after such approval it shall not be lawful to deviate from such plans or specifications either before or after completion of the structure unless the modification of such plans or specifications has previously been submitted to and received the approval of the Chief of Engineers and of the Secretary of War.

"SEC. 2. That as a part of such approval such conditions and stipulations may be imposed as the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers may deem necessary to protect the present and future interests of the United States, which may include the condition that the persons constructing or maintaining such dam shall construct, maintain, and operate in connection therewith, without expense to the United States, a lock or locks, booms, sluices, or any other structure or structures which the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers or Congress then may deem necessary in the interests of navigation, in accordance with plans made a part of such approval; and also that in case such facilities of navigation shall not be made a part of such original approval and construction, whenever Congress shall deem such facilities necessary, the persons owning such dam shall convey to the United States, free of cost, title to such land as may be required for such constructions and approaches, and shall grant to the United States free water power or power generated from water power for building and operating such constructions, and in such original approval, at the discretion of the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers, may be required to maintain and operate such lock without expense to the United States.

"SEC. 3. That as a part of said approval the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers shall require that the plans, specifications, and location for any dam shall be such as shall be best adapted to a comprehensive plan for the improvement of the waterway in question for the uses of navigation and for the full development of its water power and for other beneficial public purposes, and best adapted to conserve and utilize, in the interests of navigation and water-power development, the water resources of the region.

"SEC. 4. That as a part of the conditions and stipulations such approval shall provide—

"(a) For reimbursement to the United States of all expenses incurred by the United States with reference to the project, including the cost of any investigation necessary for the approval of the plans as heretofore provided, and for such supervision of construction as may be necessary in the interest of the United States.

"(b) For the payment to the United States of reasonable charges for the benefits which may accrue to such project through the construction, operation, and maintenance by the United States of headwater improvements, including storage reservoirs, on any such stream, such charges to be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers and to be based upon a reasonable compensation equitably apportioned among the grantee and others similarly situated upon the same stream receiving benefits by reason of increase of flow past their water-power structures artificially caused by such headwater improvements, the total charges to all such beneficiaries from any such headwater improvement not to exceed in any one year an amount equal to 5 per cent of the total investment cost, in addition to the necessary annual expense of the operation of such headwater improvement.

"(c) That in the construction, maintenance, and operation of such dam and accessory works there may be occupied and used such lands of the United States as may be necessary therefor, and in consideration thereof the owner of such dam shall pay to the United States such charges, not to exceed an annual payment of 5 per cent of the fair value of such lands, as may be fixed by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers, and in fixing such charges consideration shall be taken of the benefits accruing thereby to the interests of navigation as well as to the business of such grantee.

"(d) For the payment or securing the payment to the United States of such sums and in such manner as the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers may deem reasonable and just substantially to restore conditions upon such stream as to navigability as existing at the time of such approval, whenever the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers shall determine that navigation would be injured by reason of the construction, maintenance, and operation of such dam and its accessory works.

"SEC. 5. That the operation of navigation facilities which shall be constructed as a part of or in connection with any such dam, whether at the expense of such grantee or of the United States, shall at all times be subject to such reasonable rules and regulations in the interest of navigation, including the control of the level of the pool caused by any such dam, as shall be made by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers, and in the use and operation of such navigation facilities the interests of navigation shall be paramount to the uses of such dam by such grantee for power purposes. Such rules and regulations may include the maintenance and operation by such grantee, at its own expense, of such lights and other signals as may be directed by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers and such fishways as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce, and for failure to comply with any such rule or regulation such grantee shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be subject to a fine of not less than $500 for each month's default, in addition to other penalties herein prescribed or provided by law.

"SEC. 6. That the persons constructing, maintaining, or operating any dam or appurtenant or accessory works, in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be liable for any damage that may be inflicted thereby upon private property, either by overflow or otherwise.

"SEC. 7. That any grantee who shall fail or refuse to comply with the lawful order of the Secretary of War, made in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, and every month such grantee shall remain in default shall be deemed a new offense and subject such grantee to additional penalties therefor; and in addition to said penalties the Attorney General may, on request of the Secretary of War, institute proper proceedings in the district court of the United States in the district in which such structure or any of its accessory works may, in whole or in part, exist, for the purpose of having such violation stopped by injunction, mandamus, or other process; and any such district court shall have jurisdiction over all such proceedings and shall have the power to make and enforce all writs, orders, and decrees necessary to compel the compliance with the requirements of this act and the lawful orders of the Secretary of War and the performance of any condition or stipulation imposed under the provisions of this act; and if the unlawful maintenance and operation are shown to be such as shall require a revocation of all rights and privileges held under authority of this act, the court may decree such revocation. In case of such a decree, the court may wind up the business of such grantee conducted under the rights in question, and may decree the sale of the dam and all appurtenant property constructed or acquired under authority of this act, and may declare such dam and accessory works to be an unreasonable obstruction to navigation and cause their removal at the expense of the grantee owning or controlling the same, except when the United States has been previously reimbursed for such removal, or may provide for the sale of the dam and all accessory and appurtenant works constructed under authority of this act for the further development of water power, and may make and enforce such other and further orders and decrees as equity demands; and in case of such a sale for the further development of water power the vendee shall take the rights and privileges and shall perform the duties which belonged to the previous grantee, and shall assume such outstanding obligations and liabilities arising out of the mainte- nance and operation of said dam and accessory works for power purposes as the court may deem equitable in the premises.

"Sec. 8. That no property or project installed and operated under the provisions or benefits of this act shall be assigned or transferred except upon the written consent of the Secretary of War, except by trust deed or mortgage issued for the purpose of financing the business of such owner, and any successor or assign of such property or project, whether by voluntary transfer, judicial sale, or foreclosure sale or otherwise, shall be subject to all the conditions of the approval under which such rights are held, and also subject to all the provisions and conditions of this act to the same extent as though such successor or assign were the original owner hereunder.

"SEC. 9. That the rights herein granted shall continue for a period of 50 years from and after the date of the completion of the structure described in the original approval, and after the expiration of said 50 years such rights shall continue until compensation has been made to said grantee for the fair value of its property, as hereinafter provided.

"Sec. 10. That at any time after the expiration of said 50 years the Secretary of War may terminate the rights hereby granted upon giving to the owners thereof one year's notice in writing of such termination, and upon the taking over by the United States, or by any person authorized by Congress, of all of the property dependent in whole or in part for its usefulness upon the rights hereby granted, which shall include all necessary and appurtenant property created or acquired and valuable or serviceable in the distribution of water, or in the generation, transmission, and distribution of power, and all other property the value and usefulness of which would be destroyed or seriously impaired by such termination, and upon paying the fair value of said property, together with the cost to the grantee of the lock or locks or other aids to navigation and all other capital expenditures required by the United States, and assuming all contracts entered into prior to the receipt by it of said notice of termination which have the approval of the duly constituted public authority having jurisdiction thereof, or which were entered into in good faith and at a reasonable rate, in view of all the circumstances existing at the time such contracts were made. The fair value of said property and the reasonableness and good faith of such contracts shall be determined by agreement between the Secretary of War and the owners of such property, and in the event of their failure to agree, then by proceedings instituted by the United States, or by any person authorized by Congress, in the district court of the United States within which any portion of such dam may be located. In the determination of the value of said property upon the termination of said grant as above provided no value shall be claimed by or allowed for the consent hereby granted, nor for good will, profit in pending contracts, nor other conditions of current or prospective business.

"Sec. 11. That in all cases where the electric current generated from or by any of the projects provided for in this act shall enter into interstate or foreign commerce, the rates, charges, and service for the same to the consumers thereof shall be just and reasonable, and every unjust and unreasonable and unduly discriminatory charge, rate, or service therefor is hereby prohibited and declared to be illegal; and whenever the Secretary of War shall be of the opinion that the rates or charges demanded or collected on the service rendered for such electric current are unjust, unreasonable, or unduly discriminatory, upon complaint made therefor and full hearing thereon the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to determine and prescribe what shall be the just and reasonable rates and charges therefor to be observed as the maximum to be charged and the service to be rendered; and in case of the violation of any such order of the Secretary of War the provisions of this act relative to forfeiture and failure to comply shall apply. That in the valuation for rate-making purposes of the property existing under said approval of the project there may be considered any lock or locks, or other aids to navigation, and all other capital expenditures required by the United States.

"The Secretary of War is further authorized and directed to include among the conditions for his approval of any plans or any project herein provided, as an express condition thereof, a clause reserving to the Secretary of War the same rights, powers, and duties set forth in this section, together with the same penalty for violation thereof: Provided, That whenever the State in which such current shall be used shall have provided by law adequate regulation for rates, charges, and service to the consumers for such electric current and such regulation shall not be unduly discriminatory or unjust against the service or charges in any other State arising from the use of the power from the same project, and such facts shall be established to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, then in such case the provisions of this section shall not apply to the rates, charges, and service in and for such State.

"SEC. 12. That the grantee shall commence the construction of the dam and accessory works within one year from the date of the approval herein provided, and shall thereafter, in good faith and with due diligence, prosecute such construction, and shall, within the further term of three years, complete and put in commercial operation such part of the ultimate development as the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers shall deem necessary to supply the reasonable needs of the then available market, and shall, from time to time thereafter, construct such portion of the balance of such ultimate development as said Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers may direct and within the time specified by said Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers so as to supply adequately the reasonable market demands until such ultimate development shall be completed; and extensions of the periods herein specified, not to exceed two years, may be granted by the Secretary of War, on recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, when, in his judgment, the public interest will be promoted thereby. In case the grantee shall not commence actual construction within the time herein prescribed, or as extended by the Secretary of War, then the authority as to such grantee shall terminate, and in case any dam and accessory works be not completed within the time herein specified or extended as herein provided, then the Attorney General, upon the request of the Secretary of War, shall institute proper proceedings in the proper district court of the United States for the revocation of said authority, the sale of the works constructed, and such other equitable relief as the case may demand, as provided for in section 8 of this act.

"SEC. 13. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved as to any and all dams which may be authorized in accordance with the provisions of this act whenever Congress determines that the conditions of consent have been violated. In such case the United States shall incur no liability for the alteration, amendment, or repeal thereof to the owner or owners or any other persons interested in such dam.

"Sec. 14. That the Secretary of War, upon the advice and with the approval of the Chief of Engineers, may lease to any applicant having complied with the laws of the State in which the dam is constructed or to be constructed by the United States, the right to develop power from the surplus water over and above that required for navigation at any navigation dam now or hereafter constructed, either with or without contribution by the applicant, and owned by the United States, and on such terms as may be deemed by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers for the best interests of the United States, and in awarding such lease preference shall be given to the applicant whose plans are deemed by any action of Congress or by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers to be best adapted to conserve and utilize in the public interest the navigation and water-power resources of the region, and all such leases and the parties thereto and the terms and conditions thereof shall be reported annually to Congress.

"Sec. 15. That no works constructed, maintained, and operated under the provisions of this act shall be owned, trusteed, or controlled by any device or in any manner so that they may form a part of, or in any manner effect, a combination in the form of an unlawful trust or form the subject of an unlawful contract or conspiracy to limit the output of electric energy or in restraint of the generation, sale, or distribution of electric energy, or the exercises of any other business contemplated: Provided, however, That it shall be lawful under the approval of the Secretary of War for different grantees to exchange and interchange currents, to assist one another whenever necessary, by supplementing the currents or power, and enable any grantee to secure assistance to carry on the business and supply his customers, accounting therefor and paying therefor under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

"In no case shall such an arrangement be permitted to raise the price, render unjust or unfair any practice, work, or discrimination, or operate in restraint of trade.

"SEC. 16. That the word 'persons' as used in this act shall be construed to import both the singular and the plural, as the case demands, and shall include corporations, companies, and associations. The word 'dam' as used in this act shall be construed to import both the singular and plural, as the case demands.

"Sec. 17. That all provisions in this act contained fixing conditions upon which the consent of Congress is granted for the construction of dams shall apply alike to all existing enterprises in operation or authorized, as well as to new projects to which the consent of Congress may hereafter be granted. All conflicting provisions contained in any act of Congress granting consent to the construction of any dam are hereby repealed, and all such previous authorizations are so altered, amended, and modified hereby as to conform to all of the conditions and provisions incorporated in this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes on a subject not entirely related to the bill under consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, do I understand that general debate has begun?

Mr. ADAMSON. The Speaker pro tempore of the House ruled that on a bill of this character the debate would have to be confined to the subject of the bill. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] wanted to say something—I do not know what—and asked me for 5 or 10 minutes, and it will suit my convenience very well just at this time, before beginning my argument, to yield to him or to somebody else.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I did not understand that the Speaker——

Mr. COOPER. When did the Speaker, or the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, rule that he himself had the right to decide that general debate must be confined to the bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not know that any Speaker has ever ruled it, but the Speaker pro tempore, just before yielding the chair to the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, indicated that that was his opinion, although he left it to the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole to decide.

Mr. COOPER. Well, Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I wish at this point to say that I am opposed to the gentleman from New Jersey asking the permission of anybody to discuss any subject it may please him to discuss during general debate.

One of the most valuable privileges for a legislative body is the right of free speech—a privilege which under the rules is known in this House only during general debate. If it be proposed now to establish this new rule, or precedent, then hereafter a House machine need only to control the selection of measures to be considered here in order absolutely to limit the subjects which gentlemen can discuss on this floor and bring to the attention of the country.

This is a matter vastly too important to be trifled with. Similar efforts have been attempted before in the history of the House, but these always met with defeat. The present effort ought to be promptly defeated, because if successful in creating a precedent it would, under the rules, leave the House with no right at any time to discuss anything, however important, not relating strictly to some measure that might chance to be up here.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will permit, the Chair's understanding of the rule applicable to general debate when the House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is——

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair rules, I would be glad to make a remark——

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). That you can talk about any subject you want, and the Chair, under the present circumstances will hold, unless the committee instructs otherwise, that any subject can be discussed while in Committee of the Whole on the bill.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, it was not my understanding that the Speaker pro tempore ruled that general debate would not be in order.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER. Then, if the ruling of the Chair is what I understand it to be, it is entirely unnecessary for the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] to ask unanimous consent to discuss any subject he now may desire to discuss.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I did not anticipate rousing my eloquent friend from Wisconsin to make such a deliverance. I am in full sympathy with him as to the general principles on the subject, and I showed my willingness to allow something else to be talked about by offering to yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND]. But when the matter was mentioned before the House went into the Committee of the Whole, I had made the suggestion, at the mention of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], and the occupant of the chair, then presiding as Speaker pro tempore [Mr. UNDERWOOD], said that his idea was that under the consideration of this bill debate must be confined to the subject. Therefore I indicated my willingness that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] might talk about anything he pleased, provided he approached the subject by obtaining permission if it was necessary to do so.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I understood the Speaker pro tempore to say that it was his impression that general debate would not be in order, but that he would not rule on that question at that time; and I think the RECORD will show that.

Mr. ADAMSON. He said he would not rule on that, but would leave it for the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MURDOCK. The Chairman has ruled.

Mr. ADAIR. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] is recognized, and the gentleman from Georgia yields to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. ADAMSON. It is now understood that under the rules the gentleman may talk about any subject he pleases. Therefore I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] to talk about whatever he chooses to discuss. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I have to-day introduced a House resolution which, if adopted, will direct the Interstate Commerce Commission to examine the affairs of the Wabash Pittsburgh Terminal Railway Co., with a view to ascertaining certain very interesting facts which have engaged the attention of a great many men interested in observing the operations in high finance throughout the country. I think, in fact, in spite of the debate which preceded my modest request for 10 minutes, that I come under the rule as to speaking pertinently, because there are certain physical or topographical conditions in Pittsburgh which result in making the possession of a terminal railroad there almost what might be defined as a natural resource.

On June 21 last a newspaper reporting the sale of bonds on the New York Stock Exchange listed the sale of 3,000 Wabash Pittsburgh Terminal Co.'s first 4 per cent bonds at 7½ cents on the dollar. These bonds were part of an issue of $30,236,000 sold through well-known New York bankers at from 90 to 92. There, in stock-exchange figures, is the story of the wrecking of the Wabash Pittsburgh Terminal Railway Co., whose bonds were disposed of at from 90 to 92 and bought by many life insurance companies, savings banks, and numerous private purchasers, who have seen their property dissipated and wrecked, and have been unable to secure aid or restitution or redress from the courts or from the Department of Justice of the United States under a former administration.

From May 9, 1904, when the Wabash Pittsburgh Terminal Railway Co. was organized under the laws of Pennsylvania, until to-day no other story of high finance, as the alleged facts are presented to me, sets forth such a tangled tale of trickery, shifty dealing, repudiation, denunciation of contracts, and spoliation as this. My purpose in bringing the matter before Congress, in the hope that thereby may result official investigation, is, first, that such investigation may lead to restitution, in part at least, to defrauded investors, to the punishment of the looters, to the reestablishment of this corporation upon a sound and healthy and honest basis, and to rid Wall Street of one of the scandals which has brought hundreds of reputable financiers into undeserved disrepute.

I have many acquaintances who are so-called Wall Street men; they are residents of my district; they have talked with me about these matters; and I know that no class of men in the country are more eager to have the causes of this wreck investigated than are they. They have no part in such proceedings, and they detest the men who do carry on such proceedings as thoroughly as do any other honest men.

One citizen of my district, who for many years has had an office in Wall Street, wrote to me recently this significant comment:

> In a nutshell, the characteristic difference between the Wabash Pittsburgh looting and the New Haven looting may be one of intent. It seems probable that the latter was accomplished as an incident in the pursuit of power, without intent, or even expectation, of wrecking the property. On the other hand, there is much circumstantial evidence to create the suspicion that the wreck of the Wabash Pittsburgh Terminal was the goal aimed at almost from the beginning, and that the plan from an early stage was to take property by plain robbery under legal forms.

Much has been published, chiefly in financial papers, about this matter, but it is probable that the general public have not been informed of some facts, knowledge of which is necessary for even a partial understanding of what has the appearance of wrecking and looting which have brought the price of more than $30,000,000 worth of bonds from almost par to the nominal price of 7½ cents on the dollar.

Prior to 1904 the Pennsylvania Railroad and its allies enjoyed practically a monopoly of the freight business of Pittsburgh, the greatest freight-producing center in the country. The great shippers of that city, including Mr. Carnegie, determined to provide real competition, both in freight and passenger business at that point, and with the promise of substantial patronage financial operations were carried on to provide ways and means which would give that competition so much desired.

Without at this time going into the details of the preliminary work, it seems necessary only to recall that the Pittsburgh-Toledo syndicate was formed, whose managers were George Gould; Joseph Ramsey, jr., then president of the Wabash Railroad and of the Wheeling & Lake Erie Railroad; Louis Fitzgerald; James Hazen Hyde, of life insurance investigation fame; and Myron T. Herrick, now United States ambassador to France. This syndicate bought through Washington Connor, as I am informed, 51 7/10 per cent of the stocks of various classes of Wheeling & Lake Erie Railroad Co. and built a line of railroad from Pittsburgh to Jewett, Ohio, some 60 miles, making a connection at Jewett with the Wheeling & Lake Erie, which system connected at Toledo with the Wabash system and thence to the Pacific Ocean. It was also understood that connection would be made with the Western Maryland and with the Atlantic seaboard. This Jewett line was built in the most expensive manner as to low grades, tunneling, bridges, and so forth. Tunneling, bridges, and grading were for two tracks, although only one line of rails was laid.

The property acquired and constructed by this syndicate was turned over to the Wabash Pittsburgh Terminal Railway Co. In addition to the Jewett line and the controlling ownership in the Wheeling & Lake Erie turned over by the syndicate to the Wabash Pittsburgh Terminal Railway Co., the latter acquired the stock of the Pittsburg Terminal Railroad & Coal Co., which owned the West Side Belt Line, a 20-mile railway furnishing connection with the important freight-producing industries of Pittsburgh and other railways. The coal company also owned 15,000 acres of Pittsburgh seam-coal lands, much surface land, and several coal mines lying on the belt line. The total cost of all this property has been estimated, by an expert in whose judgment I have entire confidence, at approximately $50,000,000 over and above some liabilities assumed. Part of the acquisition of this property was through purchases directly by payment of the purchase price in bonds, and part through funds derived from the sale of bonds through New York bond houses referred to above. My information is that among the purchasers of these bonds, who in many cases still own them, were the Equitable Life Insurance Co., Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., Scottish Union Insurance Co., Aetna Life Insurance Co., Baltimore Life Insurance Co., Berkshire Life Insurance Co., Casualty Co. of America, Provident Life Insurance Co., Milwaukee Insurance Co., State Mutual Insurance Co., Traders' Insurance Co., American Insurance Co., Phoenix Insurance Co., Alleghany Bank of Secured Savings, Pittsburgh Bank of Savings, Pottsville Safe Deposit Bank, and Scranton Savings Bank.

Why such purchasers felt justified in making their purchases is suggested by some of the statements made by the bond houses who advertised these 4 per cents. I quote from a circular of one of the well-known bond houses:

> The railways, terminals, and contracts owned by the Terminal Co. comprises a connection into Pittsburgh probably impossible to duplicate, and places it in the best possible condition to move the immense tonnage of the district, assuring a large and profitable traffic from the beginning.

The circular of another well-known bond house, dated November 14, 1904, reads in part:

The bonds are further secured by the deposit with the trustee of the controlling interest in the Wheeling & Lake Erie Railroad Co., and are also secured by traffic and trackage contracts between the Terminal Co., the Wabash Railroad Co., and the Wheeling & Lake Erie Railroad Co., whereby 25 per cent of the gross earnings of the two latter companies derived from business east of Chicago and St. Louis from all classes of traffic, both east and west bound, interchanged with the Terminal Co. or passing over its road, is pledged to meet any deficiency of income necessary to pay interest charges on both its first and second mortgage bonds. The Terminal Co. also owns the controlling interest in the Pittsburgh Terminal Railroad & Coal Co. This company embraces a belt line which connects with all roads entering Pittsburgh, besides owning a large amount of coal and surface land.

Upon such assurances as these the bonds were all subscribed for, and, in several instances, I am informed, courts made them legal investments for trust funds. I am not asserting that statements made by any bond house handling these bonds were not justified or were even highly colored. I have the opinion of an expert, who writes:

On the whole, it is my judgment that the terminal property would be more valuable than its cost, either to the system of which it was to form a part or to the Erie, to the Baltimore & Ohio, or to the Pennsylvania, or to the Canadian Pacific, if the latter ever entered Pittsburgh.

The story of what seems to be its deliberate wrecking is too long and involved to be gone into now. The freight contracts entered into with the railroads were denounced, claims were lodged against its securities, complicated legal proceedings designed to frighten bondholders were threatened or begun, freight was diverted from its railroad lines, the Wabash Railroad withdrew its cars, lease of the subsidiary company's coal mines was abrogated, products of the mines were shipped over rival roads, and one after another those apparently having both the power and the purpose of wrecking the company proceeded to exercise that power, and the purpose was accomplished. Both the Pittsburgh Terminal Railway Co. and the Wheeling & Lake Erie were thrown into the hands of a receiver; defrauded bondholders organized a protective committee, ostensibly in their interests, and the committee received deposits of a large majority of the bonds. This first committee did nothing for two years, and a second bondholders' movement was started. But through some means which it would be interesting to have cleared up both of these committees appeared to be under the control of interests unfriendly to the bond owners.

It seems to me that either Congress or the Department of Justice or the Interstate Commerce Commission should seriously undertake to learn who is responsible for this state of affairs.

I have in my possession a copy of a letter sent to a man connected with one of the best-known banking houses in New York City in which the writer says:

I am not interested in the general market, save as an indication of business conditions. I am much interested in the Wabash Pittsburgh situation, and I think that every legitimate banking house in New York is vitally interested in that situation, the most of them do not realize it or have any proper conception of the deep discredit that is cast upon all American finance by the continuance of this scandalous situation.

I believe that if the high-grade banking houses of New York knew of one-tenth of the direct loss that each and every one of them suffer through such actions on the part of a few individuals they would take a united action to purge the Street.

Here we have a 4 per cent first mortgage upon a property that every competent and honest judge admits is worth far more than the bond issue; a property that is necessary to Pittsburgh and that could not possibly be duplicated for many times the bonds; a property that is capable under a proper program, and without large capital additions, of almost instantly producing net earnings on its first mortgage.

We have these bonds sold to savings banks, life insurance companies, and conservative private investors as a sound guaranteed investment.

We then see one security after another taken away, or attempted to be taken away; we see the property put into a condition where its earnings go down year after year almost to the vanishing point; and we see what appears to many to be a deliberate attempt to get this property for almost nothing.

We also see the big, high-grade houses standing aside as if the whole matter were none of their business.

In response to this the man I have referred to, upon receipt of the letter of which I have quoted, responded:

I agree with every statement you make. * * * The newspapers are more to blame than anyone interested in this fraud on the public. Under the pretext of fearlessly exposing everybody they protect their friends. I consider the receivership of the Wheeling & Lake Erie and the Wabash Pittsburgh Terminal among the most outrageous pieces of crooked work ever perpetrated in Wall Street, but the edict has gone forth to all newspapers that they are not to be exposed, so what are you going to do about it?

[Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. In the temporary absence of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

[Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, this bill is a navigation bill. A great many people talk about it as a water-power bill, and the most that is said about it treats it as a water-power bill.

This bill is limited strictly to the navigable streams of the United States, and its paramount purpose is to develop and maintain navigation in those navigable streams.

Navigability, the purpose of the bill, bears the same relation to the development of water power, so far as this bill is concerned, that the bird we are trying to catch bears to the bait with which we bait the trap. We realize that water power—hydroelectric power—is useful for a great many purposes and can be made profitable; and being useful and promising profit, it may be sufficient to tempt capital to construct for the benefit of the people of the United States those creations which are so expensive that the Treasury of the United States is unable or unwilling to undertake them, to make navigable three or four thousand miles of large streams in the country which ought to be navigated for the benefit of the people.

It is true we have not caught many birds with the bait, because capital is a wary old bird. It is hard to fool; and although in the past we have granted 95 authorizations to build dams for the improvement of navigation through the temptation and incentive of private gain to the investors, we have only succeeded in seeing about 13 constructed and put in operation. The profits did not prove as great as we thought they would be when we tried to persuade investors. Then a great clamor of objection was raised by those who figured out on paper how easy it would be to take the capitalists by the nose and lead them into the enterprise, and how they could figure out the maximum success of every enterprise, and figure out the realization of every hope and expectation; and they saw tremendous gains, millions and millions of profit, in the matter.

I think before we get through with this debate we will be able to satisfy all gentlemen that the bait was not as attractive, that the results have not been sufficient thus far to attract capital, and that we have not been receiving the benefit which we had hoped to receive by freeing the Treasury from the expense of promoting navigation through persuading private capital to do it for us.

Here are two lists which show some of the difficulties in the way of inducing private capital to do this important work for us free of cost—one a list of failures known to every banker, the other a list of financiers who refused to undertake financing the Keokuk Dam, which has cost $28,000,000, made 25 miles of slack-water navigation over the rough shoals of Des Moines Rapids, and has not yet found a market for half of its output, though it offers to suppy everybody in the vicinity in any quantity large or small:

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. This is an entire rewriting of the general dam act of 1910, as I understand?

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman has a copy of the bill, he will see that it is so printed as to indicate the old law and the amendments.

Mr. TOWNER. I have the copy which was handed to me, part of it being in italics.

Mr. ADAMSON. Of course the method which we adopted is one which is very much in vogue, both in the House and Senate, to present the amendments in the shape of rewriting the original law with the amendments written in.

Mr. TOWNER. I have no objection whatever to that. I mean that in a general way this is a rewriting of that act.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is true.

Mr. TOWNER. Retaining some parts of it, but making some material changes.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is true.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman inform the House what are the important points upon which this bill diverges from the general dam act of 1910?

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman from Iowa will be kind enough to allow me to proceed in my own way I will make it clear to him, if I can.

Mr. TOWNER. I was afraid that the gentleman from Georgia was going to stop.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have no intention of stopping. I hope you will stay with me until you think I am getting tired, and then ask me something, for it may be that you will make me think of something important that I might overlook.

When I came to Congress, 17 years ago, I came with the idea that we could improve the transportation facilities of several thousand miles of river with which I was acquainted by acts of Congress, improving navigation. The Chattahoochee River had been surveyed by the Government for some 500 or 600 miles, and estimates had been made that for $6,000,000 it could be navigated not only from Apalachicola to Atlanta but 75 miles farther north.

The Coosa River and tributaries, which, with the exception of 75 miles interruption by shoals, could be navigated for 900 miles, opening up more business than promised by any other river in the country, running through several States with great productiveness and having a great population, had been not only surveyed, but estimates had been made and two or three dams started. Thirty-three dams the War Department had laid out to cover the 75 miles, at an expense of about $20,000,000.

I thought it was easy, from what I had heard folks say about the river and harbor bills, to come up here and get these two rivers fixed up. They were the ones I knew the most about. There were others in two or three States which, if added to it, would make about 2,500 miles of navigation.

When I came here I found that to get $6,000,000 from the Rivers and Harbors Committee to open up the Chattahoochee and $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 to open up the Coosa was a pretty big proposition. We went down the Coosa River with the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and I stole them away at Montgomery from the Alabama people and took them over on a special train to the Chattahoochee and had them look at it. While at Wetumpka, standing at an old dismantled lock, never finished, although a good many dollars were sunk in it, a gentleman from Michigan, Mr. Bishop, a member of the House committee, said: "If I can get the property rights and the Government will consent, I will finish this structure and take chances on the water power for my pay." There had been some authorization and some construction by private capital for developing navigation. I did not know much about hydroelectric power then, and although I have studied it for 17 years since, just as I have other business before my committee, it looks like I know less about it and the other things now than I did then. Mr. Bishop said that could be done there, and I said, "Why can not it be done elsewhere? Why can not we supplement the efforts of the Treasury, and where the work is too expensive, why can not we induce private capital, tempted by the water power, to save the Treasury the expense of putting up the dam in shoal streams?" He said he thought it could be done. I came here and introduced a bill giving Government consent for private capital to build dams. I worked on it several years, and finally interested the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], then a member of the committee, and the distinguished chairman of that committee, Col. Hepburn, who appointed a subcommittee. We worked on that until it looked like it was feasible. It would save the trouble of debating the original proposition every time an original bill was introduced. We framed up a bill, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] put his name on it, and we passed it. It became the general dam act. Under that act we passed 25 authorizations. President Roosevelt signed them all. Two of those authorizations out of the 25 have been constructed.

Afterwards, however, the President saw some kind of new light, and he decided that that bill was not drastic enough. I do not suppose he had learned that 23 of the authorizations out of the 25 had not moved a peg, but he listened to the cry that the people were being cheated, that the great water-power monopolies were being formed, and that the Government was losing, and he vetoed a bill. Then the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], and some other Members were appointed a committee to redraft the general dam act. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the author of the act, and I opposed it. We said that it was sufficient. We said that 2 successes out of the 25 was not a big enough boo to raise this fuss about. Until we got more than 2 out of 25 we could not agree that this law ought to be any more drastic than it is. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and I both assured the President that he could do many things under the act that he was not doing; that he could protect the Government as a corporate entity and benefit the people along the rivers and secure the benefits of navigation in the first instance and water power and hydroelectric power in the other instance.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. To make the gentleman's statement strictly accurate, is not this the fact, that President Roosevelt vetoed the Rainy River Dam and the James River Dam; that in order to save the lands on the Rainy River Dam, Mr. Roosevelt consented that Rainy River should be passed over his veto upon the promise some of us made that a supplemental act should be passed to the existing law that should extend the power of Congress beyond those we got under the Constitution? It was that promise we kept in framing the act of 1910.

Mr. ADAMSON. I was not in all those conferences, and therefore can not give all the details as can the gentleman from Minnesota. I was speaking of the attitude of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and myself.

We were opposed to any amendment of it, but the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] did report to the full committee amendments to the general dam act, and stated to us that it was made by agreement with the President and his advisers, and that that Rainy River veto might be overridden, and that these amendments would be made and would be satisfactory to the people who were opposing our scheme to improve navigation through the building of water-power dams, and our committee acted on the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota, and he can tell the House whether that agreement was made or not. I opposed the amendment in this House. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] did not actively support the amendment, though I do not know that he said anything. I know that he opposed making it on the ground that it was sufficient as originally passed. I stood by him and made a speech on that line, but the amendment of 1910 was made, and I believe 21 authorizations were signed subsequently to that by the President.

Mr. Taft went right ahead signing them until about the middle of his term, when somehow or other he happened to see a new light, although nothing had been realized under the authorizations, none had been built, but suddenly he joined the opposition, those who saw too much profit and gain in the water-power constructors and too little benefit to the country, which in its last analysis meant that the profit and glory of the country consisted in doing nothing, not only forbidding private capital to construct dams but depriving the people along those numerous rivers, heading away up into the interior, of navigation which would furnish them cheaper and better and more transportation facilities. Suddenly he turned around and vetoed a bill, and I will describe to you what the result of that was. One of the few bills which ever was realized upon by construction was a bill to authorize a dam at Lock No. 12 in the Coosa River. The engineers had made a plan of the 33 little dams, but a water-power company had gone and persuaded the engineers that about three big dams would cover the whole reach of 75 miles, and they would cost the Government nothing because private capital would build them, thus perfecting the 800 or 900 miles of navigation that I spoke about. We authorized the dam at Lock No. 12, and that was constructed after they got the plans and everything ready in two years. It made a pool 65 or 70 feet deep. It backed water over the shoals about 26 miles, making good slack-water navigation. In building that dam the company spent more money than the Government has spent on the Coosa River since Adam and Eve walked together on the earth misleading and producing mankind. They asked for another dam. Why? They could not find within 500 miles of that dam a market for the horsepower, the current, the electric force. The little towns and cities down there were not born yesterday. They have got a good deal of civilization among them, a good deal of inventive genius, and most of them have provided themselves with electric plants; and, contrary to the theory of some people who theorize on this subject without producing any practical results, when you put up an electric-power plant like that in a community that is able to furnish power to everybody it puts down the price of coal, with which it is in competition, and enables some of those people to run coal plants cheaper than they could before, and pretty cheap at that. So that they had no market for the 40,000 or 50,000 horsepower that they were generating. They have not only got to build the plant but they have to build a market, they have to build a town and a lot of factories, because it does not take much to run a factory.

Eleven thousand horsepower runs I do not know how many factories and other enterprises at Augusta, Ga., which is said to be the new Lowell of the South; but I do not agree to that, because Augusta, Ga., has to yield the palm to Columbus, Ga., which I have the privilege to represent, and it runs a lot of the biggest factories in this country, besides a great many other enterprises, and all they have generated around there put together, my recollection is, is about 27,000 horsepower. From 1,000 to 3,000 horsepower is sufficient in most cases to operate an enterprise or light an average town.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And about how much did this dam cost?

Mr. ADAMSON. This Coosa River Dam cost $2,000,000, and it generates forty or fifty thousand horsepower. They could not find a market for it, because the towns around were supplied. It does not take much to run the factories within reach of it, and they looked around to find a market. A company came along and said, "If you will get power enough, we will put up a cyanamide plant and run it here, but 50,000 horsepower will not suffice, for we have to have 100,000 horsepower." They came to Congress and asked permission to make 30 miles more of slack-water navigation on the Coosa by putting a dam in at Lock 18. The War Department approved it, and the bill went through this House and it went through the Senate, but President Taft vetoed it. That was after he had a change of heart about the subject. Let me tell you what it cost the country. That cyanamide plant, by using the combined forces of the two dams, would have been able to run continuously, and under the scorching fires of electric furnaces have been able to extract from the air enough of the nitrate elements as fertilizers for which we paid Chile twenty-two and a half million dollars a year, and to have supplied all of that country and dispensed with exporting from Chile at all. It could have used the phosphate rocks in numbers of places in that country and have extracted the phosphate and avoided the trouble and expense of running the expensive sulphuric-acid plants to secure that phosphate, and all we would have needed to complete a perfect fertilizer to supply the wasted lands of all that cotton and corn producing country would have been the potash which now, under great difficulty and at great cost, we get from Germany. And if my good friend from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], who intimates a disposition to oppose or amend this bill, would give his attention to securing potash on the public domain to exempt us from paying tribute to Germany on that account, he would accomplish a great thing for this country.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. We have enough potash in this country to last the United States for thousands of years, and we have a bill on the calendar that is going to conserve it, keep it from waste, and take care of that very thing.

Mr. ADAMSON. I am trying to talk about that, and commend my friend for it, because while men make vague and visionary hints and insinuations and charges about what we were trying to do with this navigation bill, so far as I know, this is the first time any effort was ever made to bring constructive measures to this House to utilize these resources. And if the gentleman from Oklahoma and his associates should succeed in that they will be entitled to the plaudit of "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." But I want to say to you that, outside of that, I do not believe that all the public lands, which they think we are infringing upon and which we have no disposition to infringe upon, are worth money enough to compensate the people for the loss they have sustained through the obstruction in the last 14 years of the operations and developments expected under this legislation. Now, that dam proposition was vetoed by the President. The other $2,000,000 investment was not made, because it could not be made. These people are still denied not only the navigation on that river but they are denied the benefits that would have been derived from the use of the hydroelectric power. That is only one instance, and the power remains unsold to-day; the money which was to have built it has gone. I understand it went to Niagara Falls, in Canada, and I understand some other plants that expected to get an opportunity, through Congress, to put up some dams and manufacture other articles have been driven to other parts of the world. We have lost that opportunity.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman refers to the dams on the Coosa River. I will state to the gentleman that the one which was secured through act of Congress has been completed.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. And that that plant has been established and power is beginning to be now transmitted to the industries all over that country, and they are being run much cheaper than by coal even in the Birmingham district.

Mr. ADAMSON. I suppose the gentleman from Alabama was not in during my remarks.

Mr. BURNETT. I understood the gentleman to say that they had abandoned the other proposition.

Mr. ADAMSON. Oh, no; Lock 18. I have explained to the House what has been done down there——

Mr. BURNETT. I was out until just now.

Mr. ADAMSON. That they had developed 40,000 or 50,000 horsepower and were furnishing it in competition with coal, but that even then those people who had built it had found it hard to get a market, and they had resorted to the cyanamide scheme and were to build at Lock 18, but that was defeated by the veto of President Taft, and the country was deprived of the navigability of the Coosa River, and that immediate country was deprived of the use of that money to be invested there and the product of the plant that would have been built there. Now, Mr. Chairman, these two rivers I have mentioned are but two of a great many. There are three or four thousand miles of rivers that could be utilized under the terms of a bill like this if we should pass it and stick to it. It would cost the Government nothing to furnish navigation that would afford the people transportation up into the interior. Not only do the railroads not furnish that satisfactory transportation as to rates and practices, but they are unable to furnish enough transportation. The growing business of the country is congested on the railroads and we want water transportation on every river that heads far up into the country because practically, though modified under the recent decisions of the long and short haul clause, they have been discriminating in favor of the ends of the line and consequently against stations in the interior. That would have been obtained long ago if these rivers could have been made navigable. The projects before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors are very numerous and costly, so costly as to be prohibitive in many cases. They run along, the committee brings in a little bill every year and are villified and abused and called logrollers and pork-barrel packers. If this bill were allowed to pass and permit the utilization of private capital to relieve the Treasury of all these expenses, why perhaps if we could make the proposition sufficiently attractive to capital, they would open up all this navigation and at the same time furnish the people light, and the cleanest, best, and cheapest fuel, electric force enough to manufacture not only fertilizers but every other conceivable thing that the genius of the country could think of, and build a network of trolley lines all over that fair country. I was not in favor of this amending bill as an original proposition. I still think the original dam act as the gentleman from Illinois placed his name on it and had it, by our assistance, passed through the House, was sufficient to take care of the interests of the Government and of the interest of the people, because the people can be benefited in a great many ways that do not come through acts of Congress.

They can be benefited in a great many ways besides paying taxes into the Treasury, but I took this attitude. If we can not have progress, if we can not get along under the existing law, let us see what amendments we must make, and see if the inducements held out will be liberal enough to entice capital to build these dams, and if so, we will amend the bill. We will make peace and secure contracts with capital, but if we can not secure contracts there is no use in passing the bill. So two years ago Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota and I took up the subject and made a tentative agreement with the Secretary of War, and really had made an agreement which would have secured the passage of a number of little bills, the defeat of which some gentlemen said saved $30,000,000, but all of them put together would not have amounted to as much power, hardly half as much, as the dam completed at Lock No. 12 of the Coosa River, nor would many of them have attracted capital to promote them. However, that agreement did not work, because in the House a gentleman who did not understand the agreement and had come in late objected to its consideration. When informed of the agreement he tried to withdraw his objection, but it was too late. When this administration came in I submitted the question to the administration.

So Mr. STEVENS and I—and he did more than I did and better work than I did, I will admit—prepared a bill and sent it to the administration, and the administration worked on it and sent it back, and we worked on it and sent it back, and they worked on it and sent it back, until our minds concurred on this bill. So we introduced this bill and reported it, and I believe it will be a great blessing to the country if passed. I believe it will promote the navigation of the streams. I believe it will result in bringing about a few developments of water power and hydroelectricity that will prove of incalculable value to the country. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. To what extent has aid been given to navigation by virtue of the improvements given to those dams?

Mr. ADAMSON. If there is a sure-enough stream, one with three or four shoals in it, and you build one dam, and the other bills to complete the current are vetoed, you can not get a boat entirely through the stream. There are 25 miles of slack water above that dam on the Coosa River at No. 12. There are three little locks built above it by the Government, but there are intervening shoals between those little locks and this one. One dam above, in my judgment, would make a hundred miles of navigation available, maybe 200. Two dams below this, I think, would open it entirely to the Gulf. I want the authority of Congress to build the other dams necessary there, to see if we can persuade capital to build them. I believe the development of the Coosa River up to the headwaters, as high as you could develop it, which is 100 miles above Rome on each tributary, would be of more importance to this country commercially than the Panama Canal even, or any other thing you could think of, because it would develop a great country which is all good country, with a population of good folks.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will.

Mr. BURNETT. That river runs through several of my counties. The building of the dam that has been constructed and the construction of the one that the President vetoed would have opened 50 miles of the 87 miles of obstructed navigation.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then one additional dam would have opened the entire course.

Mr. BURNETT. I think so.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is my idea about it.

Mr. BURNETT. And we would have saved the Government some four or five millions of dollars; and extending 100 miles up it would have given 100 miles of unobstructed navigation on the river where navigation would be perennial. It does not go dry in the summer season.

Mr. ADAMSON. So far as the State which gave me birth is concerned, I think the present law is sufficient to enable it to develop all its water resources and become an empire, if it decides it is necessary to do so. Here is a list showing what Georgia has done in spite of all objection; it also shows how little power is necessary to operate single projects or light single towns:

That these dams when built should be regulated by the War Department, with respect to the navigation, none can deny; but can anyone reasonably and fairly say that these developments should not have gone forward and go forward in the future if Congress refuses to permit the building of dams in the navigable streams of the country?

Present developments of hydroelectric water power in the State of Georgia now amount to over 180,000 horsepower, and the ultimate developments at all the projects already undertaken on the various streams in the State of Georgia will amount to over 250,000 horsepower.

In the Chattahooche River there has been developed to date a little over 40,000 horsepower, but in that river there is a possible development of an additional 300,000 horsepower. In the Coosa River there is a possible development of over 300,000 additional horsepower, but there is only one development on this stream of about 40,000 horsepower, so that we see in these two streams alone there is less than one-tenth of the horsepower developed, which would open 1,500 miles of much-needed navigation.

If Congress may fear to trust the State of Georgia and its people to regulate and control the development of its water power, why not inquire if the people and the development of the natural resources of Georgia, the increase of its manufacturing operations, have been hurt, and whether the people of Georgia have been injured and oppressed by any monopolies in the development of nearly 200,000 horsepower in that State now in operation? No; the contrary is true.

In the States of Georgia, South Carolina, and North Carolina there are now nearly 4,000 miles of hydroelectric transmission lines, and very little of the 4,000 miles traversing these States carry a kilowatt of power from a development on a navigable stream under consent of Congress. If these hydroelectric developments in these three States have not been oppressive, if the manufacturing operations of these States have thriven and grown, is it not conclusive that our bill is a wise one?

The committee offers a bill that it is believed will invite and attract capital to construct dams in the navigable streams of the country, improving the navigation of these streams and developing water power at the same time. At the present time there is not a single dam in a single navigable stream in this country under construction by private capital. If the House will pass the bill just as the committee has reported it, within a year's time it is believed that construction of dams in the navigable streams of this country by private capital will begin and continue. It is true that there is no market for the power that will be developed at many of these dams, but markets will be created at or near these dam sites for manufacturing air fertilizers and other electric-furnace products.

If the bill is passed hydroelectric developments that have been going to Canada and to Europe and are now going to these countries will stop and the developments will, as they should, be made upon the navigable streams of our own country.

Mr. CLINE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. CLINE. I understand that out of 25 of the authorizations that have been made under the present law there have been only 2 acceptances?

Mr. ADAMSON. There have been 95 in all, but not under the present law. I think there were 51 before the original law was passed, 25 between 1906 and 1910, and 19 since the amendment of 1910.

Mr. CLINE. The purpose of this act is to liberalize it to a certain extent at least, so as to induce capital to invest?

Mr. ADAMSON. That is it—to make the proposition attractive to capital, so that they will save the Government the expense of building the locks and dams.

Mr. CLINE. Will the gentleman have the kindness to advise the committee in what important respect in this bill you propose to make it more liberal so that capital will invest? What important restrictions do you propose to remove?

Mr. ADAMSON. I am going to take up the bill by sections and discuss every one of them as soon as I have completed the general statement.

Mr. FESS. You spoke of sending the bill to the administration and it coming back here. Would this stand, then, as an administration measure?

Mr. ADAMSON. The administration agreed to it.

Mr. FESS. I notice that there has been some report that the Secretary of the Interior stands for one plan.

Mr. ADAMSON. Unless the rules not only hold that it is germane, but also that it is compulsory, for me to discuss the vagaries and romance of local newspapers I will decline to talk about them.

Mr. FESS. What I wanted to know was whether this was the administration bill or not.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; and it never would have been introduced until it was, because I worked for a year to find one that would suit the administration and according to which they would sign bills. And if the administration had turned out to be so rigorous as to veto such bills I would not have wasted so much time on it.

I was going on to say that so far as I am locally concerned—of course, my activities are not confined to locality, because I love everybody, and see clever, good folks in every section, and I want to see every inch of this Union developed—my State has sufficient power under the existing Federal law to take care of itself as to navigation and water power, because every stream of any consequence in it is entirely within the State of Georgia and can be managed by the laws of the State, and we are doing it. But I want to call your attention to one trouble, and it has been generated, in my opinion, absolutely by the people who have obstructed the development under this plan.

When it began a great many people owned the land along these shoaly streams. They were comparatively poor people, who had inherited or purchased it in some way, and that land was of little value aside from the shoals for water-power privileges. They held those lands until hydroelectricity possibilities began to be realized by the people of the country and then we began to get authority from Congress to develop those electric possibilities by water power; and then certain people began to obstruct development, and the President began to refuse to sign our bills. It was just like holding back or cornering grain or other products. Syndicates began to secure and hold dam sites as something that would be of value to the public in the future, for which a high price would be demanded. They have gone down along those streams and bought riparian rights, and they have been developing some little water power somewhere and saying to mankind, "You shall not have these others to develop. We will hold them and sell the power generated at the plants we have installed, and when we find a market for all that we will develop another one, and not before, and we will deal that out to you at a high price until it is exhausted, and then we will develop another one." They object to permitting competition to set up business, just as people do in establishing cotton factories and other manufacturing institutions. They say, "We have a business now, and we do not want any competition. We want to do our business, and if you charter any more we will have competition which will be detrimental if not ruinous to us."

But, bless your life, Mr. Chairman, if you carry that principle out you would fear that somebody else's children would compete with your children, and then procreation would end with other people. People have cried "Monopoly!" and said, "You are building up monopoly of water power." Their obstruction has let the Water-Power Trust monopolize the ownership of these dam sites, obstructed development, and allowed syndicates to freeze out the poor fellows who, not permitted to develop their holdings, were not able to hold unproductive property; and now we are confronted with the proposition that the water-power syndicates really own the land and refuse to develop power sites or allow others to do so.

If our friends want to help us out, they will tell us the way to secure the sites held by the syndicates, so that other capital may be willing to pay for the lands and improve the shoals. It may be that unless the States proceed to provide condemnation proceedings we shall have to come to Congress, on account of the fact that it is a navigation project, and secure authority to condemn lands or water powers in the hands of syndicates holding them unoccupied and unimproved. At this time a great many States have laws to enable the water-power companies to condemn other folks' land, but I have been unable to find a single case where you can dislocate a dog in the manger and take the manger from him when he had more mangers than he would use. [Laughter.]

That is the situation that confronts us. It is not our fault. We offer a proposition that will permit people to develop water powers instead of turning them loose and letting these syndicates get hold of all of them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will try to gratify a few gentlemen who have asked me some questions by giving a cursory glance at the provisions of the bill, and if anybody desires to ask me a question as I go along I shall be glad to try to answer.

The first two pages of the bill seem to be the old law entirely. On the top of page 3 is the first amendment that I see, to section 2. That relates to the conditions that the Secretary of War is to place upon them, such as he may deem necessary in the interest of navigation, "and also that in case such facilities of navigation shall not be made a part of original approval and construction," and so forth. It simply enlarges the language, and we thought it broadened it a little.

Farther down there is a little more new language inserted—

> And in such original approval, at the discretion of the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers, may be required to maintain and operate such lock without expense to the United States.

You see, it is contemplated in this bill that these people will not only put a dam in, which, if we were going to put in, would cost us a million or two dollars, but they have got to put the lock in free of expense to the Government. They have got to furnish the land and put in the lock free of cost, and they have got to operate the lock and light it. Certainly a few hundred thousand dollars besides the dam will be a saving to the Government if the navigation of the river can be secured.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. CLINE. Is that not the point where you can get the dog out of the manger?

Mr. ADAMSON. If we can get possession of that dam site, now held by some fellow who has another one that he is using but does not want this one used.

Mr. CLINE. The point I want to call attention to is this: In the Chandler-Dunbar case, that was owned by a company that did not propose to improve it, and yet the General Government gave the parties who proposed to make the improvement the authority to dam the land that was owned by the company that refused to improve it themselves.

Mr. ADAMSON. The Government put in that project, and the riparian owners claim that they had a right to the surplus waters that the Government did not use for navigation. The Supreme Court has always held, as has been recognized by folks who understood the question, that the Government has paramount control of the bed of the stream from bank to bank, and whatever right a man acquired in the stream, he knew that his rights were subordinate to the control of the Government in the bed of the stream.

Mr. CLINE. Of course the Government could confer upon the company the right to build a dam on those lands?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes. My idea is that this being a navigation bill, improving the navigable waters of the United States in the interest of interstate commerce, the Government could either condemn the land or could authorize a purchaser under the term of this bill to build a dam and condemn the land for that purpose, the current and the force of electricity being intended to be generated and distributed among the public.

I would prefer it if the States would provide a condemnation law rather than coming to the Federal Government for it; but it looks like the tendency is to come to Congress for everything, and it is getting worse and worse. Those gentlemen who are pining for home may as well get used to long sessions, because Congress can not do all of the legislation and get away in a week.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will.

Mr. WILLIS. Before leaving section 2 I want to know whether I understood the gentleman's statement. Suppose a subsequent Congress should decide that additional locks and dams would be necessary in the interest of navigation, does the gentleman say that these additional locks, and so forth, would be constructed at the expense of the Government or at the expense of the private person making application for them?

Mr. ADAMSON. My understanding is that the Secretary of War may require it at the outset, or if he decides at a subsequent date, he may do so.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman point out where he gets that understanding?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I think the gentleman from Georgia is mistaken. If the Government refuses to require it in the first place, the owner of the dam must donate the site.

Mr. ADAMSON. The Government must require it when approving the specifications if it ever expects to demand it. If the Secretary of War does not at the time foresee that any portion of the river can be utilized for navigation, he may leave that out; but if he does, and the Government afterwards decides to use the other part of the river, it will have to put the locks in.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes; and the reason for that is that complaint was made that it was unfair to the investors, and men would not invest unless they could know in advance the approximate amount of the investment. A lock costs one-half of the cost of the dam itself, and it was necessary, in order to treat capital fairly, to let them know in advance about what investment they might expect, and that was the reason the change was made.

Mr. ADAMSON. I realize the wisdom of the provision.

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman will yield further. I understand the gentleman from Minnesota to state that it would be unfair to the investors. Does not he think that it would be unfair to the people by the Secretary of War having appropriated it and making it impossible for them to reach it?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. You would have no investment; nobody with any sense would invest a cent in it. Section 4 requires that as a part of the original proposition. The Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers each make a comprehensive plan for the whole waterway which shall be paid for by the applicant for the dam. Our Corps of Engineers are men of intelligence and experience, and design as a part of the comprehensive plan what ought to be done for the improvement of that stream; and it is only fair to the country and the people and the investors, and it is the only way you can get an investment. You can not get them any other way. It is only fair to everybody that this comprehensive plan should be understood and obeyed, and if any change is made by anybody who is desirous of change, he ought to pay for it.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Do I understand that the investor pays for the whole cost of the original project?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. If the gentleman will look at the bill, a part of section 3 is to be paid for out of paragraph A, and it may be divided by the Secretary of War and the engineers. Paragraph A will pay for the work under section 3.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I was going to remind the gentlemen who ask questions that we are not arbitrarily passing a law that can be directly enforced, establishing these relations between the people, the Government, and the grantees. We are trying to provide a contract which will secure what we want by inducing the other fellow to do what we want him to do. We make him pay all the expenses of the investigation, and we approve of the plans and specifications. He pays for a survey of the entire river with a view to navigation and the possibility of full development. We do not want to deprive the people of the benefit of it. When we have made a comprehensive survey of the entire subject we make the grantee pay for all that; then the Secretary of War—and we have to vest the authority in somebody, and the War Department has had jurisdiction over navigable streams ever since we have worked on them—then he decides, in order that capital may know what to depend upon and just what is going to be required.

If that stream is going to be used farther up, if we are going to need a lock in the dam, he is required to put it in right then. But it is human to err, and if after all that survey and investigation the Chief of Engineers is unable to foresee what is going to be needed in the future, of course the Government will have to pay for the lock if it decides to put it in afterwards. It seems to me, however, that there is considerable liberalization there.

I suppose what my colleagues would like to have me do is to go on and talk about the particular questions on which there may be differences. You will notice that in imposing these terms we do not care for what purpose the grantee uses that power, whether it is to light a town or to run a furnace, or other mechanical uses. What we want is the navigation of the river, and we hope he will make enough, or think he will, in some way, to induce him to build the dam and locks. So we have said on page 3—> and for other beneficial public purposes, and best adapted to conserve and utilize, in the interests of navigation and water-power development, the water resources of the region.

And then on page 4, paragraph (b), he goes ahead and imposes the charges already provided for in the present law; and then we say:

> To be based upon a reasonable compensation equitably apportioned among the grantee and others similarly situated upon the same stream receiving benefits by reason of increase of flow past their water-power structures artificially caused by such headwater improvements, the total charges to all such beneficiaries from any such headwater improvement not to exceed in any one year an amount equal to 5 per centum of the total investment cost, in addition to the necessary annual expenses of the operation of such headwater improvement.

I do not know, arbitrarily or dogmatically, whether 5 per cent is enough or not, but I have been thinking that if we got enough of them to build along a stream where we had built a reservoir at the head to pay 5 per cent on the investment we were doing pretty well. Then we provide—

> (c) That in the construction, maintenance, and operation of such dam and accessory works there may be occupied and used such lands of the United States as may be necessary therefor, and in consideration thereof the owner of such dam shall pay to the United States such charges, not to exceed an annual payment of 5 per centum of the fair value of such lands, as may be fixed by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers, and in fixing such charges consideration shall be taken of the benefits accruing thereby to the interests of navigation as well as to the business of such grantee.

That is a provision that has caused some friction. A good many men have made suggestions to me about it. I have already remarked that the only interest I personally knew of in connection with this bill was in the way of little fragments of land scattered up and down the large streams in the older part of the country. Most of the valuable Government lands have long ago been taken up. These are little nooks and corners in the swamps that nobody wanted. The man who owns the land on both sides of the river may want to construct a dam, and it may back the water up 30 miles. The first he knows he is on two or three pieces of Government land. I had in mind to enable him to extricate himself from the difficulties of that situation in an easy way by settling with the same man from whom he got his approval; and, without differentiating or discriminating against anybody, Congress has the power to authorize any officer to perform any function like that.

I am not insisting on that at all. I would be willing that he go to the Secretary of the Interior and buy the land from him as well as from anybody else. It makes no difference to me. Now, so far as interference with the public domain is concerned, I confess that I do not know as much about that as some men in this House know about it. I am so busy with the affairs before my own committee that when a constituent of mine writes to me about the public lands I refer the question to Brother FERRIS or some other gentleman on the Committee on Public Lands, and I generally find out what I want a great deal more easily than by neglecting my own business to study their business. I can not help but believe that in this House a member of a great committee not only serves his country but does God service if he attends to the business of that committee and keeps up with his work in that direction. So you will have to excuse me from knowing all about questions which relate to the public lands. I shall expect my friend from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] to combat any attacks that may be made upon that feature of the bill.

I do not know how much navigable water there is in the public domain. If there are any navigable streams in the public domain, certainly no man in the House wants to transfer the jurisdiction over that navigable water from the Secretary of War to the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of War has organized a splendid corps of engineers, who have done great work in this country, and I do not see any propriety or necessity for transferring jurisdiction if there should be found any navigable streams in the West.

I have no disposition——

Mr. SPARKMAN. I desire to ask the gentleman if there is any proposition of that kind?

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not know. If I understand the diplomatic correspondence that has gone on among us, that is the only substantial difference I have been able to find between the two bills.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I see in another bill introduced by another gentleman, which is said to deal with nonnavigable waters, a proposition of that kind. I did not know there was any intention to try to engraft it on this bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have said what conversations I had. It occurred to me, on an examination of the bills before the House, that was the only substantial difference between them.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I agree with the gentleman in saying the Secretary of War has everything to do with navigable waters.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. I had not intended to get into this colloquy very much, because I am trying in good faith to carry on negotiations with the gentleman in regard to some amendments which I very much hope can be agreed to, but the gentleman made a remark a moment ago, which is, of course, a proper one—that each member, to use a slang phrase, should stick to his own committee.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think I said it that way. I was complimenting the gentleman. The gentleman from Oklahoma always furnishes me information concerning public lands, and perhaps may furnish me some on this before we get through.

Mr. FERRIS. The affection of the gentleman is appreciated and reciprocated, I am sure. I am making reference to a question of jurisdiction, which is one of the really important matters in this bill. I know the gentleman does not want the RECORD to say that there is anything in the Public Lands Committee bill that follows this bill that attempts even for a moment to invade the jurisdiction of navigable streams. At the same time I want to suggest that the gentleman knows that the War Department openly claims that they have jurisdiction now, and they claim it openly. This contention, they say, entitles them to have this section 17, which repeals everything that has been done with respect to water-power questions from the time legislation on the subject began. I know the gentleman does not occupy that position, because he wrote a letter a short time ago to me and stated that he did not want to meddle with public-lands affairs, and this bill does do it, and I wondered if the gentleman was going to try to agree to an amendment that would at least separate these little irrigation plants and power development of the public land in the West from this legislation, which is a mingling of navigation with water-power, irrigation, and all sorts of questions.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think the gentleman from Oklahoma, as brilliant and smart as he is and accurate and discriminating as he is, understands either the War Department or the bill or myself, if the gentleman will pardon me.

Mr. FERRIS. I understand the letter which the gentleman wrote me; I understand that.

Mr. ADAMSON. If I had written it myself, perhaps the gentleman would not. I had the clerk to write it in typewriting.

Mr. FERRIS. No; the gentleman wrote it in longhand.

Mr. ADAMSON. I would hesitate to question the gentleman's veracity, but some of my friends would not believe him if he said he read it. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman wrote it and, marvelous as it may seem, I read it.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not want to break in on the argument of my friend——

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. But I would like to call the gentleman's attention to paragraph B, page 4, which provides for the payment by the lessee of reasonable charges for benefits that may accrue to his project from headwater improvements and in which it is provided the amount paid shall not exceed in any one year an amount in excess of 5 per cent of the total investment cost in addition to the necessary annual expenses in the operation of such headwater improvements. Does that provision intend to provide for these payments for headwater improvements until the investment cost shall have been returned to the Government, then thereafter only such payments as are necessary to cover the expense of operation, or is that expected to be a continued payment, not to exceed 5 per cent of the cost of the headwater improvements?

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman will understand by recurring to the beginning of that section that that is only one of the authorizations to the Secretary of War as to putting conditions into his approval. I do not think that attempted to go into as much detail, perhaps, as the gentleman's question would ask about.

Mr. MONDELL. I supposed the committee had some theory in regard to this matter of paying for headwater improvements, and that paragraph is not entirely clear to me, and I thought the gentleman could give me his interpretation of it.

Mr. ADAMSON. My own idea of it was that if the Secretary of War ever managed to secure 5 per cent of the entire cost that the whole matter would be refunded within the period of the life of these consents.

Mr. MONDELL. If the lessee paid 5 per cent of the investment cost, the investment cost would all be returned in 20 years, during which period the lessee would also have paid his proportion of the upkeep cost. Does the gentleman understand that paragraph to mean that this payment of approximately 5 per cent of the investment cost is to go on forever, or is it to cease when the Government shall have been reimbursed for its investment cost?

Mr. ADAMSON. The consent by a subsequent section lasts 50 years.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand; but the Government has its investment cost returned to it, as I understand, in 20 years.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not know whether that 5 per cent would do that, in addition to the interest, or not.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me, this is the theory on which that was constructed, and I claim the blame for some of the language that was used in it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I did not want to accuse the gentleman of it myself, but I swore to it when he invented it.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Several years ago when the Appalachian and White Mountain proposition was before the House, I opposed it. I thought it was a fake and would not work, and I have not yet changed my mind.

Mr. MONDELL. Nor had any reason to.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. But if the United States is obliged to buy these lands on the ground that they will help navigation, I thought, in all fairness, that if anybody was helped by it, they ought to pay for these lands, so that I drafted the original provision, and the theory of it is this: Money is worth to the United States what it can borrow it for, which is about 3 per cent, so that we should charge these people 3 per cent, if we can get it, on the amount of the investment for the interest the United States puts into the property. We should then compel them to pay for it, if we can do it, in addition to that.

Mr. ADAMSON. That would be the other 2 per cent.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. With the 2 per cent for 50 years, that would be the hundred per cent. We compel these people who ask for these storage reservoirs and mountain reservoirs to pay for them in 50 years. There is nothing in this to stop payment at the end of 50 years. My own judgment is that this will not yield so much, but if they have mulcted this Government for many millions of dollars we want to get it back if we can.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Georgia will allow me, the paragraph I refer to has reference to headwater improvements, which I understand to mean improvements made at the expense of the United States above the project.

Mr. ADAMSON. I understand they climb up to the head of the stream and impound the waters there when they find a good place for storage.

Mr. MONDELL. And the provision is made that the lessee or the lessees securing the benefit of those headwater improvements shall make a payment not to exceed in any one year an amount equal to 5 per cent of the total investment cost in addition to the necessary annual expense of the operation of the headwater improvements. If the theory is that the headwater improvements are to be paid for, but without interest, and that thereafter the lessees are only to pay the cost of upkeep, then the language does not indicate that view. If, on the contrary, it was the thought of the committee that the beneficiaries under these headwater improvements were to pay perpetually—that is, for 50 years—5 per cent of the cost of the headwater improvements, the Government would in the period of 50 years have received in all two and a half times the original cost of the headwater improvements besides the cost of upkeep.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, we have been reminded very often in our contest to secure this legislation that we ought to get all for the Government that we could.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] has apologized to you and confessed that he helped get this thing up. I voted against it when it was put in, and I think he is the best one to explain it. I merely submitted to it, just as I did to a good many other things that I did not think necessary to put in.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I assume the responsibility.

Mr. ADAMSON. I am not going back on you. I am simply going to ask you to be the leading counsel in answer to it.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to ask the gentleman how he will interpret that section?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. There is no limit to this charge. It goes just as long as this is on the statute book and in its present form.

Mr. MONDELL. It is considerable of a charge in that case. May I ask the gentleman another question?

C relates to public lands. I take it, if granted, there will be very few public lands, only small isolated tracts here and there, if any, connected with one of these projects, but you provide for payment for the use of those lands equal to 5 per cent of the fair value. Now, that payment is to be perpetual?

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Oklahoma and I were talking about it and some other kindred subject when the gentleman did me the pleasure to interrupt me.

Mr. MONDELL. I regret I did not hear that part of the discussion.

Mr. ADAMSON. I was going on. It was not exactly fair to him to drop off the conversation just where we had it.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman understands I am not asking the question as to the propriety of your including public lands. The only question in my mind was as to the charge you proposed to make for the use of the public land.

Mr. ADAMSON. I hope the gentleman from Wyoming will give me his suggestion before I proceed to reply to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. MONDELL. My suggestion would be that if in connection with one of these projects there should be any public lands used or submerged—I imagine in no event would there be any considerable proportion of the project, probably none at all in the great majority of the projects; but in case you used any at all, if it seemed fair to charge for the land, either a cash payment at one time or a payment extending over a considerable period of years—at some time or other public lands should be paid for.

Mr. ADAMSON. It is the wish of the gentlemen interested in the conservation of the public lands that we eliminate that 5 per cent, and if the House is willing to do so we are willing.

Mr. MONDELL. And not pay anything for them?

Mr. ADAMSON. No. We leave it that the Secretary of War may charge him what he can get him to pay, but to strike out the maximum charge of 5 per cent.

Mr. MONDELL. What is the idea of getting more for the public lands than their fair cash value?

Mr. ADAMSON. The idea of the gentlemen who complained to me is that they can get more than 5 per cent. Some of the water-power people who talked to us about it said if we did not put it in they could get it at a good deal less. I do not know how that is.

Mr. KENT. I would like to ask why the Secretary of War should decide on matters relating to the public domain? That is within the province of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ADAMSON. I suppose the gentleman did not hear my explanation of that. I said I did not care what officer the Government would select. I suppose, if this went in, and we had to have the plans approved by the Secretary of War, it would be more convenient for him to deal with the entire subject. I supposed it was only a convenience. I would just as soon, when we grant a consent to a company to build a dam in a navigable stream, that they may get their title from the Government, the same as a citizen. I want to add that you can not get up any preference in my mind between the two men who hold the two Cabinet portfolios of the Government. I would just as soon buy land from one of them as the other.

Mr. CLINE. I find in the bill, on page 4, paragraph 3, it says that in fixing such charges there shall be considered benefits to the interest of navigation as well as to the business of the owners of the project. I suppose those are eligible to be taken into consideration in considering the basis of taxation?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. CLINE. In that the language is ambiguous, and I would like to have your view about it.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. My view of that paragraph is that it will be greatly changed. When the subcommittee prepared the bill—and I will state to the committee frankly how it happened—the Senate had a bill, and we had several bills, one coming from the War Department, a bill of the Secretary, and one which the gentleman from Georgia prepared, and one that I prepared, and, I think, two or three from the Senate. One of the Senate bills contained this proviso, which I thought was a good thing and thought it could be inserted, because there is hardly a river in the South and West along which some public land will not be found belonging to the Interior Department altogether. And I think the title of many little plats of land would be in the Department of Commerce—little lighthouse reservations and range marks, and things like that. But we put in a general provision covering all the lands of the United States, putting the terms as they were in the Senate bill. I have no pride of opinion about that. My own opinion is that it should be changed; that each department ought to lease its own lands and fix its own terms and conditions, and leave out this clause as to relative value if navigable. That is my own judgment. Following the path of least resistance, we put the Senate provision in it. So, if the gentleman will allow me, I will say that I will be the one who would be in favor of striking out that last phrase.

Mr. CLINE. If the benefits to the interests of navigation are to be considered as one of the elements for fixing the assessment, that would not be permanent; it would be constantly changing, because as the benefits of navigation increased the basis would be largely increased?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes. It is one of the things that would lead to difficulty and uncertainty.

Mr. CLINE. And the object of the assessment will be to arrange a fair basis?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes; a fair basis at the beginning. If that were stricken out and each department allowed to run its own affairs, the Interior Department to run its own lands, and the Department of Agriculture to run its own lands, and the War Department and the Navy Department to run their own reservations, and the Treasury Department to run its reservations, I think that would be the fair and businesslike way to work it out, and I would be very glad to prepare an amendment for that purpose.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. RAINEY. Is this the only provision in the bill that provides for a possible revenue to the Government through the operation of the dams?

Mr. ADAMSON. We thought, Mr. Chairman, that we were securing great benefits to the Government and the people if we could secure the building of these locks and dams without cost to the Government. We have not incorporated in this bill the idea that the gentleman espouses—of levying a tax upon these dams in that way.

Mr. RAINEY. I understand the position of the committee; but is there any other provision in the bill from which you could expect any revenue?

Mr. ADAMSON. No, sir. We did not think it could be done in that way. But we did have the bill introduced to blaze the way for that.

Mr. RAINEY. With reference to this particular clause, what rivers in the country at the present time have any headwater improvements?

Mr. ADAMSON. I stated—I do not know whether the gentleman heard me or not——

Mr. RAINEY. I think not——

Mr. ADAMSON. I stated that I never was an enthusiastic advocate of putting that headwater business in this bill. I will ask the gentleman to address those questions to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS].

Mr. RAINEY. I will ask the gentleman from Minnesota what rivers in the country are now provided with headwater improvements that may possibly yield revenue for these purposes?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The largest river I had in mind was the Mississippi. At the head of the Mississippi there are six of the largest storage reservoirs in the world. I think they would benefit the water power and yield revenue.

Mr. RAINEY. Whether they would assist water-power development and yield revenue is dependent upon the construction of the engineers?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Oh, yes. Under the White Mountain and Appalachian plan I think it was the theory of those who promoted that project that the Connecticut River and probably the Androscoggin and the Merrimac Rivers in New England, and in the South I think the North Carolina and South Carolina rivers, would yield water power.

Mr. RAINEY. Have they storage reservoirs?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. No. They have headwater improvements in the way of forestation and reforested areas. I should move to strike out "storage reservoirs" or else specifically include the other, to make it comprehensive and take in all of these headwater improvements.

Mr. RAINEY. In drafting this particular clause, then, the idea was to get revenue from storage reservoirs and reforested headwaters?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes; from everything in reach.

Mr. RAINEY. That would depend upon the construction of the engineers as to the effect reservoirs and reforestation have upon water-power development?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. RAINEY. Would the gentleman allow me to read a statement made by the Chief of Engineers as to headwater improvements and storage reservoirs, under date of May 14, 1914?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. RAINEY. I read:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 14, 1914.

Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY,
United States House of Representatives.

SIR: In reply to your letter of May 8, 1914, requesting information regarding reservoirs and forests at the headwaters of navigable streams, and especially with reference to the Mississippi River, I have the honor to inclose herewith a report on the subject by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, containing the information desired by you.

Very respectfully,

LINDLEY M. GARRISON,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, May 14, 1914.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR: 1. Referring to letter of the 8th instant from Hon. H. T. RAINEY, M. C., to you asking for certain information in regard to reservoirs and forests at the headwaters of navigable streams, and particularly with reference to the Mississippi River, I have the honor to report that no charges have ever been imposed by this department on the operators of power developments on navigable streams on account of any advantage which may accrue to them through the maintenance of reservoirs or forests.

2. There are extensive reservoirs at the headwaters of the Mississippi River, which were built for the purpose of benefiting navigation. Whether the operation of these reservoirs in the interest of navigation will produce any beneficial effect on the power development at Keokuk is a question which has not been investigated, but it is known that the effect of the operation of these reservoirs is not beneficial to power developments at Minneapolis.

3. The season of lowest water on the upper Mississippi—that is, the time when water is most needed for the power developments—is during the winter, the season at which navigation is closed. During this season the outlets of the reservoirs are closed to the minimum, for the purpose of storing water in the reservoirs in order that it may be released during the low stages of the navigation season. The result is that the natural low-water flow during the winter is still further reduced, thereby reducing the amount of power which can be developed from the water wheels. These reservoirs are the only ones in the United States which have been built in the interest of navigation.

4. The effect of forests on the flow of navigable streams has been very thoroughly investigated by the Engineer Department in connection with the improvement of navigable streams, and these investigations fail to show that forests have any beneficial effect upon the stream flow, particularly during low water. I presume that before a change should be made to the operators of a power dam on a navigable stream for additional water due to forests established at its headwaters, it would be necessary to prove that the forests had contributed a definite additional flow to the low-water volume. The effect of forests on the flow of any stream can only be told by a series of observations extending over a sufficient period of time to eliminate changes due to varying amounts of rainfall. Such a series of observations should be not less than 100 years in length, and preferably longer than this, for each condition—that is, in forested and denuded condition—in order to arrive at any results which would be of positive value.

Very respectfully,

DAN C. KINGMAN,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

Now, inasmuch as the engineers hold that in order to get any revenue on account of reforested headwaters of rivers it is necessary to experiment a hundred years with stream flows when the hills at the headwaters are in a denuded condition, and then to reforest the headwaters, which would take another hundred years, and then experiment for another hundred years with the reforested headwaters, in order to determine whether any benefit would accrue from this kind of an improvement to those dams for which a tax could be levied; and inasmuch as the engineers hold that the storage dams on the Mississippi are always closed at the time of the year when they could be of any benefit to the dams for water-power purposes—and that would probably apply to headwaters anywhere—and that they have not produced the slightest effect on the water-power dams up at Minneapolis, very near where these storage reservoirs are located, I should like to have the gentleman explain how it is possible that at any time within the next 300 years any revenue can be derived from this particular clause, which he admits he is responsible for and has so carefully drawn? What is the use of having it in there? What is the use of trying to convince the country that there is anything in this bill that may at any time in the future yield the slightest revenue to the Government?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I thought I told this committee only a few moments ago—I do not know whether the gentleman heard me—that I thought the plan to acquire headwater forest areas in the White Mountains and the Appalachians was a failure. I said so frankly. I voted against it. I do not know how the gentleman from Illinois voted. I voted against it because I thought then it would amount to nothing. But in order to acquire those areas constitutionally some officials of the Government—I think they are officials of the Interior Department—are obliged to certify that those areas are beneficial to navigation. Under those circumstances where officials of the United States Government do certify to those facts, and upon those certificates millions and millions of dollars are paid by the United States, I thought it was only fair and just that a provision should be put in this bill to compel those who might receive some benefit out of it to pay all we could get out of it. I told the House frankly that I did not expect much out of these reforested areas, and I told the House before the gentleman said so. As I say, I had no faith in the whole proposition, but I thought it would be only fair and just and patriotic to put a provision in the bill to carry out the attitude of those who do think that there may be some improvement and compel those who might be benefited out of it to pay for that benefit.

Now, as to the reservoirs on the Mississippi River above Minneapolis, there are 300 miles of navigation. Those reservoirs do benefit navigation to the extent of 18 inches for 100 days in the driest period of the summer. Those facts are well settled, so that there is no dispute about them.

The statistics as to the benefit to the water power I did not know and did not care about. I knew that if navigation was benefited to that extent, as is conceded, it might be that this water might be of some benefit to the numerous power projects above St. Paul, probably a dozen or fifteen of them. It made no difference how much. I did not know and did not inquire. It was my business to draft a provision of the bill to compel them to pay if we could get anything out of them, and for that reason I was responsible for putting in this provision, not having much faith in it, I am frank to say, but trying to get all we could out of it. If the gentleman wants to move to strike it out, let him make that motion.

Mr. RAINEY. I am going to move to amend it by substituting a provision that will mean something and that will yield some revenue when the time comes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to incorporate in my speech such a long colloquy about something for which I am not responsible. I was just eight years ahead of the gentleman from Illinois in his objection to this thing. But we did not erect these reservoirs. They were put there by somebody else, not by our responsibility. But we did do our duty eight years ago instead of now. His row is entirely behind time. We did our duty eight years ago by providing in the amendment to the general dam act that if there were any such things as a result of what we were providing for, the grantees erecting those creations should, if they got any benefit from them, pay for it. That is all there is to that. We did not build the reservoirs.

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. I have not finished answering the gentleman's other question.

Mr. RAINEY. The gentleman is answering something I did not ask.

Mr. ADAMSON. I thought the gentleman was objecting to this provision.

Mr. RAINEY. I am not opposed to storage reservoirs. I believe they do aid navigation.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then, I will say that I do understand the gentleman, and I will answer him.

Mr. RAINEY. They do aid navigation, but neither storage reservoirs nor reforested headwater areas will help water-power projects, and the engineers say so.

Mr. ADAMSON. If they do not help water power, the War Department would not charge him anything, but if they derive any benefit from it they shall pay for it. Is the gentleman opposed to that? Now, I will say to the gentleman that I do understand him, and I will answer him. He wants to prevent forever the erection of any dam, by providing a tax by the Federal Government on the new creation. I prefer the theory of the constitutional method, that if the Government needs a tax, to levy uniform excise taxes on all water power, developed and undeveloped. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] has blazed the way, if the Federal Government needs to rob the States of the few remaining sources of taxation by taxing the water power. I prefer to leave that source of taxation to the States, but if the Government is to tax it, let us do it constitutionally. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will incorporate in my remarks the bill which the gentleman from Minnesota introduced:

A bill (H. R. 17327) to provide revenue for the Government by levying a uniform excise tax on all persons, companies, corporations, or other associations operating power plants for the generation of hydroelectric energy or other form of water power for commercial use.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the 1st day of July, 1914, there shall be assessed, levied, collected, and paid annually by each and every person, company, corporation, or other association, not including State or any municipal subdivision thereof, operating a power plant for the generation of hydroelectric energy or other form of water power for commercial use upon any of the waters within the United States, a uniform tax of one-fifth of $1 per annum for each horse-power per year of the power generated at said plant and available for transmission or other commercial use. The quantity of power thus taxable at each power site shall be determined annually by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and the tax here'n provided for shall be assessed by said commissioner and collected for the fiscal year ending the 30th day of June next preceding the time for levying, collecting, and paying said tax, and said tax shall be assessed, collected, and paid on or before the 1st day of October next succeeding said fiscal year.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of every person, and of the president or other chief officer of any corporation, company, or association taxable hereunder, to keep full, regular, and accurate account of the gross quantity of water power developed and the quantity available for transmission or other commercial use, and it shall be the duty of any such person and any such president or other chief officer to file, on or before the 1st day of August next succeeding each fiscal year, with the collector of internal revenue in the district in which such person, corporation, company, or association shall be located or be engaged in the business of developing hydroelectric power or other form of water power for commercial use a statement, verified by oath or affirmation, in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe, showing in terms of horsepower the gross quantity of power developed and the quantity, in like terms, available for transmission or other commercial use by said person, company, corporation, or association at its power site during the whole fiscal year last preceding the date of filing said statement; and any person, corporation, company, or association making default in the payment of the tax so assessed, or in the performance of any other duty imposed by this act, shall forfeit as a penalty for each such default the sum of $10,000, and in addition, for a default in the payment of the tax, 5 per cent of the amount of taxes due for each month of such default until the same is paid, payment of said penalty to be enforced as provided in other cases of neglect and refusal to make return of taxes under the internal-revenue laws.

Now, that is the only legal way to do it. We have been familiar with the position of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] on the question, and gave consideration to his bill on this subject and what he has said on the subject repeatedly in this House and elsewhere. We prefer the constitutional course.

Now, this colloquy has led so afield from what the gentleman from Oklahoma and I were talking about that I fear the honorable amende I was trying to make will be as far out of date as the charge of the gentleman from Illinois as to the benefit that reservoirs are at the head of the stream. I would not do him any injustice. He and I have had some little flirtations colloquies in private, but it is our hope that we can manage these things. I do not want to interfere with the public lands. He is not only more competent than I am to handle the public lands, but he is as competent as anybody else I have known. I would not remove him from the position for anything in the world. He says he does not want to interfere with navigation, but as I understand my genial friend, who wants to inject into the law some innovation or novation—and as to what the novation is and what it will apply to and fix it for all time and eternity, which I do not think can be practically done—he is hopeful and I am hopeful that we can get together.

Although he and I are diametrically opposed perhaps we can agree, and if we do I think all other gentlemen ought to agree with us. As to what he said about the Secretary of War and section 17 I have tried my best to remove the fears of several of my beloved friends who have been afraid that we would tear up creation by section 17. Section 17 has no reference to water-power dam, or reclamation or irrigation projects, or any public land or private land, or any land on the face of the earth except dams put in navigable streams prior to this act.

Mr. KENT. Section 17 repeals the Ten Commandments.

Mr. ADAMSON. Well, most of them have gone out of use anyway. There are two things we are doing in this bill—we are providing that all new locations shall conform to the conditions fixed by the Secretary of War, and we are providing that they shall be regulated as to charges and practices like other structures. Does any gentleman here wish the Keokuk Dam, or any of the old dams created before the general dam act was enacted, to go free of regulation? There have been lots of complaints about some of them before us. We are studying their regulation now. Why can not we make applicable not only the terms under which they shall put in a lock but regulate the charges and practices? And that is all we are trying to do. Will any man say it is not right and fair? Here is the way I have written it in my second effort, and if it is satisfactory to the gentlemen I will offer it, and if it is not, perhaps I can respond to some more of their suggestions, and do still better:

SEC. 17. That all of the provisions contained in sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 11, and 15 of this act fixing conditions of the consent of Congress and regulating practices and charges between the grantees and their customers, for the construction, maintenance, and operation of dams in the navigable waters of the United States, shall apply alike to all existing enterprises in operation or previously authorized in the navigable waters of the United States as well as to new projects in the navigable waters of the United States to which the consent of Congress may hereafter be granted. All conflicting provisions contained in any previous act of Congress granting consent for the construction, maintenance, and operation of any dam in the navigable waters of the United States are hereby repealed, and all such previous authorizations are so amended and modified hereby as to conform as to the conditions and provisions in said sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 11, and 15 of this act.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. KENT. I was going to ask the gentleman if anywhere in the bill there is a definition of what constitutes navigable waters.

Mr. ADAMSON. Not in this bill.

Mr. KENT. Are navigable waters waters that will float a toothpick or a log, or waters that have a navigable outlet?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, the courts have been sitting for thousands of years and legislatures have been working for thousands of years and governments have been administering laws for thousands of years, and the only approach to a definition of navigability under present conditions is this: First, are you actually navigating the stream? Second, has the Government undertaken to improve the navigability of such stream? And that is all there is to it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Is the gentleman aware that many courts have held that a stream that will float a log is a navigable stream?

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think that we want to go to that extent.

Mr. LENROOT. But it enters into that question.

Mr. BRYAN. And does the gentleman take the position that where a boat can not navigate a stream, where the Government has not undertaken the improvement of the navigability of that stream, in such case it is not to be construed legally as a navigable stream?

Mr. ADAMSON. If it is not actually being navigated now and the Government is not undertaking to improve it, it is not now a navigable stream, but the second condition is a continuing one. Congress at any time may undertake the improvement of any stream in the country, and probably will undertake the improvement of some additional to what are now being improved. I do not know. I am leaving that with the discretion of the only authority who has ever been named by the Government to determine such matters, and whenever a proposition is presented to the Secretary of War to approve the plans and specifications for a dam in a navigable stream the Secretary of War will then and there decide whether that is within his jurisdiction or not, whether it is really actually navigable or whether it is intended to be made navigable, and if neither condition exists or is in prospect he will say to the grantee, "I have nothing to do with it."

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman knows that headwaters of streams like the Missouri often contain not enough water for an alligator to roll over in, and yet that stream is a navigable stream under the interpretations of the War Department and the law of the country.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is theory and not practice. I would not give five seconds' consideration to it.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. As a matter of fact, has not the executive department in its construction of what constitutes a navigable stream considered navigation in fact as to whether a stream was navigable? And in the cases that I have examined, for example, the Kansas-Colorado case, which is the principal one on that subject, the United States—the executive department of the United States—states to the court that the upper reaches of the Arkansas River were not navigable, and of course they were not navigable, as a matter of fact. They could float a log down them; but they were not navigable, as a matter of fact. So that has not the construction of the executive department been that wherever navigation was practically existent or practical to be promoted in the interest of the people that only the navigable parts of the stream might require this?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I think the contingencies suggested by the gentlemen who have asked these questions are too remote and far-fetched to be seriously considered in the consideration and passage of this bill. Of course you can sit down and spin theories and bring up fears and imaginary cases that might lead you to refuse to do anything, and I personally have no sympathy for this floating-log business; I have no sympathy with following these little streams up to the head branch except to find good, pure water to drink; that is all I want. I can not interfere with the rulings of the court which are made on general grounds through generations. It would make such distinctions as might unsettle private rights all over the country and possibly have to be rewritten in all the statutes on the statute books.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. I desire to finish answering the gentleman entirely, if the gentleman will permit. The idea I got from the reference is that there may be a stream which it would be never profitable to navigate, and if it should be made navigable by the Government money the cost would be prohibitive and the returns not profitable. For the same reason private capital does not undertake it, the navigation itself would not be sufficient to amount to anything; and if it were, it would be so expensive and the water power returns so meager that private capital would not undertake it; but there may be streams, like the Chattahoochee or the Coosa, where there are 300 or 400 feet of falls within 30 or 35 miles, and if you could get by those falls there would be many hundred miles of navigation above.

It is not probable that the Government will do anything in the near future, and private capital might do it. On the other hand, there might be such a poor prospect of navigation above it would never be undertaken for years, yet if the opportunity offered to meet the heavy expense of removing the barrier, the Government might decide that the river be made navigable all the way. Now I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FERRIS. What I started to say was more of a statement than a question, but I will simply ask the gentleman a question or two——

Mr. ADAMSON. I am trying to finish this speech and let gentlemen go home.

Mr. FERRIS. Does or does not the gentleman think that the question of what is "navigability" is an extremely mooted question?

Mr. ADAMSON. I think the only practical way to deal with the administration of a thing is to deal with the exact law—with what the gentleman understands to be that law.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman, in his good humor and genius, does not answer my question. Is it not a fact that the courts are all in a maelstrom of disagreement as to what is the law in respect to the navigability of a stream?

Mr. ADAMSON. I have told the gentleman all I know about it.

Mr. FERRIS. Does not the gentleman think that is so?

Mr. ADAMSON. Of course the courts are occupied by men, and many men of many minds, and many birds of many kinds.

Mr. FERRIS. Very well; but there is a question of doubt——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is a question of fact under existing law.

Mr. ADAMSON. It is a question of the fact of existing navigability. A stream that the Government will hereafter make navigable, or navigability in the last analysis, depends on, first, whether it is in fact navigable at the present time or the Government is trying to make it so.

Mr. FERRIS. I do assert that the courts are very much in doubt and opinions are very much in conflict in regard to what is in fact "navigability," and does not the gentleman agree with me that some well-defined line of demarcation ought to be drawn now in dealing with legislation so that in the future we will have a definition of "navigability"?

Mr. ADAMSON. I believe it would be cheaper to say we will give up the public lands than to retard navigation all over the country. The people might be benefited in the future by the navigation of these rivers and the generation of hydroelectric power above what all the public lands might be worth.

Mr. FERRIS. Can the gentleman conceive of any reason why Congress should not, in dealing with matters so important as this bill deals with, absolutely define what navigability is?

Mr. ADAMSON. I know a good reason. It is because the gentleman does not know how, and I do not know, and nobody else knows how, and it would not be possible to agree, in an arbitrary manner, on anything that would do any good at all.

Mr. FERRIS. One can be devised to follow a line of general practice, so that the Secretary of War can deal with his jurisdiction and the Secretary of the Interior can deal with his jurisdiction, and they are now dealing practically with that very thing. Why is it the gentleman refuses to agree, and what harm could there be in agreeing on what "navigability" is, and avoid all this conflict?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. My question goes to that very point. A few years ago quite a number of bills were introduced into the House, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to provide that certain rivers or certain parts of rivers should be nonnavigable thereafter. The gentleman will remember it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Of course.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The gentleman will remember that our committee reported some of those bills, and we were very severely criticized by the House and by the press of the country for attempting to declare rivers or parts of rivers nonnavigable, as an attempt to take away from the people of this country an opportunity to benefit from transportation facilities. And since that we have never reported a bill on that subject.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will pardon me, no one that I know of advocates such a thing as that.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Your proposition would practically amount to that. And no one would be otherwise than ridiculous to try to do it. We have submitted an amendment to you that does define it, and you gentlemen have not submitted anything or tried to arrive at it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if there is not a further reason, which is that to declare a negation upon a proposition of that sort is a kind of legal absurdity—is it not?

Mr. FERRIS. Nobody asked that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. To declare a stream nonnavigable where, as a matter of fact, it may be navigable?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The gentleman misunderstood that.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Tennessee is not trying to hold that we are contending that?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, no. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] stated that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had declined to report any bills in recent years, because a former bill was criticized so vigorously by some people who feared there was an effort to take from the whole people rights that might belong to them by reason of declaring a stream nonnavigable. I merely suggested that, independent of the proposition and independent of the public criticism, there might be that it is rather of a legal absurdity to declare a negative upon a thing which, after all, is a matter of fact rather than a matter of law.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I think, Mr. Chairman, that is what I stated, that navigation is a matter of fact. The courts have so held, and the departments of the Government so construe it, and for that reason, because it is an absurdity, the committee has agreed not to take it into consideration further than that. And, therefore, when it has been desired to improve some stretch of the stream, it has been found that the United States would be obliged to pay very heavy damages in the way of removing bridges, and improvements of that kind.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have had in recent years, if the gentleman will permit me, some requests from a large number of persons interested in the question of drainage, interested in the change of channels, of certain streams that flow through my district, to secure the passage through Congress of bills that would declare those streams nonnavigable. I have carried the matter before the War Department for settlement rather than to undertake to settle here in Congress as to whether the matter of navigation was a question of fact.

Mr. KENT. I am very humbly trying to get at facts. Here is the Sacramento River in my State. The lower part of that river is navigable, and the lower part of the San Joaquin River is navigable. Are the tops of those rivers navigable or nonnavigable under the purview of this act? If the San Joaquin River is navigable from the bottom to the top, it knocks out every safeguard we put in the Hetch Hetchy bill. We want to know definitely what you mean by this bill, and to explain in this bill what is navigable or nonnavigable.

Mr. ADAMSON. When a proposition is made either to Congress or the Secretary of War for a bill in accordance with this law, and plans and specifications are presented to the Secretary of War under it, he will know whether that river is navigable or not.

He will also know whether it is going to be made navigable or not. He will have his board of engineers to ascertain what comprehensive plan ought to be formed for the improvement of the river, and the whole matter will be decided practically then and there. I am not as familiar with these rivers and projects as is the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT], but it has never entered our minds or hearts to conceive of the possibility of interfering with Hetch Hetchy, or anything like it.

Mr. KENT. That is only one of many examples.

Mr. ADAMSON. Is it put in there by authorization of Congress for navigation purposes?

Mr. KENT. The San Joaquin River is navigable.

Mr. ADAMSON. The language of the bill is, "structures put in by authorization of Congress for navigation purposes in the navigable rivers of the United States." The gentleman says it is not navigable above Hetch Hetchy, and never was.

Mr. KENT. But your bill provides that every act of Congress creating a dam is subject thereafter to this particular bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. In navigable waters.

Mr. KENT. No; in any river.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman insists upon defining the meaning of "navigability," he can look back two or three thousand years and find judges who could not come nearer to it than our own Supreme Court has done on that subject, except the old idea abandoned by us that it was limited to tidewater, and if it is their purpose or desire to put in any of the suggested definitions, while they do not mean to say that, and do not say that probably, we might as well say that any stream that touches the public domain or that is on the public domain is not navigable. I do not think there is much navigable water on the public domain. I do not know of anyone who wants to build these water-power dams on the public domain, but I do not want to get into any conflict with them that will interfere with the operation of this bill.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I referred to the Kansas-Colorado case just a moment ago with reference to the Arkansas River. Does not the gentleman recall that the Arkansas River has been improved by act of Congress to a certain extent, and that many hundreds of thousands of dollars have been expended upon it, but in the upper reaches of the river Congress has decided that it is not navigable, and the Supreme Court has so decided, and, as was stated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], it has decided what is navigable and what is not?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. On the Mississippi River between Minneapolis and Little Falls we have half a dozen dams, probably, authorized by Congress. The dam just above Minneapolis, known as the Coon Creek Dam, 6 or 8 miles from St. Anthonys Falls, has no lock in it. The citizens wanted to know from the War Department why there was no lock in it, and the War Department said, "Because the river above the falls is not navigable." The War Department nevertheless insists upon controlling the river, which extends over 200 miles, or possibly 300 miles, beyond and above the falls. The Government, through the War Department, insists upon controlling that river because they claim it is navigable. The people of the community want a lock in the Coon Creek Dam. The War Department says the reason why a lock is not put in is because the river is not navigable.

I suggest that, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of calling attention to the importance of defining, if possible, what a navigable river is, so that the citizens and authorities of the State may know what portions of a stream they can take charge of and develop.

Mr. ADAMSON. When you pass this law you will have all the authority you want, in my judgment, if it is true you can not navigate above that dam and this bill should pass.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. That has been the situation for years above St. Croix.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then you hit the very thing that the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT] objects to. We say that, inasmuch as new dams must have locks put in them at the expense of the promoters and be regulated under the authority of the Federal Government, if the State fails to do it—which is substantially the provision of the other bill—we say that the old ones ought to be regulated, too; and if necessary to navigation they ought to be required to put a lock in; and if this bill passes they would have to do it.

Mr. KENT. The gentleman quoted "the gentleman from California." What we want to know is in the name of sense what a navigable stream is. We will take up these other matters later.

Mr. ADAMSON. I wish I was smart enough to know anything that the gentleman from California does not know, and I promise that if I ever learn anything that he does not know I will tell him.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman stated to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH] that if this bill was passed a lock would be required in the Coon Creek Dam that he speaks of, to be put in at the expense of the dam company.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Can the gentleman point to any provision of the bill that will require that?

Mr. ADAMSON. Section 17.

Mr. LENROOT. It gives them all the privileges, with none of the burdens.

Mr. ADAMSON. It gives them none of the privileges, and it puts on them all the burdens. It plainly states the provisions of the consent and the regulations, and I have rewritten the amendment so as to put it in emphatically in every solitary line, so there can be no question about it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have occupied the floor a long time. I know you will all concede it is not my fault, but I should very much like to finish my speech and conclude my remarks.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. There is very high authority to the effect that a heavy dew constitutes navigability. That is the authority of Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think this bill goes to that extreme, and I do not think Abraham Lincoln was writing a law when he got off that joke.

Mr. KENT. Section 17 repeals Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. ADAMSON. Oh, no.

Mr. FERRIS. I had not intended to get into any colloquy about this matter this afternoon, but this debate has not been altogether a fair one. It has been a hop, skip, and jump, and a leap-frog effort to get by a lot of questions that we might just as well meet face to face, because they are coming. The first one is this: As a matter of fact, the Interior Department and the Agricultural Department have been faithfully and patriotically developing water power in the West for a series of years.

Now, the War Department and the Board of Engineers have not been doing anything in the West. Here comes a bill that takes away—lock, stock, and barrel—everything they have done and repeals everything they have done or will do. Now, the gentleman is not going to force this bill onto us, and it may as well be said now that he had better agree to some amendments, or we will try to make this bill fit the West, where it will probably be more in operation than anywhere else.

I do not want to interfere with navigation; I know nothing about navigation; and I do not want to have anything to do with it; but this bill, poorly arranged, as I believe, and lacking in almost every detail of what a water-power bill should be, will not come in here and pass this House with the jumble of language that it contains without this House knowing what it means and what it is and where it comes from. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think anything has been said by me to provoke this outburst on the part of the patriotic and eloquent gentleman.

Mr. FERRIS. What has provoked it is the lack of the gentleman saying something that he ought to say. He is here in charge of the bill, and he ought to say something instead of dodging and hopping around as he has.

Mr. ADAMSON. On the contrary, I have emphatically said everything that I think ought to be said. I have said this is a navigation bill and not a water-power bill. I have said the navigation in my country is more valuable than all the public lands, if we can promote it. I have said the hydro-electric power, with which we could tempt promoters, is worth more to the consumers and the development of the country than all the public lands in the country. I have congratulated the gentleman on his courage and ability in bringing forward a water-power bill and other conservation bills relating to the public domain. I do not care anything about meddling with the public domain. I have kept off the public domain, and do not want to have anything to do with it. I want the gentleman to exercise his ability, and to use all his profound knowledge and skill in drawing and passing good bills relating to that subject, and I do not intend to try to defeat in this House any bills that he brings in here.

I think, talking about amendments, that the only amendment that any bill really needs is for him to add in one or the other of the good places in his bill a statement that the provisions of his bill shall not interfere with the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War or the Chief of Engineers in superintending navigation on the navigable streams of the United States.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman from Georgia thinks that this House or this Congress will turn over carte blanche, without a cent of revenue, to the Board of Engineers of the War Department, or to anyone else, the water power of this country, he is greatly mistaken.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman from Oklahoma imagines that this House and the people will ever consent to divesting the War Department of the jurisdiction over navigable streams and navigation in the navigable streams of this country, or that the people are going to forego the benefits of navigation in the navigable streams of this country, he is entitled to another think coming.

Mr. LENROOT. But the gentleman is aware that his bill divests Congress itself from the jurisdiction of this subject and places it under the War Department.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman may know more about writing a bill, having been at it so long, but I do not agree with the suggestion he makes. We do not seek or intend to divest anybody of anything. We desired to promote navigation. The proposition here about public lands was not put in on my suggestion.

Mr. FERRIS. Now, Mr. Chairman, my affection runs over for the gentleman all the time, and I do not want to lose my equilibrium for a minute; but the gentleman throughout his entire speech, and even in the letter to me, protested in good faith his willingness to strike the jurisdiction of the Interior Department and the Agricultural Department out of the bill, and now he refuses to do anything about it. We do not want kind words; we want something done.

Mr. ADAMSON. Section 17 does not repeal anything but conflicting provisions in the navigation propositions to which we have given consent. I submit to the gentleman that the amendment makes that clear and positive. In the second place, I have no disposition to interfere with the administration by the Interior Department of the public domain, nor serving the interests of the Government by making all the returns they can. I have no objection on earth to the proposition that after the Secretary of War has passed the plan for the erection of a dam in order to promote navigation that the grantee should then go to the Secretary of the Interior and secure from him consent under the terms on which he grants permits. It is just like getting title from a private individual, or anyone who holds the title.

Mr. FERRIS. The theory of the two bills are as far apart as daylight and darkness. Your theory is that you figure on a 5 per cent rate on lands which probably cost $1.25 an acre, which amounts to nothing. Our theory is that we ought to impose conditions for the benefit of the public interested and the people who are to use the water power in the future. There is a public interest to conserve as well as the power interests. It is our duty to look after both.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have explained the 5 per cent charge and stated that I was willing for it to go out.

Mr. FERRIS. That improves it that much, but there remains much more to be done.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think there is any difference between us, substantially, except the proposition that the gentleman has been talking about just now as to the definition of navigation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to close to-night, and I will close to-night, although I have not alluded to several sections of the bill. However, I believe we can approximately get together on everything except the navigation proposition, and if the gentleman can propose a definition of navigation in the history of legislation and administration, and the interest of the people and the Government, which we can agree upon, I would be glad to have it. He confesses that our bill is so loosely drawn he can shed light on the subject, and if he can I would be glad to be the beneficiary and recipient of that light.

Now, if the gentleman will bear with me, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] is to leave town, and he wants five minutes. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. UNDERWOOD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had still further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, numbered 1 and 30.

AMENDMENT OF GENERAL DAM ACT.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, there is more than one conflict in this measure. First, there is a conflict between the two great committees—the Public Lands Committee and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. There is a conflict between the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War. There will eventually be a conflict between the advocates of State rights and Federal control. The people are not interested in the conflict between the committees and the Cabinet officers, but everyone is interested in the preservation of the Nation's rights in the inauguration of this national water-power policy.

There is a water-power possibility in the United States of 25,000,000 horsepower annually. We have developed in water power 6,000,000 only out of the 25,000,000. Three-fourths of the developed water power of those 6,000,000 has passed into private hands. Ninety per cent of the developed water power in public-land States is owned now by 28 private corporations, and 6 of these control together over 56 per cent of the power developed. This is the measure of concentration in the control of water power in this country.

I think that the striking feature of the situation surrounding the consideration of this bill is the anxiety here to nominate specifically in the bond the rights of the Nation, and the unwillingness to submit to the grace of departmental regulations or of judicial construction. There is warrant for this attitude. Within my time in Congress I have seen the House pass a bill authorizing the construction of a dam across the Mississippi River at Keokuk. The argument was made on the floor of the House at the time of the passage of that authorization that a benefit was to come to the people of the valley in that vicinity. Every day since the construction of that dam that valley from Keokuk on the north to St. Louis on the south has been in revolt against the exorbitant charges of the Keokuk Dam Co. My mail and the mail of every other Member of this House has been filled at times with protests against the exactions of that company which enjoyed its great grant free of charge, and as the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] now suggests in perpetuity.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Was the dam the gentleman speaks of one of those dams built by authorization of Congress?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; it was.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, if this bill goes through with section 17 in it, it would make that dam subject to the terms of this bill and give the right of recapture at the end of 50 years, and also make the dam subject to regulation and control by the State or by the National Government. It would remedy the evils the gentleman complains of.

Mr. MURDOCK. It would do it if this bill were correctly drawn, but I do not read in this bill any provision for a limited 50 years' grant. I read into the terms of this bill a grant in perpetuity, and I want to say to the gentleman——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, I really would like to hear the gentleman, because my understanding of this bill is that at the end of 50 years the Government has got the absolute right to recapture. If the gentleman's conclusions are the other way, I think he is mistaken, but I would like to see how he construes it upon the question of perpetuity.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman listen to the reading of section 9 of the Adamson bill?

SEC. 9. That the rights herein granted shall continue for a period of 50 years from and after the date of the completion of the structure described in the original approval, and after the expiration of said 50 years such rights shall continue until compensation has been made to said grantee for the fair value of its property, as hereinafter provided.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the gentleman does not read it all. Go on and finish.

Mr. MURDOCK. I can read in section 12.

Mr. ADAMSON. But section 10 is the next section.

Mr. MURDOCK. Section 10 carries out the same idea I am now about to explain. These great works are not constructed at one time. They will be built piecemeal, and the indefiniteness of your date of beginning will result in indefiniteness at the end of your 50-year period, and not only that, but you ask the Government in that section to take over these properties at the end of 50 years at a fair value.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; the gentleman has not read it all.

Mr. MURDOCK. And it ought to read, and it will read before it goes through Congress, "at actual cost," as pertaining to the permanent appurtenances of the work.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman ought to be fair in presenting that proposition, because I think that is the most important provision of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I intend to yield the gentleman more time, but right here I want to state for the benefit of my friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] both, that as I view it, substantially there is no difference between this provision and the provision in the other bill. I intend to meet one criticism by offering an amendment to specify the completion of the lock and dam as the completion of the project, because that is to be built at once. The development can be put in by piecemeal, and the bill provides that it be so put in, but the completion is to be the lock and dam. It was omitted from the language here, but we intended to offer it.

Mr. MURDOCK. In my opinion, if the gentleman will put into the bill a definite provision of that kind, then it will be possible for the Government to take over the work at the end of the 50 years.

Mr. ADAMSON. That we intend to do.

Mr. MURDOCK. But I want to call attention to this: Even with that provision added, what right has Congress to provide that at the end of the 50-year period the Government shall pay for water-power site, for water rights, for rights of way, for franchises, at a fair value? Why should it not pay the actual cost of those things?

Mr. ADAMSON. All that is a matter of speculation, and the water companies want us to pay the cost. The testimony of the leading water-power men before our committee said that all they wanted was the cost.

Mr. MURDOCK. But the Government ought not to pay the unearned increment on any of the permanent appurtenances.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Georgia has not answered the gentleman from Kansas, but there is nothing in this bill as it is written that requires the Government at the end of the 50 years to pay any unearned increment; if so, I would not support it.

Mr. MURDOCK. I think the gentleman, upon an examination of the bill, will find in the interpretation of these words "the fair value"——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let us be fair about it. What is the unearned increment? It is not the dam; it is not the dam site: the real unearned increment is the value of the franchise and the good will. Now, the gentleman has not read into the RECORD all of this provision. The land is the only proposition about which there can be any controversy as to whether a fair value or actual cost should be taken.

Mr. MURDOCK. If the gentleman will direct his atttention to line 16, section 10——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will allow me to finish.

Mr. MURDOCK. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to call his attention to page 10, line 8, where in connection with this very matter it says:

In the determination of the value of said property upon the termination of said grant, as above provided, no value shall be claimed by or allowed for the consent hereby granted—

That is the franchise—

nor for good will, profit in pending contracts, or other conditions of current or prospective business.

Now, in other words, at the end of 50 years there is nothing that the people from whom it is recaptured can demand pay for except the money that they have expended in building the dam, the land, erecting the power station, and the equipment of the line. Well, now——

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. Of course, it comes out of my time; but I want to get this straight and I want to get the gentleman straight, and I believe I will. What about rights of way for the lines of transmission?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think that is a fair proposition, and I will say this: I think the only question of difference between these two bills on the question of recapture is the land involved, because I take it that, so far as the dam is concerned, the power house or dam, it is that the fair value is fixed by this bill and to be determined by the Government, because those things depreciate in value instead of increasing in value, the machinery, the house, and the dam, and of course it is possible that the land that is involved might increase in value. Now, there is the real and only issue between these two bills on the question of recapture. The Ferris bill provides it shall be paid for at the cost; this bill provides that the land shall be paid for at a fair value. Now, then, I am not very much concerned which the House adopts, because I think it is a very small equation in a very large project, but if you take the actual cost the difficulty is that in the organization of these plants you will make a temptation to the men who organize to put up the price and juggle with the price.

If you leave it open for somebody in the future to determine and take actual cost you may have a juggling of price when you begin the enterprise and get the result at the end of 50 years. Whereas if you take the fair valuation, what have you got involved? You have a dam site which could not increase in value. The land across which the dam runs belongs to the Government and will go back without cost. Now, you have the power site on the bank, which can not be a very large tract of land and will not increase in value. It probably would not except a city were to grow around it.

Now, the other proposition is the cost of water. Probably in developing a new territory the right of way may be worth very much less to-day than at 50 years from now. Why, these men go out and develop an enterprise. They have bought the land. They have blazed the way for an enterprise. Is it fair to them that they should have that small amount of increase as to what should be the fair value of that land when it is recaptured or the actual cost?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not see that there is much difference in the bill. But I think there is the only difference involved.

Mr. MURDOCK. Yield to me one minute.

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield one minute to the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman from Alabama has come into my speech with one of his own, and has conceded in the course of his remarks that the very section of the bill which I have criticized can be improved. I am in favor of the amendment of this bill, and I shall not vote for it until it is amended, and amended so no doubts as to our rights shall remain. He speaks of the rights of the men who construct these great works. The people have a right in this situation, and the people ought to have a right—the right to require that every section written in this bill shall be free of ambiguity and indefiniteness. Every definition in this bill ought to be clear.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. And we ought to provide that at the end of 50 years this work can be taken over by the Government at actual cost. We ought to provide when it is taken over by the Government that the Government should not pay for unearned increment.

Now, I repeat there ought to be no faltering here on the score of demanding specification of the Nation's rights to the last letter of definition. There should be no vestige of doubt left as to the right of recapture of water-power works by the Government after the expiration of the 50-year period. There should be nothing left in the measure that can be construed into a grant in perpetuity. There should be voted into the bill those amendments which will permit the Government, at the end of the 50-year period, to take over the permanent improvements of the work—the water-power site, the water rights, the right of way, the value of the franchise—at actual cost, not at the "fair value," as provided in the pending bill. There should be, as well, the inclusion of such terms as will remove entirely from the field of uncertainty the remuneration of the Government for the valuable grants it makes under the provisions of the law.

Section 9 of the proposed measure reads, as I have pointed out before:

That the rights herein granted shall continue for a period of 50 years from and after the date of the completion of the structure described in the original approval, and after the expiration of said 50 years such rights shall continue until compensation has been made to said grantee for the fair value of its property, as hereinafter provided.

Not only should the provision as to "fair value" be changed, but the words which fix the date of the beginning of the 50-year period at the "completion" of the structure should be so changed that the corporation can not, by continuous, piecemeal construction, make the expiration of the period indefinite.

On the score of protection of the Government against the loss of the unearned increment, the testimony of Secretary of the Interior Lane, recently before the Committee on the Public Lands of the House, is illuminating. Secretary Lane said:

I had this proposition stated to me by one of the engineers as a basis of capitalization of an existing plant. They raised all their money on mortgages. All of the money that went to the plant went in on mortgages. They sold their bonds at 80 cents on the dollar. That left a margin of 20 cents. Then they issued capital stock. They had an amortization fund by which they returned at the end of the period the full face value of the bonds—80 per cent plus 20 per cent. They got the interest on the bonds and in addition they got a dividend upon the stock, which represented nothing whatever except the interests of the promoters.

Now, then, at the end of a 50-year period, we will say, they would have had a complete return of their investment—they would have had interest upon all the money that went in, interest upon the 20 per cent in addition to what went in, and a full dividend upon the stock, which represented water. Now, then, they want, at the end of that time, to sell the proposition back to the United States upon the basis of whatever the property is worth, whatever the water rights may have arisen to, whatever the rights of way may have become—to get back that in addition. Now, I think that is too much.

The overissue of securities would not alone appear in the selling price of the property, but there would be almost inevitably a tremendous increase in actual values of the holding. Secretary Lane, touching this point, gave an analogous experience while he was a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, saying:

In the Western Advance Rate case, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, in defending its increase in rates, relied upon the legal proposition that it had a right to a return upon the full value of its property.

We asked them what they had put into the property, and they said $275,000,000. We asked them how they came to make out an estimate of $525,000,000 upon which they wished a return. They said that they had taken out of the property $50,000,000 in profits, which they had returned to the property. "Well," we said, "that makes, then, a total of $325,000,000 in cash that you have put in. There is a difference of $200,000,000 left. Why do you want a return upon that $200,000,000?" "Because that is the value of the land that we hold," they said. "That is the unearned increment of our right of way and terminal property since this road was established, and we want the rate increased, because, in point of law, under the Smythe case, we are entitled to a return upon that present value."

Now, that is a condition that we ought not to run up against when we are going to buy back these water-power properties.

It seems to me that all the reasonable demand that can be made by men of finance and every requirement of law will be fully met if we say to these people, "You can have a reasonable return upon every dollar that you put into this property; and so far as we are concerned we will allow the control of that to go into the hands of those States that have devised machinery for its control; but certainly if these properties are to revert to the United States or to the States or to the municipalities it can not be that we shall be asked to pay back at the end of 50 years a value that has been given to these properties by the increase in the population of the States themselves."

I have referred to the actual experience of the public in the recent past with great water-power companies. When the Keokuk Dam across the Mississippi River was authorized, it was reasonable to believe that the people would, in return for this grant, receive benefits commensurate. But the complaint, as I have pointed out, is now almost continuous from that section. Let me quote., in instance of this, an editorial from a recent issue of the Burlington (Iowa) Evening Post:

Dr. G. Walter Barr, who has charge of the publicity department of the Keokuk Dam enterprise, read an address on the 20th of February before the annual meeting of the Iowa Engineering Society at Council Bluffs on the "Commercial value of the hydroelectric dam at Keokuk." We notice that in one of his paragraphs Dr. Barr refers to the "cheap power" as being an advantage to the towns located within the sphere of influence of the power zone. Now, the facts do not bear out the designation of the power furnished by the Keokuk Dam as "cheap power." It is not cheap power; it is high-priced power. The "cheap power" is only in evidence in the inspired press. Power from the Keokuk Dam is being sold to communities at a higher rate than was charged before for power made with coal. For this reason none of the industrial centers in the power zone are securing any new factories. Not a single new factory of consequence has moved into Hannibal, or Quincy, or Keokuk, or Fort Madison, or Burlington since the power was turned on. This unsatisfactory condition is the result of a carefully thought-out plan on the part of the power company. Where it has failed to buy up the power plants in cities and towns along its transmission lines it has forced the local companies to take power from it at an exorbitant price under the threat of installing a rival plant and cutting the price to a level which would bankrupt the local company. All of the newspaper and banquet-table talk about the "cheap power" is the sheerest nonsense. The power is not being sold cheap. Uniformly everywhere that it is sold it is being sold at an increased price over the schedules in force when power was made with coal.

Testimony of a similar nature is found in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. An article in that newspaper reads:

An investigation of the operation of the great dam and electric power plant at Keokuk, Iowa, made by a Post-Dispatch reporter, shows that contrary to public expectation the harnessing of the Mississippi has not reduced the price of electricity in St. Louis, and unless the State steps in to regulate rates will not be effective to decrease prices within the next 99 years.

The reason for this is that water power, the modern and cheap means of creating electric current, has not in this instance been set to compete with the old method where enormous consumption of coal makes the process highly expensive, but on the contrary, the Union Electric Light & Power Co. and the United Railways have contracted to take 60,000 horsepower of Keokuk current daily or one-fifth the dam's capacity for the next century at prices to be determined by the market price of coal.

Electrical engineers agree that current can be produced in a coal-burning steam plant of any size exceeding 3,000-horsepower capacity for less than 4 mills a kilowatt-hour, where coal costs $1.42 a ton, the present St. Louis price. This estimate includes all operating and "overhead" charges for current at the switchboard.

The Union Electric and the United Railways are paying approximately 6½ mills per kilowatt-hour for Keokuk current. What it costs Union Electric to generate current in its steam plant can not be stated exactly because of the flexibility of the item of "overhead" charges—which includes interest on watered stock—but Alten S. Miller, who resigned as president of the company in 1911, estimated that the cost was 4 mills at that time, and A. C. Einstein, the present president, admits that the Keokuk current is costing more than the homemade power.

But the dam company, the Mississippi River Power Co., does not receive all of the approximately 6 mills per kilowatt-hour paid by Union Electric and United Railways, which amounts, in round numbers, to $1,000,000 a year, for the dam company does not sell direct to them. It carries its current 130 miles from the dam to the town of Florissant, in St. Louis County, which is about 10 miles from the point of delivery to the United Railways and Union Electric, at Page Avenue and the city limits.

At Florissant the dam company delivers the current to the Mississippi River Power Distributing Co., receiving approximately 4½ mills per kilowatt-hour in return. The distributing company then carries the current the remaining distance to the United Railways and Union Electric.

This "distributing" company, which is capitalized at only $5,000, receives approximately 2 mills per kilowatt-hour for its services, which, it is estimated, gives the company a net profit of about $250,000 annually.

The history of the Keokuk Dam enterprise dates back 50 years, and until Hugh L. Cooper, constructor of a dam at Niagara Falls, took an interest in the project in 1905, the successive attempts to raise capital for construction were failures.

Cooper was engaged in his work at Niagara when a group of Iowans, prominent politically, obtained a charter from Congress in February, 1905, to construct a dam at Keokuk, Iowa. In September, 1905, Cooper took an option on the charter and began to search for capital. In order to obtain the millions necessary to carry out the huge undertaking he decided that contracts must be executed in advance, to show investors that there was a market for the current at profitable rates, giving an assured income sufficient at least to pay interest charges on bonds for 40 years or more.

Cooper, naturally, was attracted to St. Louis as a possible market for current in large quantities, and in 1908 formed an engineering partnership with W. V. N. Powelson, who resigned the presidency of the Union Electric Light & Power Co., at St. Louis, to join him.

Whether through fear that a Keokuk Dam company might invade the St. Louis district in competition with local utilities, or whether through a desire to create a new corporation that would yield tremendous profits on a comparatively slight investment, it is a fact that the agents of the North American Co. at St. Louis readily assented to bind up under long contracts the Union Electric and other utilities they controlled here when approached by Cooper.

In October, 1908, Cooper negotiated contracts with Breckenridge Jones, Festus J. Wade, James Campbell, and other North American agents at St. Louis, to guarantee the purchase of at least $1,080,000 of water-power current a year for 99 years by the United Railways, Union Electric and Laclede Gas Light companies, all owned at the time by the North American Co.

The dam company, styled the Mississippi River Power Co., was to supply 60,000 horsepower at a rate of $18 a horsepower, for at least 14.1 hours in each 24, making the rate approximately 4½ mills a kilowatt-hour.

Jones, Campbell, Wade, and other directors of the North American and local utility companies entered into this contract through the agency of the new corporation styled the Mississippi River Power Distributing Co., having then and now a capital stock of only $5,000.

The distributing company in turn made contracts for 99 years with the United Railways, Union Electric, and Laclede Gas Light companies, owned and directed by the same group of individuals, to take the 60,000 horsepower under the same load factor at a rate of $25 a horsepower, or approximately 6⅓ mills a kilowatt-hour.

In July, 1909, the North American interests sold the Laclede Gas Light Co. to the Busch-Walker syndicate of St. Louis. The new owners engaged five consulting engineers to analyze the water-power contract under which they had agreed to take about 4,000 horsepower. The reports were all in accord, and declared the contract to be a burden because of the excessive price and for other reasons. The Laclede served notice that it would not observe the contract made between parties that were identical at the time, and the North American directors promptly shifted the contract to the Union Electric, which already had shouldered a 30,000 horsepower contract under these terms.

The net result of creating the intermediary company to "distribute" the hydroelectric current in the St. Louis district has been to guarantee the new subsidiary of the North American a minimum revenue of $1,500,000 a year from the Union Electric & United Railways, of which the Keokuk Dam Co. will receive $1,080,000 a year.

The gross earnings of the distributing company will be at least $420,000 a year, out of which it must pay only interest on $1,500,000 of bonds and the cost of operating a cable from Florissant to Page Avenue Heights, St. Louis County, where it transforms the Keokuk power from 110,000 to 13,200 volts and changes the United Railways current from an alternating to direct current.

The Keokuk Dam Co. built and operates transmission cables from the dam to Florissant, St. Louis County, a distance of 137 miles, and is compensated by the rate of $18 per horsepower.

The distributing company built cables between Florissant and Page Avenue Heights at the city limits, a distance of less than 10 miles. It built transformer stations for the Union and United Railways' current at the city limits, and shoulders the expense of operating the transformers and receives a rate of $7 per horsepower for this service and investment, or 38 per cent in addition to what the dam company gets for its current. Experts say that $75,000 should cover the annual "overhead charges" of the distributing company and $100,000 should cover the cost of operation and depreciation of property. If the total cost to the distributing company is $175,000 a year, its owners are assured annual profits of at least $245,000 a year, or $409 for dividends and surplus on each of the 5,000 shares of capital stock held by the North American Co.

The service of the distributing company in reducing the voltage of current from 110,000 to 13,200 is of doubtful value to either the Union or the public, because the current is classed still as "unrefined" at 13,200 volts, and must be stepped down to 110 and 220 volts before it can be used commercially.

The Keokuk Dam Co., claiming to have an investment of $26,000,000, will earn almost enough from its St. Louis contract alone to pay its fixed charges and operating expenses, although it agrees only to furnish 60,000 of its 300,000 horsepower capacity to St. Louis.

The dam company issued $15,000,000 of 5 per cent bonds before the dam was completed and offered $3,000,000 more last April. The interest charge on the entire $18,000,000 will be $900,000 a year.

The dam company has issued $6,000,000 of preferred stock to bear 6 per cent dividends, which will be cumulative after 1915, or a charge of $360,000 a year.

In its prospectus issued to investors the company has estimated its operating expense to supply 120,000 horsepower at $400,000. The total of these three charges—$1,660,000—is only $580,000 a year more than it is guaranteed from its St. Louis customers. Engineers say the company can generate current at far less than 4 mills a kilowatt hour when operating at 60 or 75 per cent of its capacity, but the "soft-coal" clause in its contract will enable it to increase the charges for current while decreasing the cost of generation.

There has been no evidence offered by the dam company press agents to substantiate the statement that it represents an investment of $26,000,000. In addition to the securities mentioned, the company has issued $16,000,000 of common stock, much, if not all, of which was given as a bonus to promoters and purchasers of bonds and preferred stock.

The first $3,364,500 of bonds were sold in the United States, Canada, and England on the following basis: Each bond of $1,000 with a bonus of $200, par value, common stock, for $875, payable in four semiannual installments.

If the subsequent bond sales were negotiated on as great or a greater discount, the dam company netted less than $15,750,000 on its $18,000,000 of bonds, from which was deducted the brokers' commission. The fact that these bonds have been quoted at around 82 since the project was started indicates to brokers that the company offers received something less than $15,000,000 from its bond issue, its most valuable security to date. Brokers say it is doubtful if the company could have realized anything like $11,000,000 in disposing of its $6,000,000 of preferred shares and that portion of its common stock which it may have transferred for cash.

The dam was built and is controlled by the Stone & Webster corporation, of Boston, which controls about 50 public utility and water-power companies in various parts of the United States. The North American Co. purchased $500,000 of bonds and received a bonus of $100,000, par value, of common stock in the dam company. Most of the money put into the project was invested by capitalists in Boston, Canada, and England.

There are now before this House, or, rather, in committee pigeonholes, bills seeking to bring relief to the people of the vicinity of Keokuk from the exactions of the powerful corporation. One of the bills gives the Secretary of War power to fix rates. The people are crying in vain for relief. How much better would it have been for the Congress to have protected them in the first place and before this valuable grant was made without money and without price.

How mandatory it is that the Congress shall now in the matter of water-power sites set down in unmistakable terms the rights of the Nation in the contract. How indefensible it is to inaugurate this great policy with uncertain definitions and dubious terms.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. UNDERWOOD having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16053) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, for printing under the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 915).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

JOSEPH T. JOHNSON,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
JAMES W. GOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, is it the purpose of the gentleman to call up this conference report to-night?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I did not intend to do so.

Mr. COX. It will take its regular course and be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. GARNER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. If the report was considered this afternoon and the previous question was ordered on it, when would the vote come? Would it come to-morrow immediately after the approval of the Journal?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. GARNER. Not if you order the previous question, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not like to decide a question that is not really involved.

Mr. COX. In order to order the previous question, you will have to have a quorum here.

Mr. GARNER. The point I want to get at is that this is the last day of the fiscal year, and the idea is to get this bill completed at the earliest possible moment. I am advised by some of my colleagues here who say that even though that is the case they would not permit it, and so I will not press the parliamentary question.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Thursday be substituted for Calendar Wednesday, in order that we may get through with the appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule the Chair is not entitled to present the proposition to the House until Wednesday.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Thursday has already been made Calendar Wednesday, anyhow.

Mr. GARNER. No; we did not get that agreement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the request would have to come to-morrow. But the Chair is ready to hear the gentleman. He does not think that Calendar Wednesday can be set aside until Wednesday.

HOUR OF MEETING THURSDAY.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourn Wednesday, July 1, that it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Thursday, July 2.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I always wish to accommodate the gentleman from South Carolina, and I will have no objection, if it will be an accommodation to him, to have the House meet on Thursday at 11.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 13679. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915;

H. R. 11245. An act extending to the port of Providence, R. I., the privileges of section 1 of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement; and

H. J. Res. 286. Joint resolution extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia under certain contingencies.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills and joint resolution:

H. R. 14034. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes;

H. R. 11245. An act extending to the port of Providence, R. I., the privileges of section 1 of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement;

H. R. 15762. An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915;
